GARRETT COUNTY.

As Seen By D. W. Snyder, of The Alleganian, Cumberland.

Leaving Cumberland I drove up through Frostburg and then on up and up the National pike crossing the Little Savage Mountain till I could see a new world on the other side. When one goes up Big Savage Mountain he does not have to go down the other side. The land levels off over there into a fine stretch of farming and grazing country much of which is settled by Germans, who are splendid farmers, and who have things about as up-to-date as any other section in the country. They have fine big bank barns, large houses, many of them having splendid water piped into all their buildings. Many, too, have concrete walks about the premises, automobiles and all other conveniences almost equal to Friends Cove. The climate is cooler and the season shorter than on the east side of the mountain.

Garrett county had its drouth too this summer but there is much more grass in the fields than in any other section visited this year. Grass comes up spontaneously in most all of Garrett county. Vacant lands do not lie bare as in some sections.

Garrett county has been the greatest county in the state and it is yet. The country is full of sawmills with great stacks of sawlogs and sawed lumber around them.

Leaving the National pike about three miles above the Johnson farm I turned southward toward Avilton. I stopped for dinner at David Popes. Leaving there I went on and on till I heard of Noah Garlitz and I concluded that he would be a splendid old fellow to spend Saturday night and Sunday with and I was not mistaken. Mr. Garlitz's navigation has been much impeded by a stroke of paralysis on one side but he can "talk some." We talked til 11 o'clock Saturday night and till 12 Sunday night and had merely gotten started.

Mr. Garnitz can tell some good hunting stories. He, when a boy was out deerhunting with his father. Noah scared out a bunch of deer and was too much scared to shoot till after they were all gone. Then he "came to" and knew that his father would scold him for not shooting at the deer, so in order to make his father believe he had shot and missed he shot into a big bunch of laurel bushes where he had not seen any deer and to his great astonishment and delight as well, he shot and killed a big deer but he didn't tell his father how it happened till he got too big to be whipped. Near Avilton is a beautiful Catholic church which is served by Father Aloysius, of Cumberland. There are many Catholics in that section who are splendid citizens, hospitable and clever.

I drove on Sunday to the Reformed church in New Germany section where there was preaching services. They had a fine large audience and a good choir. They decided to put a new roof on the church this fall. A Methodist church also stands near, both on top of a high hill. Both have large congregations.

A traditional story is told in this section that years ago a man named Layman while out hunting got lost in the woods. While lost he found some rich silver ore. With his hatchet he knocked off a piece of rock and sent it to a mint. They then minted ore for the half. His chunk yielded sixteen half dollars. He then tried to find the place again but never succeeded nor has ever anybody else, though hundreds have hunted and hunted.

Near Grantsville I found the best country photo artist I ever saw, judging from the work displayed. The artist is Leo J. Beachy, a cripple, but known in newspaper circles as "Max Leo," being a contributor to the Christian Monitor, of Scottdale.

While in the Broadwater Settlement near New Germany I encountered some hills that are hills, and every two hills has a big hollow between that goes to the bottom. One can scarcely tell which are more numerous the high hills, or the deep hollows, for every hill has a hollow on each side and every hollow has a hill on each side. While driving along one hollow, space for a road was so scarce that the public road had to run under the storm shed of a barn; however the barn was large as are all the others in that section and the Broadwaters are prospering and too numerous to mention.

I looked over toward the village of Merrill but the location was too high down for me and I turned westward landing over the big hill to Mrs Swauger's in time for a good supper and a pleasant night's lodging.

Stopping at a certain house in New Germany district I encountered a fully grown girl of about 30 years and solicited her subscription to the Alleganian. "I have no time to read," said she. "See that stump puller up there? That's my job after the dishes are washed. One can't read and pull stumps, too. I haven't time to talk to men, either. Guess I'll have no be an old maid No time for courting while the fields are full of stumps."

Jennings is quite a live town. Lumbering is the order of the day. I never saw such piles of lumber. While in a store at Jennings a farmer came in with his butter. After weighing it I overheard the clerk say there were 416 pounds.

Garrett county has hundreds of beautiful and profitable sugar groves. Home made sugar from those groves brought 10 cents per pound last spring and does yet. Sugar groves at this season are most beautiful; the leaves are turning red and are falling making a beautiful sugar leaf carpet on the green grass. The sight must be seen to be fully appreciated. Sawmill men are destroying many grand old sugar trees. This ought not to be allowed The trees are more profitable for sugar than for lumber and would last more than an owners' lifetime, and each year adding to his income, but when a tree is cut down it is gone forever. Few trees are as beautiful as sugar trees but some men have no eye for beauty in nature. They are too selfish to see it. Some plant, while others destroy in a day what took fifty or a hundred years to grow, and then what have they to show?

Good water is plentiful in that section and would seem a profitable business to build dams, start fisheries and duckeries. There are plenty of rocks and concrete walls could be built at not much cost, and the supply of fish and ducks would be profitable, besides the ice. I hope the suggestion will take hold of several. Years ago nature supplied wild fish and wild ducks but now people must raise them or do without. The markets need both. Let the women have a chance and they'll show the men how to make money with fish and ducks.

"MUTT & JEFF" OPENS SEASON.

[From New Bern Sun.]

The theatrical season in New Bern was opened last night with the musical comedy sensation, "Mutt and Jeff." Every seat in the house was filled and that the show pleased all was evidenced by the frequent and prolonged applause.

As one would assume from the title of the production the plot of the play centers around Mutt and Jeff, the leading characters. The part of Mutt was in the hands of Richard Freeman, while A. J. Criqu impersonated Jeff. Both handled their parts well and kept their audience convulsed with mirth during the entire time they were on the stage.

There are thirty people with the company and the chorus was one of the prettiest and most handsomely costumed ever seen in this city. Interspersed with the plot of the play were a number of catchy songs and these were well rendered. Miss Gladys Moffatt, who took the part of the daughter of the Nicaraugan president, has an exceptionally sweet voice and her songs were greatly enjoyed.

Taken as a whole, "Mutt and Jeff" was one of the best musical comedies ever seen in New Bern, and Manager Taylor is to be congratulated upon securing such an excellent attraction for the opening of the season. Advertisement

Change In Place of Meeting.

The meeting announced to be held at Gorman next Monday night has been recalled. A meeting will be held at Sunnyside on Monday night at 7:30 o'clock, under the direction of the Republican County Committee.

Valuable Property at Auction.

The Dixie Realty Co., who sold the Bradley farm, will offer at public auction the Broderick property, on Saturday, November 1st. This is one of the choicest additions to the city of Oakland and is delightfully located, being situated on the Oakland—Mountain Lake Park road. It is on high ground. It is only five blocks from the court house and has a delightful outlook. The Company uses a half page of the Republican to tell you about this sale. This is your opportunity to buy a choice building lot.

PETER MASON.

Last Friday evening Mr. Peter Mason departed this life at his home, near Kings' Run, aged 69 years. The funeral services were conducted by Revs. Harris and DeWitt, of the United Brethren church, and the interment took place in the Paradise church graveyard, on Sunday morning. Mr. Mason was a class leader in the United Brethren church, and was one of its most consistent members. His death was regretted by the entire neighborhood.

Historic Day.

Last Sunday marked the one hundred and thirty-ninth anniversary of the burning of the brig Peggy Stewart in Annapolis harbor, whereby the people of Maryland declared, in a way that inflamed the entire 13 Colonies, their hatred of British oppression and took a stand that they steadfastly maintained throughout the War of the Revolution.

Besides being the anniversary of the burning of the Peggy Stewart, it was also commemorative of the surrender of Lord Cornwallis at Yorktown on October 18, 1781, by which the Revolutionary War was ended and America declared itself a free conntry.

Grantsville Lutheran Church.

The building is of brick. It is a Gothic in style. The auditorum is 50x33 feet in size with a Sunbay school room 30x50 feet connected with it, by a movable partition. The church proper is nicely furnished with oak pews; the floor is beautifully carpeted, the pulpit furniture is of quartered oak, including alter and lectern; the windows are memorials and are exceptionally beautiful; the building is lighted by electricity and heated from a hot air furnace in the cellar. The high metal ceiling and all the internal arrangements make the auditorium quite churchly.

Corn and Potatoes Wanted.

The Maryland Horticultural Association will hold a fair early in November, in the city of Baltimore. The officers of the association have written Messrs. D. E. Offutt & Sons requesting them to get some Garrett county corn and potatoes to put on exhibition. If any of our farmers would like to compete for the prize offered by this association, they are requested to leave their exhibit at the store of the above firm, on or before Oct. 31st, and it will be forwarded to the proper persons. There should be 10 ears of corn and a peck of potatoes.

In selecting potatoes do not pick out the largest ones, but a medium, uniform size. A smooth potato, free from knots.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 38 — OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 6. 1913. — NUMBER 36.

Garrett County Gives Reduced Republican Majorities

Senator Speicher is Returned by a Majority of Seventy, While Other Legislative Candidates Receive Slightly Larger Pluralities.

The result of the election in Garrett county, as will be observed by an examination of the official returns published herewith, was a great surprise not only to the Republicans but to the Democrats as well.

Senator Speicher's majority over Mr. Thomas L. Johnson, his Democratic opponent, reaches but seventy by the official returns. The Senator's friends were positive that he would have a majority of four hundred to five hundred, but the work put in during the last hours of the campaign by the Baltimore Whisky Ring in certain sections of the county, notably in No. 2, cut the Senator's vote so much that his election was in doubt until the returns of the Oakland districts placed him safe.

The legislative ticket was successful in every respect, although by greatly reduced majorities, while the balance of the ticket pulled through by larger majorities.

The fight for Commissioner was centered upon Mr. Dixon. His friends in the southern section of the county stood by him and gave him an excellent vote.

Mr. Bert C. Scott, Republican, was elected by a handsome majority, exceeding that of any other candidate.

Mr. C. A. Beachy for County Treasurer, came through with a good safe majority, while Mr. Ross for clerk to the County Commissioners, and Mr. Friend, for Register of Wills, had no opposition.

The following table tells the whole story:

STATE FONDS TO THE COONTY PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Educational Board To Have More Jurisdiction.

The forthcoming report of the Board of State Aid and Charities will contain, among other recommendations, a suggestion that the State Board of Education supervise all appropriations for educational purposes.

If this recommendation is incorporated into a law the educational board will pass upon the applicants for appropriations for colleges, academies and other educational institutions supported wholly or in part by the State, a duty now preformed by the Board of State Aid and Charitites. This board has adopted the recommendations of its committee on education, which declared that while the theory on which Maryland elementary schools are founded was highly regarded by most educational authorities, yet many faults in the system have been found, due to both the lack of funds and centralized authority.

The lack of the latter, the report says, is demonstrated by the fact that the standard of teachers differ in each county, and at times differ in the same county, and futher, that the text books are not uniform in the several counties. To better conditions the following recommendations are made.

That the several funds now given by the State for educational purpose be abolished, and in lieu therefore that the State shall pay each county a lixed sum for each teacher and distribute the remainder of the funds pro rata among the county schools on the basis of aggregate attendance.

That the present state levy for schools shall be increased from 16½ cents per $100 to not less than 20 cents and to carry out the foregoing recommendation:

Provision in the tax levy for aid for approved high schools on the basis of the present law.

Granting of additional authority to the State Board of Education to permit that body to grant certificates to teachers on uniform examinations.

Premiting the State Board of Education to prescribe to the minutest detail the course of studies and the text books for elementary schools.

Active carrying out of the compulsory State-wide attendance law.

Extension of the present high school system and the establishment of free bus service to carry pupils from one small town to another where a high class is located.

Introduction of agricultural course in rural high schools.

Abolishment of all appropriations to private secondary schools and the placing of the latter on the high school basis wherever such schools are needed.

Abolishment of all appropriations to various colleges throughout the State and the entering into by the state of contracted relations with such institution of high learning as are approved of by the State Board of education and the making of such institutions part of the public school system of the State.

The Board of State Aid and Charities will not draft any of the recommendations into laws, but will place them before the General assembly as changes which are badly needed.

SWANTON

The members of the Methodist church of this village, are trying to have a Thanksgiving service on Thursday Nov. 27th.

Rev. Frank McCamic preached his first sermon in the Methodist church, at this place Sunday night Oct. 26, and made a very favorable impression and many are the words of commendation we hear on every hand. He will preach here next Sunday at eleven o'clock, a. m. All are welcome.

The farmers in this neighborhood are selling quite a good many potatoes. Julius Littman shipped three car loads of potatoes, one to the Alpha Supply Co. at Rowlesburg, and one to J. T. Laughlin, Luke, Md., and the other to Geo. Warnick, Bloomington.

Mr. Charles Sweet is shipping his chickens everywhere. By judicious advertising he has worked up a large trade. He has had letters of enquiry from Australia, the British possessions. He is talking about organizing a limited stock company, so as to enlarge his business.

Our former citizen, C. M. Miller, of Keyser, W. Va., called on his friends in this place recently.

Miller W. H. Oss is making fine buckwheat flour, which finds a ready sale. He was a Keyser and Piedmont visitor last week.

Jerry Mankis had a Hallowe'en party last Friday night and those in attendance greatly enjoyed themselves.

Miss Mable Myers, the village school teacher, spent Sunday in Frostburg, visiting relatives.

HON. HARVEY J. SPEICHER,

Successful Republican Candidate for State Senate.

Senator Harvey J. Speicher is returned to the Upper House of the Legislature by a majority of but seventy votes. A determined fight was made against Senator Speicher and the fact that he won against such odds is a source of congratulation. He goes to the Senate pledged to enact certain legislation looking to the interests of the people who elected him and we feel confident that Senator Speicher's first effort will be to carry into effect these promises.

THE result of the election in Garrett county held last Tuesday was a surprise to the public, as the returns were received. No one tries to explain the mystery. The returns clearly demonstrate that the unexpected does occasinally happen. No candidate had more determined opponents than had Senator Specher. It is estimated that the liquor interests of Baltimore and Allegany county spent not less than $5,000 in their efforts to defeat the Senator in his re-election. His straight forwad declaration in favor of state wide local option, and for Prohibition made them his enemy and they determined to defeat him if possible. The Senator made a square fight and met his foe determined to win out and he did win out, although by a small majority. His defeat would have been a calamity to Garrett county. The Senator all though yesterday received the congratulations of his friends over his victory, in one of the most strenuous contests ever made in this county.

THE DEATH RECORD

MRS. MARY MCMILLAN.

Mrs. Mary McMillan, aged 57 years died at her home, 112 East Vine street Sunday morning at 8 o'clock, from heart trouble, following a short illness. The deceased is survived by a husband, Dr. L. C. DEMOCRATIC PARTY'S VICTORY IN MARYLAND MORE OF WATERLOO AS RETURNS ARE KNOWN Legislature Will Be Overwhelmingly Democratic Parran Beaten By Thousands.

All the Democratic candidates for State offices—Lee, Magruder and Harrington—have been elected by large majorities, Senator Lee leading the others with a plurality of 28,000.

Democrats have a three-fifths vote in the House and probably in the Senate, depending upon the results in Worcester. If they have elected the Worcester Senator they have the majority they need in putting through any program they may desire over the veto of Governor Goldsborough.

Only in a few of the Eastern Shore counties did the Republicans show any strength that was not fully forecasted. This was in Caroline and Talbot. They also carried St Mary's. They lost out in Frederick and Washington and in the Fourth Legislative district in Baltimore city, where two of them did expect to win.

Only Worcester, Senator Smith's county, furnished a great surprise for the Democrats. A dispatch from Snow Hill said that the complete unofficial count showed Austin, fusionist, for Senator, three votes ahead of Harrison. The official count will be necessary for a final decision. The Democrats elected their local ticket by small majorities.

So far the only counties in which William H. Anderson fought and won are Talbot and St. Mary's. Both are extremely close. Otherwise the result is conspicuous in that that those whom he opposed were successful in the counties as well as in Baltimore city. Jones in Montgomery, Archer in Harford, Holmead in Prince George's, and Zeihlman in Allegany, candidates for the Senate, and "Cy" Cummings for the House in Montgomery won out, although they were his targets.

ELECTIONS IN OTHER STATES.

John Purroy Mitchel, Fusion candidate for Mayor of New York City, won an overwhelming victory over McCall, the Tammany candidate, while the Fusionists also elected the Board of Estimates, which controls the city's purse.

Republican State Chairman Barnes, of New York, claims ninety members of the legislature, giving the Republicans a majority of 20 over both Democrats and Progressives.

Former Governor Sulzer was elected to the Assembly from the Sixth New York City District by a large majority.

James F. Fielder, President Wilson's candidate for governor of New Jersey, is elected by a plurality of 15,000 over Edward C. Stokes, Republican. The vote for Edward Colby, the Progressive candidate, is about 40,000 against 145,410 received last year by Roosevelt.

There was a remarkable falling off in the Bull Moose vote in every election in which the Progressives figured, excepting in Massachusetts, where Charles S. Bird, Progressive, led Congressman Gardner, Republican.

David I. Walsh, Democrat, is elected governor of Massachusetts by about 50,000 plurality.

In Pennsylvania the Republicans are again triumphant, having scored signal victories over the Fusionist in Philadelphia and other places. The Republicans control the legislature.

One of the surprises was the Republican sweep in Cincinnati, Judge Frederick Spiegle, the Republican candidate for Mayor, and the entire Republican city ticket being elected by more than 3,000 plurality.

The Democrats as usual swept Virginia. The opposition of the Socialists and Social Labor party being very slight.

Election Notes.

In a statement issued this morning, William H. Anderson, superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, said that the results of the election Tuesday were satisfactory to the league and that the returns indicate a local option majority in both houses.

His statement follows:

"The fragmentary returns indicate a satisfactory outcome of the legislative fight. The league never gives out any names or detailed figurers, it is impossible to speak positively in the absence of complete returns, but the returns thus far indicate a comfortable local option majority in both houses in spite of the city of Baltimore.

In Allegany county John W. Young, for Clerk of the Circuit Court was defeated by Lloyd L. Shaffer, Republican, by 1230 majority. The Democrats elected one member of the House of Delegates, the county treasurer, one county commissioner, two out of four road directors.

Senator Zihlman was elected by 1555 majority.

Charles F. Murphy will never dictate the nomination of another candidate for office nor manage another campaign for Tammany Hall. This was the positive declaration made by six of the foremost leaders of the organization today. Murphy himself answered all questions by saying "there will be another day." McCall the Tammany candidate for mayor, left the "boss" to do the explaning.

MR. WILLIAM W. SAVAGE,

Successful Republican Candidate for the House.

The above cut is a fair likeness of Assemblyman-elect William W. Savage, of Friendsville, who conducted a clear-cut fight upon temperance lines, and won by a majority that while not large is satisfactory to himself and his many warm friends and supporters.

Mr. Savage as a business man in his home town has been successful and we feel sure that the welfare of his constituents will be given the consideration they deserve when he enters upon his legislative duties.

AT ANNAPOLIS

HAS FARM LABOR PLAN.

Secretary of State Immigration Bureau Urges On Farmers.

Concerted action by the farmers of the State to obtain labor has been suggested by officials of the State Bureau of Immigration. Lately, it is said, the bureau has been in receipt of letters from farmers asking if something could not be done to assist them in getting labor, and the inability of the bureau to respond has caused the suggestion that the farmers themselves take some action.

The following letter was sent by John A. Tschantre, secretary of the bureau, to S. M. Whiteley, Longwoods, Talbot county:

Mr. S. M. Whiteley,
Longwoods, Md.:

My Dear Sir—Acknowledging your favor of October 27, I wish to state we are unable to assist you in securing the desired help. I have studied the labor question somewhat and realize its seriousness. I have come to the conclusion something must be done soon to solve it. In my opinion the simplest way to solve it is: Either the next Legislature create a labor bureau or the farmers organize themselves to this end. The best source from which to draw farm labor is the agricultural element of the Old World; you are aware of this fact as well as I.

If our farmers should organize they must appoint a man of integrity, who will face the obstacles of our contract labor law and the laws of the states in the old world intended to prevent solicitation of emigration, and induce industrious farm laborers to come to Maryland. This is done by railroads here and I cannot see why farmers' organizations should not be able to accomplish the same thing. Farm labor in most of the sections of Europe is very cheap and the only reason that it does not appear on our labor market is the lack of traveling expenses. The members of such a farmers' organization must be willing, therefore, to advance these expenses.

The farm laborers across the "big pond" is accustomed to hire his services for an entire year. The average wage paid him is $75 a year. There would be no difficulty to induce him to come here by offering him $180 a year with the stipulation that he return to his employer $50 paid for his traveling expenses. As I said, the agent who does this work must be an honest man. He must investigate the record of every laborer he brings here.

Although this bureau is under no legal obligation to furnish labor for our farmers, we have in the past supplied many farmers with help; but have found that men picked up here in Baltimore were either unfamiliar with farm work, or went to the country to work there until they found work again in the city.

I will keep your application on file and as soon as I hear of a suitable family, shall communicate with you.

Respectfully yours,
JOHN A. TSCHANTRIE,
Secretary

Dr. John Ridout Acquitted.

Dr. John Ridout, a physician of Annapolis and chairman of the Republican State Central Committee for Anne Arundel county, was acquitted by Judge Brashears in the Circuit Court of charges of negligence brought against him by Dr. C. W. H. Bohrer, of the Bureau of Communicable Diseases of the State Board of Health, at the instance of Dr. Walton H. Hopkins, the county health officer. The charge against Dr. Ridout grew out of the recent outbreak of smallpox at a negro settlement near Annapolis. It was claimed by the State and county health officials that the negroes, all of whom were patients of Dr. Ridout, were afflicted with smallpox, but that the physician failed to make a report to the county health officer.

Gets Six Years For Assault.

Charged with assault with intent to kill, Edward Thompson, colored, was convicted in the Anne Arundel Circuit Court and Judge Brashears sentenced the negro to six years in the penitentiary. Thompson shot Constable James Phipps, of the Eighth district, when the official attempted to quell a disturbance among negroes, of whom Thompson seemed to be the ringleader. The trouble occurred at a negro campmeeting near Friendship. Constable Phipps was shot in the abdomen. It was first thought that the wound would prove fatal, but he recovered at the University Hospital, Baltimore, whence he was removed immediately after the shooting.

INCOME TAX HAS BECOME A RIDDLE

Wall Street and Great Lawyers Unable to Solve It.

THEY ARE SWIMMING IN MUD

Ruling From Washington Creates Confusion—Many Suits To Test Law Expected.

New York.—That part of New York, which is referred to vaguely as "Wall Street," was in a state of confusion Friday. For once in its career Wall Street did not know which way to turn. The new income tax law which became effective Saturday and some of the highest priced lawyers, bankers and corporation officials in the world confessed that they were completely at sea as to its meaning.

A group of men emerged from the darkened, cavernous interior of one of the largest banks in the downtown district. In the group were the president and vice-presidents of the bank. They had just concluded the last of a series of lengthy conferences which have been held every evening after business hours. The subject of all these conferences was the income tax law.

"We're swimming in mud," said one of these officers expressively. "For a day or two I thought I myself was coming to know what was meant by the income tax law and the treasury regulations concerning it, but now I'm convinced that I hardly know anything about them and my fellow-officers know less."

Source Of Trouble.

The chief source of trouble is that portion of the law which provides for the collection "at the source" of the tax on income derived from interest on bonds, mortgages and certain other obligations. Banks and corporations are required to withhold this tax, in making payments of interest due to holders of securities. More than $80,000,000 is due on November interest payments in New York.

The ruling in question has given rise to endless confusion in cases in which bonds are not registered, the names of their owners often are not known to the banks or fiscal agents to whom coupons are presented for payment. The identity of the owners must be established to determine whether the tax is to be deducted. Certain exemptions are allowed under the law. Six classes of exemption have been defined. Every lawyer and bank officer of New York has had life made a burden by clients who wish to know which of the six forms of exemption apply to their particular cases. There are no precedents to apply.

Investors Confused.

For the last two weeks Wall Steeet has been flooded with booklets, diagrams, charts and pamphlets purporting to summarize and clarify the law. Newspapers have printed many columns of interviews with bankers and lawyers. Some banks have sent out printed instructions to all their clients regarding the procedure for claiming exemption. The result of this deluge has been to leave the average investor more confused than ever. Appeals to lawyers avail nought, as the lawyers themselves are in doubt as to the interpretation of the law.

The wires to Washington have been kept busy for the last fortnight with appeals to the Internal Revenue Department for help.

Many Suits To Result.

It is practically a foregone conclusion that payment of a large part of the $80,000,000 interest will be deferred pending a solution of the riddle.

Whatever the outcome, it is predicted that many suits will be instituted against the government to test the law. Some of the leading insurance companies, led by the New York Life, have questioned that feature of the law which imposes a tax on corporate holders of State or municipal bonds, of which they hold large amounts, while exempting the individual.

PAYS LONG OVERDUE FARE.

Conscience-Stricken Woman Sends Ten Cents To Car Company.

Middletown, N. Y.—A remarkable instance of a conscience-stricken woman who failed to pay for a ride on a trolley car six or seven years ago is revealed in a letter just received by D. C. McGonagle, president of the local transit company. The letetr, from a woman in the northern part of the State, whose name is withheld, reads: "Inclosed find ten cents in stamps for car fare. Some time ago I rode twice on the trolley, when the conductor failed to take my fare, perhaps six or seven years ago. It has come back to my mind, and I therefore send it to you now, and please pardon me for not doing so before."

WORKING OUT PLAN OF ACTION

Wilson to Be Ready When Election Results Are Announced.

MAY BE WORDS OR ACTION

Weeks May Elapse Before the Mexican Government Can Make a Definite Announcement.

Washington.—President Wilson let it be known that he is waiting for things to take definite shape in Mexico as a result of the election last Sunday and that the United States government would not act uninformed in detail of what took place at the polls.

Recently the President, in a note to the Mexican Foreign Office, transmitted by Charge O'Shaughnessy, declared that the election of October 26 would not be considered constitutional by the United States. How long the United States will wait for the returns is not known. It is believed that several days, perhaps weeks, will elapse before the Huerta government, handicapped by difficulties of communication will be able officially to record the result, though November 10 was the day set for the counting of the ballots.

The President is at work on a plan by which he hopes to solve the troubles of Mexico. One of the features of it is a formal statement of the aims and purposes of the United States in its stand against the influence of material interests in Latin-American affairs, its devotion to the cause of constitutional government on this hemisphere and its belief that a fair and free election with safeguards and guarantees must be held in order to establish a legal authority in the Southern Republic. This statement of the government's attitude already outlined in the President's speeches at Mobile and Swarthmore, in all probability will be communicated to Mexico and a copy of these views transmitted to foreign governments generally as an expression of policy by the Washington administration.

These things were announced on the highest possible authority in Washington:

1. That whatever the United States may do in Mexico may take the form of "action," this to be communicated to the powers through diplomatic representatives at Mexico City simultaneously with whatever "action" the President may desire to take.

2. There will be absolutely no joint action between the United States and the European powers as to Mexico.

3. Any action which the United States may take or any announcement it may have to make will not be taken or made until the question of the Mexican elections have been definitely settled.

4. President Wilson has some idea for the solution of the troubles, but it has not been formulated.

5. No European power has communicated to the United States government its views of any plans individually or collectively for the settlement of the Mexican affairs.

6. The President has no knowledge of any preparation by chartering steamers or other incidents looking to intervention in Mexico.

MRS. EATON IS ACQUITTED.

Jury Returns "Not Guilty" Verdict After All-Night Session.

Plymouth, Mass.—The record of Mrs. Jennie May Eaton as a wife, mother and daughter, as told by her self during three days of gruelling examination on the witness stand, freed her of the charge of having murdered her husband, Rear-Admiral Joseph Eaton. When the jury returned a verdict of not guilty, after an all-night session that had given rise to a report of disagreement, the news was flashed by telephone to the Eaton home in Assinippi, where the accused woman's crippled daughter Dorothy and her aged mother, Mrs. Virginia Harrison, had been waiting many hours.

JAPAN HELD UP AS BUGABOO.

Would Resent Interference In Mexico, Rome Paper Thinks.

Rome.—Commenting on Mexican affairs, the Tribuna says that if the Administration at Washington proceeds further in its interference other countries, especially Japan, cannot remain indifferent. "If the United States intends actually to insist upon Huerta abandoning his dictatorship," adds the Tribuna, "it must intervene with military forces."

WILLIAM SULZEB CASE APPEALED

Wm. Moore Petitions Federal Court to Review Trial.

MAY REACH SUPREME COURT

Alleged That Government Has Passed From People To Small Group Of Citizens.

New York.—The conviction of William Sulzer by the High Court of Impeachment and his removal from office as Governor of New York was thrown into the Federal Courts for review by William H. Moore, a printer of this city.

In his petition Moore alleges that the control of the government of the State of New York has passed from the people to a small group of citizens and that consequently New York is no longer enjoying a Republican form of government, as guaranteed by the Federal Constitution.

Moore seeks to have the court enjoin Martin H. Glynn from exercising any of the functions of Governor, prays for the restoration of the office to Sulzer, attacks the Assembly for arrogating to itself the power to convene in extraordinary session and pass articles of impeachment and concludes his petition with a prayer for an auditing of all the State books. Members of the court of impeachment, Governor Glynn, Attorney-General Carmody, Secretary of State May and Sulzer himself are named as defendants.

Sulzer, engaged in the height of a campaign for election to the Assembly on the Progressive ticket, expressed surprise at the filing of the suit.

John Leary, counsel for Moore, said he would apply for a preliminary injunction in the case returnable in a week or 10 days. This, he anticipated, would probably be denied by the court without prejudice, which would give him an opportunity for an immediate appeal to the United States Supreme Court. Leary explained that Sulzer had been made a defendant in the case in order to give him an opportunity to join in the prayer of the complainant and also on the ground that the complainant was entitled to relief against Sulzer for abandoning the duties of his office.

PANAMA CANAL LOCKS SAFE.

Could Not Be Reached By Guns From Hostile Warships.

Washington.—Secret tests recently made by the division of the Atlantic battleship fleet, under the command of Rear Admiral Usher, are said to have disclosed the fact that the Panama Canal virtually has nothing to fear from the fire of an enemy's fleet, so far as the Gatun and other important locks are concerned. The tests, started last winter, are declared to have developed the fact that the fleet could not determine the location of the Gatun lock. It is also intimated that the data made public and supposed to give the topography of the canal were purposely inaccurate. In addition, it was discovered that the hills intervening rendered the locks almost immune from damage by bombardment from sea.

OPPOSES BRIDAL GIFT.

Representative Gray Wants Congress To Send Congratulations Only.

Washington.—Congratulations instead of a $2,500 present should be the wedding gift of the House to Miss Jessie Wilson, Representative Gray, of Indiana, declared in the House. In an impassioned speech he said that the plan of members to "chip in" $5 a head for a present to the White House bride "was indiscreet, improper, a shadow of the Dark Ages and prompted by a morbid desire to obtain recognition from the White House." Republican Leader Mann retorted that it would be hopeless to put into Gray's soul "the expression which finds itself in the hearts of every other member of the House."

WOULD MAKE IT MAJORITY.

Overman Wants Two-Thirds Rule To Override a Veto Eliminated.

Washington.—Senator Overman, of North Carolina, introduced a joint resolution for a constitutional amendment to permit a majority, instead of two-thirds of the Senate or House, to override a President's veto, and also to empower the President to veto any distinct items in an appropriation bill without disapproving the remainder of the measure.

FLAGSHIP IS NO PLOTTING PLACE

Gen. Felix Diaz Learns He Is Under Restriction.

ORDERED TO GO BELOW DECK

Admiral Fletcher Says His Flagship Is An Asylum For Diaz, But He Will Take No Chances.

Vera Cruz.—Gen. Felix Diaz, now a refugee on board the American battleship Louisiana, learned that the privilege of asylum on a battleship carries with it certain restrictions not unlike prison regulations. By order of the admiral, General Diaz is not permitted communication with any one from shore, without his permission, and the admiral has given General Diaz to understand that such permission will rarely be given.

The enforcement of the order is rigid. "Will you please go below, sir?" said the officer of the deck, saluting the General when he had begun a conversation with a man who had brought his baggage aboard.

General Diaz appeared to be annoyed for an instant, but without hesitation, complied.

Admiral Fletcher explained that while he was willing to place his flagship at the disposal of General Diaz as an asylum, he did not propose to expose himself to the criticism of making it a place for possible plotting. He asserted his confidence that General Diaz would not attempt to abuse hospitality by meeting friends there, and from a safe vantage point indulge in intriguing or conspiracy, but he was resolved to take no chances.

The disposition of Diaz and his companions has not yet been determined, but it appears probable that they will eventually be set ashore from one of the battleships, probably the Louisiana herself, when she sails from Mexican waters this week.

General Diaz has expressed his preference for Havana, adding, however, that he was willing to be set ashore anywhere except at a British port, since he was convinced that the British authorities would send him back to Mexico. He inquired of Mr. Lind, who visited him, if he thought landing him at Havana would embarrass the United States. It is likely that he will be landed at Key West, from which port he could proceed to Havana if he desired.

With reference to the future, Diaz professes to be through with politics and rebellions, and says he will ask nothing better, so long as his country is in its present state, than to be permitted to live in peace abroad.

INVITATIONS GOING OUT.

President and Mrs. Wilson Send Out Coveted Cards.

Washington.—Invitations for the White House wedding, on November 25, are being sent out. The invitations are engraved simply and read: "The President and Mrs. Wilson request the pleasure of the presence of ——— at the wedding of their daughter, Miss Jessie Woodrow, to Mr. Francis Bowers Sayre on November twenty-fifth, nineteen hundred and thirteen, at half after four o'clock, at the White House." The number of invitations has not been finally decided upon, and detailed plans for the wedding are not yet ready for announcement.

ACCUSED OF WIFE MURDER AT 80

Fractured Woman's Skull With Ironing Board, Say Police.

Philadelphia.—John Eberwine, 80 years old, a veteran of the Civil War, was arrested here on the charge of killing his wife, 65 years old, by striking her over the head with an ironing board. The woman's body was found by neighbors after the old man had asked them to send for his son. A physician discovered that her skull had been fractured. The police say Eberwine has confessed that he struck his wife because she had insisted on giving a stove they passessed to their son.

SNEEZE WILL COST LIFE.

Even Laugh May Kill Woman With Broken Back.

Boston.—A sneeze, a cough or a laugh will cost the life of Mrs. Mary McCormick, a patient at the City Hospital, physicians said. The woman suffered a broken back in a fall from a third-story window, and any movement, however slight, may snap the weakened spinal cord. Thomas Wilson is held in bonds of $5,000 pending her recovery or death. The police charge him with having thrown the woman from the window.

CASTRO IS REPORTED DEAD.

Supposed To Have Either Been Assassinated Or Drowned At Sea.

Port of Spain, Trinidad.—Reports are in circulation here that General Cipriano Castro, former President of Venezuela, and who recently headed an unsuccessful insurrection there, is dead. One report is that he was assassinated, another that he was lost by the foundering of his schooner in the Caribbean Sea.

KILLS HER DIVORCED HUSBAND.

Woman Shoots Man In Front Of His Eighth Wife.

Williamson, W. Va.—Mrs. Sarah Sloan shot and killed her divorced husband at an isolated point on Blackberry creek, Kentucky, near Matewan. After the shooting Mrs. Sloan boarded a train and came here, where she was later arrested. From what can be learned Mrs. Sloan killed her husband in the road in front of the Sloan residence.

COMMERCIAL

Weekly Review of Trade and Market Reports.

Dun's Review says:

"Evidences of trade recession are confined to industrial lines, strictly mercantile conditions remaining favorable. The reactionary tendency in iron and steel has become rather more marked, further price concessions being announced and a slackening of operations noted at some mills.

"Through the process of lowering quotations new demands have been stimulated in certain directions and consumption is well maintained, with hopeful views expressed regarding the outlook.

"Labor troubles still exert an adverse effect in some industries, but cotton goods manufacturers are well engaged and values reflect increased firmness as a result of the high cost of the raw material.

"Failures numbered 296 in the United States, against 289 last year, and 30 in Canada, compared with 24 a year ago."

SYNOPSIS.

Scarlett, an American soldier of fortune in the employ of the French imperial Police at the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian war, is ordered to arrest John Buckhurst, a leader of the Communists and suspected of having stolen the French crown jewels. While searching for Buckhurst, Scarlett is ordered to arrest Countess de Vassart and her group of socialists and escort them to the Belgian border. Scarlett finds Sylvia Elven of the Odeon disguised as a peasant and carries her to La Trappe where the countess and her friends are assembled. All are arrested. The countess saves Scarlett from a fatal fall from the roof of the house. He denounces Buckhurst as the leader of the Reds and the countess conducts him to where Buckhurst is secreted. German Uhlans descend on the place and Buckhurst escapes during the melee. Scarlett is wounded. He recovers consciousness in the countess' house at Morsbronn, where he is cared for by the countess. A fierce battle is fought in the streets between French and Prussian soldiers.

CHAPTER V.—Continued.

An old house across the street which had been on fire, had collapsed into a mere mound of slate, charred beams, and plaster. Through the brown heat which quivered above the ruins I could see out into the country And what I saw was a line of hills, crowned with smoke, a rolling stretch of meadow below, set here and there with shot-torn trees and hop-poles; and over this uneven ground two regiments of French cuirassiers and two squadrons of lancers moving slowly forward as though on parade.

The cuirassiers moved on slowly, the sun a blinding sheet of fire on their armor; now and then a horse tossed his beautiful head, now and then a steel helmet turned, flashing

Grief-stricken, I groaned aloud "Madame, there rides the finest cavalry in the world! to annihilation."

How could I know that they were coming deliberately to sacrifice themselves?—that they rode with death heavy on their souls, knowing well there was no hope, understanding that they were to die to save the fragments of a beaten army?

"They are doomed, like their fathers," I muttered "sons of the cuirassiers of Waterloo Look, madame! Look on the men of France! You say you do not understand the narrow love of country! Look!"

"It is too pitiful, too horrible," she said, hoarsely. "How the horses fall in the meadow!"

"They will fall thicker than that in this street!"

"See!" she cried; "they have begun to gallop! They are coming! Oh, I cannot look!—I—cannot!"

Far away, a thin cry sounded above the cannon din; the doomed cuirassiers were cheering. It was the first charge they had ever made; nobody had ever seen cavalry of their arm on any battle-field of Europe since Waterloo.

Now among the thicket of hop-vines long lines of black aroze; there was a flash, a bolt of smoke, another flash—then the metallic rattle of bullets on steel breast-plates. Entire ranks of cuirassiers went down in the smoke of the Prussian rifles, the sinister clash and crash of falling armor filled the air. And, above the infernal fracas rose the heavy cheering of the doomed riders.

Into the deep, narrow street wheeled the horsemen, choking road and sidewalk with their galloping squadrons, a solid cataract of impetuous horses, a flashing torrent of armored men—and then! Crash! the first squadron dashed headlong against the barricade of wagons and went down.

Into them tore the squadron behind, unable to stop their maddened horses, and into these thundered squadron after squadron, unconscious of the dead wall ahead.

Posted behind the upper and lower windows of the houses, the Prussians shot into them, so close that the flames from the rifles set the jackets of the cuirassiers on fire. Then a terrible butchery of men and horses began.

In front of the barricade a huge fellow reined in his horse and turned white-gloved hand raised, red epaulets tossing.

"Halt! Halt!" he shouted "Stop the lancers!" And a trumpeter, disengaging himself from the frantic chaos, set his long, silver trumpet to his lips and blew the "Halt!"

Then into this awful struggle galloped the two squadrons of the lancers. For a moment the street swam under their fluttering red-and-white lance-pennons, then a volley swept them—another another—and down they went.

The street was still crowded with entrapped cuirassiers, huddled in groups or riding up and down the walls mechanically seeking shelter. A few of these, dismounted, were wearily attempting to drag a heavy cart away from the barricade; the Prussians shot them, one at a time, but others came to help, and a few lancers aided them, and at length they managed to drag a hay-wagon aside, giving a narrow passage to the open country beyond. Instantly the Prussian infantry swarmed out of the houses and into the street, shouting, "Prisoners!" pushing, striking, and dragging the exhausted cuirassiers from their saddles. But contact with the enemy, hand to hand, seemed to revive the fury of the armored riders. The debris of the regiments closed up, long, straight sabers glittered, trembling horses plunged forward, broke into a stiff gallop, and passed through the infantry, through the rent in the barricade, and staggered away across the fields, buried in the smoke of a thousand rifles.

So rode the "Cuirassiers of Morsbronn," the flower of an empire's chivalry, the elect of France. So rode the gentlemen of the Sixth Lancers to shiver their slender spears against stone walls—for the honor of France.

CHAPTER VI.

The Game Begins.

The room in the turret was now swimming in smoke and lime dust; I could scarcely see the gray figure of the Countess through the powder-mist which drifted in through shutters and loop-hole, dimming the fading daylight.

And now wagon-loads of French wounded began to pass, jolting over crushed helmets, rifles, cuirasses and the carcasses of dead horses.

Then the sad cortege of prisoners formed in the smoke, the wounded leaning on their silent comrades, bandaged heads banging, the others erect, defiant, supporting the crippled or standing with arms folded and helmeted heads held high.

And at last they started, between two tiles of mounted Uhlans—Turcos, line infantrymen, gendarmes, lancers, and, towering head and shoulders above the others, the superb cuirassiers.

Under the window soldiers began shooting the crippled horses; the heavy flash and bang of rifles set the countess trembling again.

Until the firing ceased she stood as though stupefied, scarcely breathing,

Soldiers began to come and go in the room; some carried off chairs for officers below, some took the pillows from the bed, one bore away a desk on his broad shoulders.

The evening had grown chilly; I was cold to my knees.

A soldier offered to build me a fire in the great stone fireplace behind me, and when I assented he calmly smashed a chair to kindling wood, wrenched off the heavy posts of the bed, and started a fire which lit up the wrecked room with its crimson glare.

The Countess rose and looked around. The soldier pushed my long chair to the blaze, tore down the canopy over the bed and flung it over me, stolidly ignoring my protests. Then he clumped out with his muddy boots and shut the door behind him.

For a long while I lay there, full in the heat of the fire, half dozing, then sleeping, then suddenly alert, only to look about me to see the Countess with eyes closed, motionless in her arm chair, only to hear the muffled thunder of the guns in the dark.

A few moments later a clock in the haliway struck nine times. At the same instant a deadened cannon-shot echoed the clamor of the clock. It was the last shot of the battle. And when the dull reverberations had died away Alsace was a lost province. MacMahon's army was in full retreat, leaving on the three battle-fields of Worth, Reichshoffen, and Froschweiler sixteen thousand dead, wounded, and missing soldiers of France.

About seven o'clock that morning a gaunt, leather-faced Prussian officer, immaculate in his somber uniform, entered the room without knocking.

"Monsieur, I have the honor to hand you a copy of regulations. I am the provost marshal; all complaints should be brought to me. A list of the inhabitants of Morsbronn will be made today. You will have the goodness to declare yourself—and you also, madame. There being other buildings better fitted, no soldiers will be quartered in this house."

The officer evidently mistook me for the owner of the house and not a prisoner. A blanket hid my hussar trousers and boots; he could only see my ragged shirt.

And now, madame," he continued, "as monsieur appears to need the services of a physician, I shall send him a French doctor, brought in this morning from the Chateau of la Trappe."

He turned his grim, inflexible face to the Countess and bowed, then he bowed to me, swung squarely on his heel, and walked to the door.

"Admit the French doctor," he said to the soldier on guard, and marched out, his curved saber banging behind his spurred heels

"It must be Dr. Delmont!" I said, looking at the Countess as there came a low knock at the door.

She rose unsteadily from her chair; somebody entered the room behind me and I turned, calling out, "Welcome, doctor!"

"Thank you," replied the calm voice of John Buckhurst at my elbow.

The Countess shrank aside as Buckhurst coolly passed before her, turned his slim back to the embers of the fire, and fixed his eyes on me—those pale, slow eyes, passionless as death

"My friend," he observed in English, "do you think you will know me again when you have finished your scrutiny?"

The Countess, face averted, passed behind my chair

"Wait," said Buckhurst; and turning directly to me, he added: "You were mistaken for a hussar at La Trappe; you were mistaken here for a hussar as long as the squad holding this house remained in Morsbronn. A few moments ago the provost mistook you for a civilian." He looked across at the Countess, who already stood with her hand on the door knob

"If you disturb me," he said, "I have only to tell the provost the truth. Members of Imperial Police caught without proper uniform inside German lines are shot, seance tenante."

The Countess stood perfectly still a moment, then came straight to me.

"Madame," said Buckhurst, in his peculiarly soft and persuasive voice, "I am not here to betray this gentleman; I am not here even to justify myself. I came here to make reparation, to ask your forgiveness, madame, for the wrong I have done you, and to deliver myself, if necessary, into the hands of the proper French authorities in expiation of my misguided zeal."

"I do not exactly understand," said I, "how you can expiate a crime here."

"I can at least make retribution," he said, turning the paper box over and over between his flat fingers.

"Have you brought me the diamonds which belong to the state?" I inquired, amused.

"Yes," he said, and to my astonishment he drew a small leather pouch from his pocket and laid it, on my blanket-covered knees. "How many diamonds were there?" he asked.

"One hundred and three," I replied incredulously, and opened the leather pouch Inside was a bag of chamois skin. This I stretched wide and emptied.

Scores of little balls of tissue-paper rolled out on the blanket over my knees; I opened one; it contained a diamond; I opened another, another, and another; diamonds lay blazing on my blanket, a whole handful, glittering in undimmed splendor.

"Count them," murmured Buckhurst, fashioning the paper box into a fly-trap with a lid.

With a quick movement I swept them into my hands, then one by one dropped the stones while I counted aloud one hundred and two diamonds. The one hundred and third jewel was, of course, safely in Paris.

When I had a second time finished the enumeration I leaned back in my chair, utterly at a loss to account for this man or for what he had done. As far as I could see there was no logic in it, nothing demonstrated, nothing proven. To me—and I am not either suspicious or obstinate by nature—Buckhurst was still an unrepentant thief and a dangerous one.

"Mr. Buckhurst," I said, pompously, "in bringing these diamonds to me you have certainly done all in your power to repair an injury which concerned all France

"As I am situated, of course I cannot now ask you to accompany me to Paris, where doubtless the proper authorities would gladly admit extenuating circumstances, and credit you with a sincere repentance. But I put you on your honor to surrender at the first opportunity."

It was as stupidly trite a speech as I could think of.

Buckhurst glanced up at me. Was he taking my measure anew, judging me from my bray?

"I could easily aid you to leave Morsbronn," he said, stealthily.

"Oho," thought I, "so you're a German agent, too, as I suspected." But I said, aloud, simulating astonishment: "Do you mean to say, Mr. Buckhurst, that you would deliberately risk death to aid a police officer to bring you before a military tribunal in Paris?"

"I do not desire to pose as a hero or a martyr," he said, quietly, "but I regret what I have done, and I will do what an honest man can do to make the fullest reparation—even if it means my death."

The unhappy Countess looked at me. It goes hard with a woman when her guide and mentor falls.

"If you return to Paradise, in Morbihan, as we had planned, may I go," he asked, humbly, "only as an obscure worker in the cause? I beg, madame, that you will not cast me off."

So he wanted to go to Morbihan—to the village of Paradise? Why?

The Countess said: "I welcome all who care for the cause. You will never hear an unkind word from me if you desire to resume the work in Paradise. Dr. Delmont will be there; Monsieur Tavernier also, I hope; and they are older and wiser than I, and they have reached that lofty serenity which is far above my troubled mind. Ask them what you have asked of me; they are equipped to answer you."

Diamonds Lay Blazing on My Blanket.

It was time for another discord from me, so I said: "Madame, you have seen a thousand men lay down their lives for France Has it not shaken your allegiance to that ghost of patriotism which you call the 'Internationale'?"

"You saw the cuirassiers die in the street below," I repeated, with the obstinacy of a limited intellect.

"Yes—and my heart went out to them," she replied, with an emphasis that pleased me and startled Buckhurst.

Buckhurst began to speak, but I cut him short.

"Then, madame, if your heart went out to the soldiers of France, it went out to France, too!"

"Yes—to France," she repeated, and I saw her lip begin to quiver.

"Wherein does love for France conflict with our creed, madame?" asked Buckhurst, gently. "It is only hate that we abjure."

She turned her gray eyes on him "I will tell you: in that dreadful moment when the cavalry of France cheered Death in his own awful presence, I loved them and their country—my country!—as I had never loved in all my life. . . . And I hated, too! I hated the men who butchered them—more!—I hated the country where the men came from; I hated race and country and the blows they dealt, and the evil they wrought on France—my France! That is the truth; and I realize it!"

After a silence Buckhurst said: "All that may be, madame, yet not impair your creed.

"What!" she said, "does not hatred of the stranger impair my creed?"

"It will die out and give place to reason."

"When? When I attain the lofty, dispassionate level I have never attained. That will not be while this war endures."

"Who knows?" said Buckhurst, gently.

I said, abruptly: "So you are not going to denounce me to the Prussian provost?"

He lifted his well-shaped head and gazed at the Countess with an admirable pathos which seemed a mute appeal for protection from brutality.

"That question is a needless one," said the Countess, quietly. "It was a cruel one, also, Monsieur Scarlett."

"I did not mean it as an offensive question," said I. "I was merely reciting a fact, most creditable to Mr Buckhurst. And if it be true that Monsieur Buckhurst desires to atone for—for what has happened, then it is perfectly proper for me, even as a prisoner myself, to speak plainly. Is it not my duty, as a guardian of national interests, to point out to Mr. Buckhurst his honest errors? Certainly it is, madame, and this is the proper time."

Turning pompously to Buckhurst, I fancied I could almost detect a sneer on that inexpressive mask he wore—at least I hoped I could, and I said, heavily:

"Monsieur, for a number of years there has passed under our eyes here in France certain strange phenomena. Thousands of Frenchmen have, so to speak, separated themselves from the rest of the nation.

"France is only a name to them; they were born there, they live there, they derive their nourishment from her without gratitude. But France is nothing to them; their motherland is the Internationale!"

I was certain now that the shadow of a sneer had settled in the corners of Buckhurst's thin lips.

"Believe me, madame, the time is coming when the whole world will rise to combat this Internationale; and when the mask is dragged from its benignant visage, there, grinning behind, will appear the same old 'Specter Rouge,' torch in one hand, gun in the other, squatting behind a barricade of paving-blocks."

I wagged my head dolefully.

"I could not have rested had I not warned Mr. Buckhurst of this," I said sentimentally.

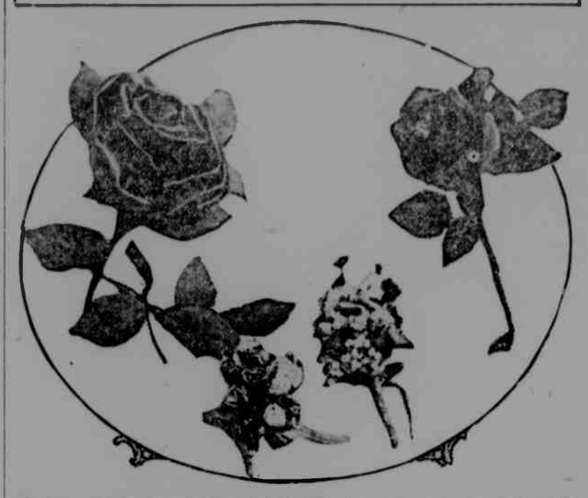
Which was fairly well done considering that I was figuratively lamenting over the innocence of the most accomplished scoundrel that ever sat in the supreme council of the Internationale.

Buckhurst looked thoughtfully at the floor

"Your earnestness almost converts me," he said, lifting his stealthy eyes

The Countess appeared weary and perplexed.

"At all events," she said, "we must do nothing to embarrass France now; we must do nothing until this frightful war is ended."



After a silence Buckhurst said, "But you will go to Paradise, madame?"

"Yes," replied the Countess, listlessly.

Now, what in Heaven's name attracted that rogue to Paradise?

Corsage Rose Sets Off the Costume.

WITH soft lace drapery which forms their bodices, gowns for evening or for afternoon functions are completed by draped skirts meeting the bodice with a girdle or sash. Often the top of the skirt extends itself into the waist line drapery, and often a separate girdle in a contrasting color is employed.

But whatever the finish at the waist line, for these gowns for high occasions, the splendid corsage rose is rarely left out. This is a rose made of ribbon or velvet, mounted with or without millinery foliage and having a ribbon-wrapped stem.

The roses of satin or velvet are made in all the fashionable new colors. Certain yellow and strong light green shades, also deep orange and black, have been favorites. These corsage roses—in passing—will transform a plain skirt and dressy blouse into quite formal dress. They are large and are made of ribbon about three inches wide, or wider. The ribbon is cut into lengths to form the petals, each length being twice that of required petal plus an inch extra for plaiting in at the base of the petal and winding in at the stem

A wire provides the stem A little ball of cotton is wound about one end, the size of a thimble, and over this a bit of ribbon is placed and fastened to the stem by winding it with a thread or tie-wire. About this center a short length of ribbon (folded lengthwise) is wrapped to imitate the small petals, still unopened, at the heart of the rose.

After the center has been made in this way, the petals are made Each short length is doubled and plaited in at the raw edges. The plaits are sewed down After the petals—say ten or eleven in all—have been made, they are fastened about the center of the rose already formed, tied to the stem with thread or tie-wire. Finally the corners are curled back on some of the petals and blind-stitched down. Shape the petals, cupping them with the fingers. Wind the stem with narrow green ribbon, winding in a spray or two of millinery rose foliage.

These roses made of velvet ribbon about two inches wide in a deep gold color are mounted with velvet foliage.

Besides satin and velvet ribbon the heavier gauze ribbons are used, and the gold and silver tissue. Roses of this sort are expensive bits of luxury when bought ready made—from about two to five dollars each. The value is placed upon the time consumed in making them, and the workmanship, far more than in the material used.

For less dress-up times, the little rosegay of rosebuds made of several different colors of narrow satin ribbon, is still a great favorite. These small roses are made of a length of satin ribbon (folded lengthwise along the center) or of separate petals made of narrow ribbon They are mounted on little stems of small green covered wire. Sprays of fine millinery foliage of maidenhair fern usually are used with them by way of variety. Narrow velvet ribbon in green or purple winds the stems together, and finish the nosegay with a little bow. These small nosegays are scented, and form the daintiest of accessories worn on the coat or furs for the street. Small bits of ribbon or silk will make them. They are always appreciated, bound to please those who possess a sense of the value of such finishing touches to the toilet. It would be difficult to think up a better Christmas gift for one's friends JULIA BOTTOMLEY.

AFTERNOON GOWN A TRIUMPH OF FRENCH DESIGN

HERE is an unusual and attractive gown from the salon of a notable French designer. It has the grace of simplicity and it embodies several of the best style features of the present season. Among these there are the loose and comfortable management of the sleeve, the tunic, the girdle, the easy adjustment of the bodice and a skirt a little shorter at the front than at the back and hanging in about the feet

There is a little under bodice of embroidered chiffon with elbow sleeves, finished with a wired ruching of maline. A band of beaded embroidery adorns the material of the bodice, which is draped in the fashion of the Chinese collar.

It is not always easy to solve the intricacies in construction of the most simple looking of French gowns. It is quite likely that this one is made in two pieces, with the skirt and chiffon bodice attached to a short under waist. The skirt overlaps at the front.

The tunic is apparently fastened at the left side and attached to the bodice The girdle is boned and is of soft satin, lined in irregular pleats. Girdles are, almost without exception, made in colors contrasting with that used in the body of the gown. Sometimes a girdle is in several colors, those in plaid of bright tones being favored for plain cloth gowns Another development of the always present girdle shows silk in three colors laid in pleats, making a three-toned girdle. Certain it is that, in the management of the waist line, our present modes are the most artistic, the most easy and graceful of any that lie within the memory of the women of our country

The study of a gown of as great artistic value as this one should involve that of the dressing of the feet and the arrangement of the coiffure, because both these matters should enter into the consideration of a dressy costume at any time. Satin slippers in black with rhinestone buckles, and silk hosiery of the color of the gown take care of the clothing of the feet appropriately

The coiffure is one of those designs classified as the "casque" style, in which all the hair is waved. It is arranged over the head like a turban. There is no chignon at the back. The ends of the hair are turned under the waves and spread about in such a way as to dispense with a coil.

In cutting a gown of this character wide goods are more easily managed than narrow. Skirts, overlapping at the front, while narrow, give room for easy walking because the front seam is not joined down to the bottom. The under petticoat must be soft; the most clinging of fabrics, as chiffon or crepe de chine, or lace. An inserted flounce will take the place of a petticoat Anything heavy enough to interfere with the falling of the skirt in close and clinging lines would destroy an important item in the beauty of the design. It is the hang and not fit of garments which is of paramount importance now. The figure, without distortion of any sort, without restraint, but in the lovely, natural silhouette, is glorified in present day styles, which really amount to cleverly arranged drapery Garments must not shape the figure today; they must be shaped by it, or appear to be, anyway. Hence so many gowns seem to be designed for the corsetless figure.

JULIA BOTTOMLEY.

To Freshen Velvet Hats.

During the velvet hat season, which is now with us, those having stained, spotted and shabby looking velvet hats can freshen them up nicely by heating an iron, then placing a wet cloth over it, and holding the iron upside down in the inside of the hat. When the entire surface is moist, hang the hat without touching it. When dry brush well, and it will look bright and new.

It may also be held over the steaming spout of a boiling kettle until moist. If the fingers come into touch with the wet nap, it will press it down and dry in that condition.

Walking Stick Feminine.

Tis here!
And 'tis smart.
Have you seen it?
It graces the promenade.
As a rule, it is silver headed.
It is a good four feet in height.
Ebony, turtle ebony, rosewood and pimento are some of the woods serving.

These canes are elegantly slender and not as tall as those favored by femininity during the Directory.

BOYS LIKE TO OWN THINGS

Give Your Son Possessions That He May "Keep," and He Will Treasure Them.

The average boy believes firmly in the principle of the private ownership of personal property He would rather be the sole possessor of a broken handled knife with no blades than a pearl handled, four-bladed affair in partnership, asserts Thomas W. Lloyd in the Mother's Magazine.

In fact, the desire to own something—to possess property—is inherent in all mankind And mothers should endeavor to foster this desire. It will not only increase the boy's happiness, but will teach him the value of acquisition, within proper limits He should have his own playthings, his own tools, his own books, his own clothes, and a place of his own in which to keep them.

A boy who is permitted to do this will take better care of things than if owned in partnership, and he will learn eagerly to have a place for his things and to keep them in their place. And this is a valuable lesson Do not make a younger boy wear his older brother's clothing which the latter has outgrown, if it can be avoided Of course in some families, where every cent counts, this cannot be helped. Every boy, and we speak from experience, hates to wear another's clothes. He wants his own.

Give him his own bureau drawer and at least a portion of a closet, and teach him habits of orderliness and system in the care of his possessions. These habits are easily learned when young, and their value to the man of business is incalculable.

Satisfied.

But that it would cost too much to print it, the landlady would probably include this story in her advertisement every time she needs boarders.

In answer to an advertisement that was published before the story happened, she received as "paying guests" a lady and gentleman and little girl who had come down in the world.

Their descent was comparatively recent, and the lady still mourned departed grandeur. She had hopes of getting some of it back, however, and to that end she instructed the little girl to pray, on the night of their arrival at the boarding house, that God would soon give them their pretty home again.

The child opened her eyes and looked around the comfortably furnished room.

"I don't see anything the matter with this," she said.

Queer Fable About Cotton.

When cotton first came to Europe to make its principal center in Lancashire it was the subject of the quaint and wonderful fable of the "Vegetable Lamb." The fluffy white fibers of the bursting cotton pod so resembled sheep's wool that travelers reported that in Tartary there grew a shrub the fruit or boll of which contained "withinne a lyttle Beaste in Fleeche, in Bone and Bloode, as though it were a lyttle Lambe with outer wool." After the lamb had been eaten the wool was made into cloth, continued this story, which is the earliest European account of the manufacture of cotton.

MARK UP ONE FOR LOUISIANA

According to Senator's Story, Groceryman From That State Reached Height of Gallantry.

The conversation turned to gallantry, and Senator Joseph E. Ransdell of Louisiana reflectively smiled. He said that few people could be so gallant as a certain groceryman under the same painful conditions.

Recently, according to the story told by the senator, a young woman weighing about 225 pounds, was gracefully waddling down the street when she stepped on a banana skin in front of a grocery store.

The banana skin being right on the job, the young woman immediately began to fly in several directions at the same time, and finally landed large and plenty into a crate of fresh country eggs.

"How very unfortunate, madam!" solicitously cried the groceryman, rushing to her succor. "I trust that you are not hurt!"

"Not the least bit, thank you," said the young woman as she rose to her feet. "I really hope that I haven't broken your eggs."

"Oh, no, madam, not at all!" was the gallant rejoinder of the groceryman. "They are only slightly bent."

Neglected Neighborhoods.

You can find in almost any town a "neglected neighborhood." The easiest thing to do with such a neighborhood is to keep on neglecting it

It is so easy for us to study these topics as if they were about other places and people than ourselves and our homes. Is there a neglected corner in your town, or in your county? If there is what are you going to do about it? Not "What have you been doing about it?" as "What ought you to do about it?" but "What are you going to do about it?"

If you can't get the committees interested, do something yourself. Do not be afraid.

The thing is to get started. You see, as soon as you have started something the neighborhood is no longer neglected. And then it will be an easier matter to get someone to come in and help.—Christian Herald.

THE REPUBLICAN,
Oakland, Md.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1913.

THE twenty-eight annual convention of the Anti-Saloon League will convene in Columbus Ohio, next Monday. It is expected that at least 20,000 delegats, representing every state in the union, will attend this convention.

JUDGE John C. Molter, for years the Republican leader of Frederick county, and well known in this county, was atricken with paralysis Tuesday. The attack came as he alighted from his automobile, at one of the voting precinct of Frederick. He has ever chance of recovery, if he does not have another stroke.

JACKSON HOLDS UNTIL MARCH 4.

Maryland's election of a United States Senator will precipitate a warm controversy in Washington if the successful candidate expects to take his seat at the regular session in December.

According to Senator Kern, chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, the next Senator form Maryland cannot take his seat before March 4. According to others who hope that Blair Lee will be successful and feel that Wilson Democrats will need all the votes possible, the amendment providing for the direct election of Senators will permit the new Senator to take his seat as soon as his election is certified to by the State of Maryland.

"The election, as I understand it," said Senator Kern this morning at the White House, "is to determine a successor to Senator Jackson, who was appointed by the Governor of Maryland as a recess appointee, namely, until the next session of the Maryland Legislature meets, which is January. Consequently I do not believe that the new man could be seated until after the term tor which Senator Jackson was appointed has expired."

IT IS THE SAME EVERYWHERE.

Editor Livengood, of the Frostburg Spirit, very pointedly says: "Some kick on the prices of fodder and hay; they kick on the prices of meat, all day; they kick on the prices of corn and oats, as well as the prices of chickens and shoats. They kick and they rant till they give us the blues, but never a kick on the price of their booze. They swear that the prices on dry goods are high, that fickle dame fortune is passing them by; they swear and declare that a man has no show, but they've always got money for booze, dont you know. They rave and they rant and they kick, by gum! but never a kick on the price of their rum, They kick on the prices of light and heat; they kick on the prices of shoes for their feet; they kick on the prices of all that they buy, except on the prices of beer, wine and rye. They kick when they're tired and they kick when their frisky, but never a kick on the price of their whiskey. This worl I is a world of kickers for shure; some of them rich and some of them poor; they kick in the darkness and kick in the light, kick in their weakness and kick in their might. They kick and they rant till they give us the blues, but never a kick on the price of there booze."

LIMITING PARENTHOOD.

The suggestion made by Dr. Woods Hutchinson, to have the state segregate the physically, mentally and morrlly defective, with the view of makigg it imposible for them to reproduce their kind, was anticipated about two weeks ago by Sir James Barr in his address before the University Sociological Society in Sheffield. He said that if the governments throughout the world would only stop the reproduction of the unfit, the fit would then be able to look after themselves, and the selective evolution of the race would go on rapidly.

In his opinion it is no longer a question of the survival of the fittest The industrious, independent, hard-working man who was taxed to support the loafer, wastrel, pauper, criminal and the progeny of the degenerate did not live to eke out an existence with an old-age pension. It was the miserable degenerate who, assisted by charity from the cradle to the grave, often survived the longest.

The degenerates not only survive, but, as is well known, are more prolific than the intellectuals.

"Recently," he continued, "a feeble minded act was placed on the statute books, which seemed to be about the highest flight in the eugenic movement which the House of Commons was capable of taking. It would deal with the idiot, the imbecile and the lowest type of the feeble-minded, all of whom were too degenerate to be prolitic, but it would leave untouched the higher types of the feeble-minded."

It is a firm belief with him that it is entirely a question for society to determine what are to be the limitations of parenthood. While it may not be advisable to compel a person to become a parent, it is assuredly advisable, he thmks, to determine who was not to become a parent. The arguments of Sir James sounds plausible enough. Those who reproduce the physically and mentally unfit would seem to commit a crime againts society. The only objection is, as Dr. Felix Alder pointed out, such a system cannot rise above stock-farm methods.

PROPERTY VERSUS LIFE.

To the legal mind, apparently, the right of property have always seemed of more importance than human life. For hundreds of years it was possible for a man brutally to maltreat his child with less legal risk than if he had poached a hare. Gradually human life became more valuable; but even today it fails to receive the protection that is accorded to property. It is no uncommon thing to find reported in British newspapers cases in which a drunken navy has kicked and otherwise abused his wife, to receive no greater punishment at the hands of the law than a paltry fine, while the unhappy wight who, driven by hunger, steals a loaf, is sent to prison. Nor do we need to go oversea to find such instances of the worship of property. An excellent illustration of the workings of the legal mind in problems of this kind is to be found in a study of ten Notices of Judgment issued by the United States Department of Agriculture and giving in detail the of ten violations of the Food and Drugs Act. These ten cases deal with charges brought againts the firm of Hawley and Hoops, New York, who are in the candy business. Hawley and Hoops sell what is known as "penny goods;" that is, the kind of candy purchased by the litte tot who has been given a penny to spend. Ten different specimens of Hawley and Hoops' penny goods were seized by the officials of the Bureau of Chemistry and analyzed. All of them were found to be adulterated with arsenic and most of them contained shellac. All of them were being sold as chocolate candies, yet the officers reported that some did not even have the predominating flavor of chocolate. In every case the firm pleaded guilty. In nine out of ten cases no penalty was imposed, the court suspending judgement. In the tenth case a fine of $50 was imposed. The case in which a fine was imposed was the one, and the only one, in which the company had not merely sold a poisonous product to little children; but had misstated the net weight of the package in which the arsenic-containing candies came! Selling to little children as chocolate candy, a mixture containing arsenic and shellac is, apparently, in the eyes of the law, a trivial offence. But selling to a dealer a package marked five pounds that really contained only four pounds fourteen and five-eights ounces, that is a crime.

FIRST, LISTEN TO YOUR MOTHER

(BY DAVID BELASCO.)

David Belasco, manager of the Belasco Theatre, New York, has written one of the most beautiful essays that has been circulated for some time a real classic, in the opinion of discerning people. "First Listen to Your Mother," will be read by young and old, by the youthful with profit, but by the older ones with more than pleasure, as they read the truth within the lines.

First, listen to your mother. I did. I had a beautiful mother. Every well regulated boy thinks his mother beautiful, and he should. But I have memories of my opinion being corroborated by others. She was brave as well as beautiful, for she was the first white woman that ever crossed the Isthmus of Panama on muleback. I was born at the end of that long and painful journey from England to San Francisco, in a cabin on the floors of which the water stood a foot deep.

There is no question in my mind that the stories my mother told me turned my thoughts to the stage. She was sensitive and imaginative and had a power of telling a story so that the characters lived before the eyes. She used to hold me on her knee at twilight and as some mothers sing their children to sleep she told me stories until the sandman came. So impressed was I by these stories that I fitted up a little stage in the cellar with a sheet for a drop curtain and acted them in plays, taking all the different characters myself. So listen to your mother. She has a message for you, perhaps many messages, and whether they are practial or romantic, they are valuable to you because they are inspired by the half divine qualities of mother love, mother faith, and mother hope.

Always look higher than your environment. While I carried a spear I dreamed of being a manager. Don't allow yourself to be unhappy in it but determine to grow out of it. For a strong desire for some thing, and a willingness to work hard for it, brings that thing to pass in our lives. We make our own dreams come true. The dreams of the boy become the actualities in the life of the man. Before deeds, dreams. So don't become discouraged if the family and the neighbors tell you yon are a good-for-nothing dreamer of dreams. The builder of the tunnel under the Hudson River was rated as a good-for-nothing boy because he was a dreamer. But don't be a lazy dreamer. Work out your dreams to their fultillment.

You will fall in love many times while you are growing up and growing into the state of real affection. But the true love of your life, the unchanging one, is love of your work. No one ever succeeded who did his work in a spirit of drudgery. Crave it as you crave food, long for it as you long for sleep after a sleepless night cleave to it as you cleave to life. Love it without stint. Remain in love with it and it will reward yon as love rewards you, with a surpassing sweetness.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

To the Editor of the Republican:

In Mr. Russell's reply to my last communication, there are some things that need to be answered, not that an answer from any source could convince him, but it may open the eyes of some who may be attracted by or disposed to listen to his interpretation of the bible, which is opposed by the acknowledged biblical scholarship of the world.

He denies the personality of the Holy Spirit. regarding the spirit as an influence from God and quotes Paul to substantiate his position. But Paul says the Spirit himself beareth witness with our spirits, etc. He uses the personal pronoun in speaking of the Spirit. Can an influence do this? The Spirit seals the believer, Rom. 8: 23. Only a person can do that. Jesus speaking of the Spirit uses the personal pronoun: he, him, his. He shall convince of sin; guide you into all truth; speak what he hears; show you things to come, Jno. 16: 7, 8, 13, 14; teaches, comforts, sanctifies, testifies of Christ, quickens the memory, searches the deep things of God. If the writers of the Bible did not believe in the personality of the Holy Spirit then language means nothing. The same terms exactly are applied to the Holy Spirit as are to the Father, so that the personality of the one stands or falls with the other. In denying the personality of the Holy Spirit Russell denies the personality of the Father.

Let me call his attention to some passages of the Word to prove the personality of the Holy Spirit:

Gen. 1: 2. The Spirit of the Lord moved upon the face of the waters.

Job 33: 4. The Spirit of God hath made me.

Matt. 28: 19. Baptizing them in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost.

Jno. 16: 12; Acts 8: 20; Isa. 48: 16, 33: 10.

Can you vex an influence? No, but you can a person. Can you lie to an influence, no but Ananias did to the Holy Ghost, Acts 5: 3, 4, and He (the Holy Spirit) was God.

Acts 15: 28. Eph. 4: 30. You can blaspheme the Holy Ghost. Matt. 12: 31.

Divine titles are accorded to Him, II Cor. 2: 17. Divine attributes also, as Eternity, etc., Heb. 9: 14. Omnipresence, I Cor. 6: 19; Rom. 8: 14. Omniscience, I Cor. 2: 10; II Pet. 1: 21. He is the author of Regeneration, John 3: 6, 8; Titus 3: 5.

I agree with Mr. Russell that ability to spell out Greek words does not constitute a knowledge of the language. I have Greek, English and Hebrew lexicons, Liddell and Scott's, Young's analytical; am familiar with McClintock's and Strong's work. He dodges the question. My point was that he claimed to be able to read the Greek, yet was compelled to admit on the stand that he could not. That fact stands and Russell has not touched it.

The reason I did not admit that the Council of Nice was composed of about one-third of the Bishops, etc., is simply because it is not an historical fact. To say that Constantine forced the doctrine of the Trinity upon the Council does not accord with the facts. The doctrine was in the church bef re Constantine came upon the scene. Some tried to get rid of it, or discard it, as Russell has done, but the overwhelming majority has retained it and it has been one of the principal doctrines of all evangelical churches ever since. It does not carry any weight, nor is there any force to say the word Trinity is not in the Bible. The doctrine is there, and it has been abundantly proved to the entire satisfaction of the great body of believers.

The these persons are set forth as distinct and yet as divine, Matt. 28: 19; II Cor. 13: 14; Matt. 3: 15-17; John 12: 24; 1 John 1: 7. If the plain, common sense interpretation of these passages will not convince one there is no use going any further, though more could easily be furnished.

I leave this heterogenius mixture of isms, such as Sabillianism, Arianism, Swedenborgianism, Universalism, Unitarianism labelled Russellism to the practical common sense of your readers. We can bear with it a bit longer, as there will, according to Russell's infallible (?) count, be no use for it after October 14th, for the present order of things will wind up then.

He seems very anxious to suggest some passages, though I have no need of his help. I will act on his suggestion for the benefit of your readers.

John 10: 29 Jesus says: I and my Father are one. Certainly, one in essence, in nature, in dignity, in power, will and operation. Hence in the matter of securing my sheep what I do my Father does likewise.

Sabullians say there is only one person in the Godhead, but Jesus speaks here of two. So Russell is with that company of universally recognized heretics. The Arians say the Son is inferior to the Father, but Jesus says the Father and Son are one, and C. T. musters with them.

The son claims the same power with the Father, and hence the essence is the same. One in nature, power and majesty. If you say one person you take away both and leave neither Father nor Son. John 14: 28, My Father is greater than I. He is equal to the Father as touching His Godhead and inferior to the Father as touching his manhood. As God He is equal to the Father, as man He is inferior to the Father. In this sense He says my Father is greater than I. It was spoken of the time of His incarnation and humility. It was temporary inferiority which He laid aside to share again His Father's throne.

Now comes T. P. Comuntzis, who claims to know all about the Greek. Perhaps he can read modern Greek, but that doesn't say that he, above all others, has the ability to interpret New Testament Greek. His interpretations are at variance with the New Testament scholars of the world. He is amazed at the accuracy of Russell's application of the Greek, yet Russell had to admit that he does not know and cannot read the Greek. Does T. P. C. furnish the interpretations for Russell? He reminds me of an incident that occurred in a presidential campaign. Returns were coming in slowly, now in favor of one and the next perhaps favorable to the other candidate. A notorious character of the town, who had filled up with "mountain tea" or the "O be joyful," when the report came that the candidate of his party was leading, walked out into the middle of the street and yelled "Three cheers for ——" and then swinging his hat above his head gave three lusty cheers. Calmly putting his hat on he said: "There, now, that settles it," and walked off in the confidence that he had settled it.

T. P. seems to think that the exposing of his favorite ism and speaking the truth concerning it and its author is a slanderous method of prosecution. He attributes it to fear lest the clear presentation of Russell discredit them. "Blind leaders of the blind, leading into the ditch of confusion and unbelief." Bosh! He would better apply his text Matt. 23: 13 to his own favorite issue. He would do well to read Matt. 23: 15. If people will enter through the door of this ism, they may be certain of heaven, as the elect will be taken up next October, while the non-elect, presumably those outside of this "true church," will be left behind, wishing they had wings to go with that crowd.

Russell says, "the statements of Ross are a tissue of falsehoods; he is thoroughly unreliable, loving and making lies." "Financially responsible, a suit a suit for damages would neither punish him nor stop him from lying." The inference is, that if Ross had money he would sued for slander. Is money Mr. R.'s object? The moral effect whether he has a dollar or a million dollars, would be the same provided Mr. R. gained it. It would vindicate him. But Russell sued him and lost his suit, or failed utterly to make his point. Why didn't he send him to prison? Can he prove his statement that Ross has wrecked three of the principal Baptist churches of Canada in one year? He ought to have given reliable testimony to that effect, for the statement of a man who on the witness stand claimed to be a Greek scholar and them under the grilling of an attorney had to admit he could not read it, will not carry much weight with unbiased minds.

Since writing the above I have read the communication from the Home and Foreign Missionary Societies of Ontario and Quebec and for Canada, as well as from the Board of Deacons of James Street Baptist church, which puts Pastor Russell in an unenviable position to say the least.

I need say no more. I leave this with intelligent and unbiased minds to settle for themselves.

I commend all to the Eternal son of God and the Son of Man, the divine Saviour of Men, who is from the beginning the uncreated, self-existing God, Eternal with the Father, who gave His life on the cross for us, and beg you to accept Him as your Saviour and serve Him that you may be glorified with Him.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR SECOND CORN EXRIOIT

In hearty sympathy and friendly co-operation with the generally accepted view that accords supremacy to agriculture as the bulwark of American prosperity and commercial expansion, and in furtherance of the wide spread movement of agricultural fairs and cereal exhibits which invite greater achievement and more more material results from the husbandman's toil by encouraging intensive cultivation, better methods of distribution for his products, and the advantage which accrues from an observation of his neighbors efforts along lines more scientific and fruitful than his own, Mr. Daniel Annan, president of the Second National Bank of Cumberland has announced his second corn exposition, open to the farmers of Allegany and Garrett counties, Md.; Mineral and Hampshire counties, West Virginia; and Bedford county, Pennsylvania.

The success which attended the first exhibit of corn at the Second National Bank one year ago, and the marked interest manifested by farmers who were exhibitors as well as the many who attended the cereal show for comparison and study, promptly induced Mr. Annan to repeat his venture upon a larger scale in fact that promise was exacted of him by the many observers who recognized in the exposition an enterprise of value to the community in its incentive for agricultural expansion and emphasized invitation to make two ears of corn grow where one grew before.

The conditions governing the previous exhibit are identical with those to prevail at the forthcoming event, but the prizes are double in amount and more territory is included than before.

Twelve ears of corn, grown in the counties of Allegany, Garrett, Mineral, Hampshire or Bedford shall constitute an entry and in the event of a controversy or question as to the corn having been grown in the locality open to the exposition an affidavit of the grower to that effect may be required.

Entries will be received at the Second National Bank of Cumberland during business hours from Tuesday, December 2nd to Friday, December 5th. Judging of exhibits will be conducted by a recognized corn expert, probably from one of the agricultural colleges, whose verdict will be impartial, and in accordance with the actual merits of the entry.

All exhibits shall remain the property of Mr. Annan to be disposed of in the interest of a public charity or beneficence.

The prizes shall be as follows: Fifty dollars in gold for the best exhibit of 12 ears ot corn grown in the counties previously designated. Twenty-five dollars in gold for the second best entry; fifteen dollars in gold for the third prize; ten dollars in gold for the fourth prize and five dollars in gold for the fifth.

Farmers in this and adjacent counties are in full realization of the actual profit which scientific crop culture implies, and they therefore appreciate a movement or object designed to promote their interests. Hence the prediction that the corn exposition at the Second National Bank will not not only receive a large number of exhibits but will arouse such a degree of concern among the farming element and others interested in agriculture as to insure the annual repetition of this event with increasing importance, influence and success.

VICTORY O'ER THE GRAVE.

Pastor McPherson, to Lecture at The Court House, November 13th.

Considerable interest has been manifested in the series of Bible lectures being held here. Like every other movement advancing progressive ideas, the I. B. S. A. has to fight its way in the face of considerable opposition. It is, however, meeting with hearty support on every hand, especially from those who believe in the Bible study, unhindered by sectarian differences and tiresome collections. The I. B. S. A. offers free membership to all christian people who desire to advance Bible study, regardless of sect or creed. No admission fee is charged, nor are dues or assignments apportioned. The association has never been known to even lift a collection It is a marvel to many how they can carry on what statistics show to be the most extensive christian campaign in the world.

Pastor J. P. MacPherson, of New York City, is listed to speak on: "Victory O'er the Grave." Thursday evening Nov. 13 at 7:15 o'clock in the Court House. This is the third lecture of the series. All are cordially invited. As usual all seats will be free.

NOTE. Pastor Hall will wive his remarkable lecture on Christ's Second Coming, Why? How? and When? Tonight, Thursday, 7:15 at the Maryland Theatre instead of the Court House as advertised last week.

BITTINGER.

The last few days of the past week were a forcible reminder that winter is not far off.

James Speicher is opening a new coal mine on his farm near this village.

The local coal mine owners and operators have raised the price of coal, not a very good argument in favor of the recent tariff bill.

Messrs. L. A. Rudisill and Calvin Cuppett, of Oakland, were campaigning in this district last week. These gentlemen were accompanied by Mr. Edgar, of near Oakland.

Noah Stark and family, of Blaine, W. Va., are spending a few days with Mr. Stark's parents here.

Messrs. Paul Jennings and Bert Potter, of Jennings, were gunning in this neighborhood recently.

G. W. Engle, of Baltimore, spent a part of this week with his parents here.

Rev. H. E. H. Sloop, of Wardensville, W. Va., preached from the Lutheran pulpit in this village last Sunday morning.

The opening of the hunting season proved a disastrous time for rabbits and pheasants, as a considerable number of each were killed the first day.

PARCELS POST BEING SWAMPED.

Business Increasing Away Beyond Original Predictions.

Congressman David J. Lewis, the father of the parcel post, has estimated that 200,000,000 packages will be carried during the first year. Mr. Koons chairman of the parcel post commission, said he has told Mr. Lewis that he will have to revamp his guess, for the amount of business, according to present indications, will exceed that figure. It is estimated by some of the postal experts that the total revenue from parcel post for its first year will reach $40,000,600. None of the experts at the present time, in view of the big increase in the traffic, care to hazard just what amount of business will be done.

Here is an illustration of the growth of the parcel post traffic in New York: In January the parcel post carried 4,000,000 packages out of the city. In August, before the fall season got under full sway, 8,000,000 packages were handled. That is a gain of 4,000,000 packages.

When the new system was inaugurated last year, the merchants did not utilize it for their shipments out of town. It was new to them, and they didn't know how it would work. This fall, however, the merchants are flocking to the parcel post to handle their out-of-town business. They are beginning to realize its possibilities. They have found out that its rate is much cheaper than the old express rate.

THE JOHNS HOPKINS UNIVERSITY

State Scholarships in Engineering Courses.

Applications for scholarships in the Department of Engineering, established in The Johns Hopkins University under the provisions of the Laws of Maryland, Chapter 90, 1912, should now be made.

Entrance examinations for all students will be held in McCoy Hall, The Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, on Sept. 30 Oct. 2nd, 1913, beginning at 9 a. m.

If there is more than one applicant for a particular scholarship a competative examination will be held at the University immediately following the examinations for entrance.

In addition to certain collegiate scholarships, the Act provides for 6 scholarships at large and 102 scholarships, each for one year, to be apportioned among the counties and legislative districts of Baltimore city, the same number of awards so far as possible to be made each year. The undergraduate courses in Engineering will extend through four years and it has been determined to offer 33 scholarships in the year 1913-14. Allegany, Baltimore and Washington counties and the four legislative districts of Baltimore city will each be entitled to two scholarships, and each of the other counties to one scholarship in October, 1913. The six scholarships at large may also be awarded at that time.

Applicants for scholarships should address the Registrar, The Johns Hopkins University for the blank forms of application and for further information as to the examinations and the award of scholarships.—Advertisement.

Order of Publication.

John T. Steyer and wife, vs. Branard Coal Company, and Coudersport Trust Company, Trustees.

No. Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree to vacate, annul, rescind and set aside a certain lease executed by the plaintiffs to one H. M. Datesman, his heirs and assigns, and now held by the defendants.

This bill states that on June 24, 1905, the plaintiffs leased to H. M. Datesman, his heirs and assigns, all the coal underlying Military Lot No. 26, and all that part of Military Lot No. 27 not covered or held by the heirs of Israel Thompson, situate in Garrett county, Maryland, and by certain mesne and sundry conveyances and equity proceedings in the Circuit Court for Garrett County, the interest of said Datesman in said coal is now vested in the said Branard Coal Company, and in the said Coudersport Trust Company, Trustee, mortgagee, by conveyances duly of record in Garrett county aforesaid, and that by the terms of said lease covenanted to pay cents per ton for each and every ton of coal mined and taken out of said land, settlement and payment therefor to be made January and July 1st in each year during the existence of said lease, and that Branard Coal Company has failed and refused to make said payments according to said lease, and that by the further terms of said lease, the said lessee was to mine and take out the first year after beginning operations on said land the minimum of tons, and tons the second year and tons each succeeding year thereafter during the existence of said lease, and whether said number of tons be taken out or not, said lessee was to pay for said number of tons each year, and that said minimum royalty, amounting to the sum of $ per annum, has not been paid since January 1, 1911, and is now more than two and one half years in arrears, and that said Branard Coal Company refuses to make such payment, and refuses to carry out and perform its covenants, as set forth in said lease, and that the plaintiffs are being deprived of their property and the revenue therefrom to which they are entitled under said lease, and that they are entitled to a decree declaring said lease null and void, and that the same be rescinded and set aside.

The bill they prays for a decree declaring said lease null and void and at an end, and rescinding and setting the same aside, and for general relief, and an order of publication against the defendants, who are non-residents of this State, and a subpoena against said Branard Coal Company for service upon its statutory agent residing in the State of Maryland.

It is therefore ordered by the Circuit Court for Garrett County, sitting in Equity, this 4th day of October, 1913, that the plaintiffs by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 4th day of November, 1913, give notice to the said absent defendants of the object and substance of this bill, warning them to appear in this Court in person or by solicitor, on or before the 24th day of November, 1913, to show cause, if any they have, why a decree should not be passed as prayed.

16 MILES OF PIKE TO STATE.

Purchase of Stretch of Road in Montgomery Effected.

Chairman O. E. Weller, of the State Roads Commission, announced that the purchase of 16 miles of the Union Turnpike, Montgomery county, has been consummated, and that the pike will be turned over to the State not later than next Saturday.

The price for the 16 miles was $20,000. The stretch of road runs from the District of Columbia line north through Silver Spring and Norbeck to Olney, and thence east through Sandy Spring to Ashland. There is another stretch of nine miles, which will be turned over to Montgomery county without charge by the Turnpike Company. All tollgates will be removed.

Mr. Weller stated that, included in the property turned over to the State by the Turnpike Company, are rentals from leases or rights of way to an electric railway. These amount to $255 a year, which, it is stated, is equivalent to 4 per cent. an $6,000; so that the purchase price of the pike is computed by the Roads Commission to be virtually $14,000.

Resurfacing of the pike is expected to start next Monday and the Roads Commission hopes to complete four or five miles this year. The cost of resurfacing is estimated at between $4,000 and $5,000 a mile.

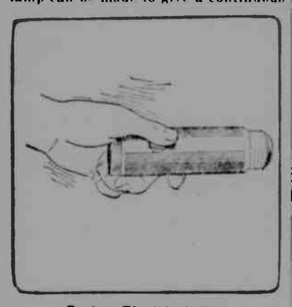
The ELECTRICAL WORLD

BIG CLOCK WITHOUT HANDS

Hours, Minutes and Seconds Are Indicated by Arrangement of Multicolored Electric Bulbs.

One of the largest electric clocks in existence has just been exhibited. It is a marvel of beauty and workmanship. The pendulum weighs over 3,000 pounds. The clock contains 5,485 multicolored electric bulbs, for which 11,000 connections were necessary and over a mile of wire. In making the connections 144 pounds of special screws were required. The dial, although it indicates hours, minutes, and seconds, has no hands.



The time in minutes is indicated by 60 series of lights, each series containing 32 globe-covered bulbs, radiating from an ornamental centerpiece to the outer edge of the dial. Shorter rows of different colored lights indicate the hour, and these change their different position 12 times during each 60 minutes, or once every five minutes. The seconds are shown by 60 lights placed at equal distances around the extreme outer edge of the face.

The hour figures are three feet high, outlined in colored lights. Each second the illumination in the outer circle of light moves forward one bulb and when the dial has been entirely circled the lights indicating the minutes also advance, and the hour hand, formed by lights, makes its slow journey at five-minute intervals. Despite the huge proportions of the clock it has been found that it keeps absolutely correct time even to the second.

NEW POCKET ELECTRIC LAMP

Continuous Light Is Supplied by Small Dynamo Instead of the Customary Dry Battery.

Instead of the customary dry battery, this ingenious pocket electric flash lamp is provided with a little dynamo which is driven by a spring says the Popular Mechanics. The lamp can be made to give a continuous light by simply depressing a lever at regular intervals of about three or four seconds, the action of the lever simultaneously releasing and rewinding the spring. The lamp is 5½ inches long by 1¾ inches in diameter.

a book, and an arm designed to support the lamp in such position that it will illuminate the pages. The location of the electric bulb interferes in no way with the turning of the pages.

Canadian Telephone Lines.

There are in Canada 4 telephone lines owned by provincial governments, 27 owned by municipalities, 368 owned by corporations, 123 owned by co-operative companies, 31 owned by partnerships and 113 private lines.

For Quick Washing.

A vertical cylindrical brush, as high as a railroad car, driven by an electric motor and supplied with water as it revolves, has been invented for quickly washing the exterior of railroad rolling stock.

Save Much Coal.

According to an English parliamentary committee the production of all of London's electric power in a few large stations would save 6,000,000 tons of coal a year and greatly lessen the smoke nuisance.

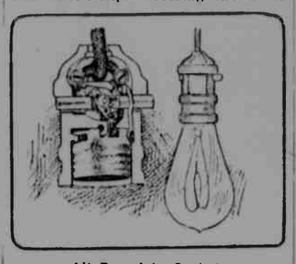
Something Spectacular.

The plans for the illumination of the Panama Pacific exposition at San Francisco in 1915 call for something entirely new in spectacular effect. Oriental color and soft lighting effects will predominate.

Talking Machine Repeats.

A talking machine may be made to repeat a record through the invention of a German of a disk on which is a return groove to carry the needle automatically from the end back to the starting point.

Largest Electro Magnet.



The world's largest electro magnet is being built in Paris at a cost of $40,000. The magnet will be placed at the disposal of all scientists for experimental purposes.

ALL PORCELAIN C-H SOCKET

Device Is Especially Adapted to Damp Locations, Such as Basements—Is Readily Installed.

The accompanying cut shows a newly designed, all porcelain, C-H socket constructed for service with heating, cooking and motor driven devices. In fact, the socket is rated to carry 660 watts, somewhat more than the energy required by a six-pound pressing iron.

The horizontal switch bar enables the current to be turned on with one hand and without twisting or jerking the socket as with a key, says the Popular Electricity. Pressing the white end of the bar turns on the current, while pressing the black end turns it off.

The socket is especially adapted to damp locations such as basements, laundries, etc., and can be wiped off with a moist cloth and made to look like new.

The socket is readily installed, as a single screw allows the halves of the casing to be separated, exposing the terminal screws for the drop cord.

Electricity for Drying.

Two applications for electric heating are used in connection with drafting work. One is the use of a portable combination heater and fan ordinarily employed by hairdressers to dry their customer's hair after washing, to dry the ink on tracings. This "wrinkle" shortens the time required to complete the tracing, as the freshly mixed lines must be dry before a T-square or triangle can be moved over the tracing. The other idea is to dry blueprints by going over them with an electric flatiron; and the flatiron is also useful to straighten out tracings and prints that have been rolled or folded.

Keeps Target Moving.

An electric attachment for a target such as is used on rifle ranges has been designed by an Australian. It keeps the target continually in motion, backward and forward on the track. The figures are constantly in action, and it is an entirely different proposition to hit once, especially in a vulnerable spot, than if they were stationary. Such a target is particularly good for use in the militia or the regular army, as in the case of war it is not likely that the enemy would stand still until somebody succeeded in shooting them.

Smallest Central Station.

The smallest electric central station in the United States is at Sacramento, Neb., which is operated by a three-horsepower coal-oil engine, and its total load consists of 30 incandescent lamps.

ELECTRICAL NOTES

Canada now has about one telephone for each 20 persons.

Wooden molding to hide electric wire is prohibited in New York.

There are now more than two million farmers in the United States using the telephone.

There are more than 3,500 books on electrical subjects in the Library of Congress at Washington.

A company has been formed in Copenhagen that will make it a business to clean and disinfect telephones.

Carbons for lights and for electro chemical purposes are being made from tar by a new Swedish process.

That wireless telephoning to and from automobiles is possible has been proved by a Los Angeles experimenter.

Private electricians and plumbers of Hamburg, Germany, are never allowed to tear up the streets for the purpose of making gas or electric light connections.

Two Berlin publishers have devised a scheme for combined telephone news and musical service to be supplied to telephone subscribers for a monthly payment of $1.75.

Most of the light rays from metallic filament electric lamps are radiated at right angles from the filaments.

There are now over two million farmers using the telephone. Over a hundred thousand farmers installed the telephone last year.

Wireless telegraph outfits will be carried by the sledge parties of the American expedition soon to start on an arctic exploration trip.

Electrically operated ironers for flat pieces, such as sheets, table cloths, towels, etc., are now being made in sizes suitable for the home.

Aluminum is to be turned out at rate of 25,000 tons annually at a new hydroelectric manufactory now under construction in North Carolina.

Ten of the most powerful electric locomotives ever built, capable of hauling 1,000 ton trains at a speed of 60 miles an hour, have been ordered by a railroad for use at its New York terminal.

COMBATING ORCHARD AND GARDEN PESTS

Duchess, One of the Choice American Grapes.

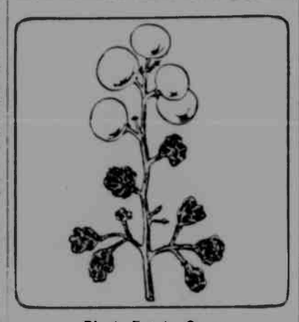
Spraying is done for the purpose of preventing injury to the fruit, foliage and wood of trees and other plants caused by disease and insects.

Diseases of plants may be caused by the growth in the tissues of bacteria or fungi. Bacteria usually grow beneath the surface and can not be combated by means of spraying. Some fungi grow upon the surface, sending feeding organs down into the tissue from which they secure nourishment from the plant sap. These fungi are reproduced by means of spores which are carried in the air until they settle upon leaf, fruit or wood, where they germinate and grow, becoming the injurious fungous tissue. If the leaves or fruit are covered with a substance which is poisonous to the fungus the spores will be killed at the time they germinate. Substances that thus prevent the growth of germinating spores are called fungicides. As a rule these fungicides must be applied in summer when the fruit or foliage is likely to be infected. However, in the case of a very few diseases like peach leaf curl, spraying in early spring before growth starts is successful.

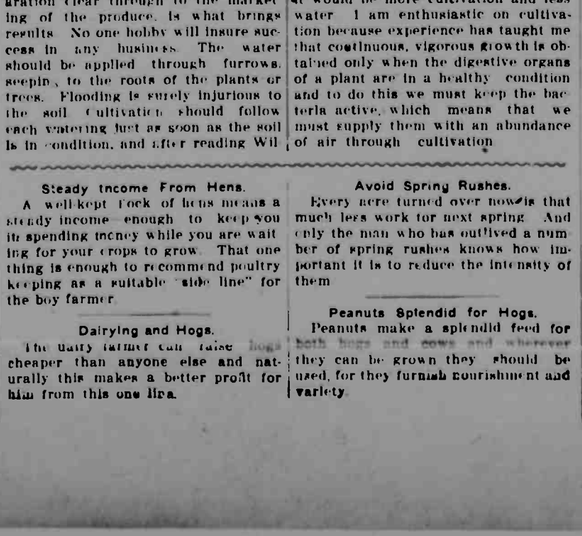


The two most important fungicides (sprays to prevent fungous diseases) for summer spraying are Bordeau mixture and lime-sulphur.

We have two classes of insecticides (sprays to kill insects). For insects that eat from the surface of the plant a poison on the leaves or fruit will kill the insect. Usually the spray used in this case is some compound containing arsenic. The most important insecticide is arsenate of lead.

There are also insecticides used to kill insects that do not eat from the surface, but penetrate the surface with their beaks and suck the juices from beneath. It is plain that such an insect could not eat any poison placed upon the leaves, but must be destroyed by a spray that kills by coming in contact with its body, so insecticides for sucking insects are sometimes spoken of as contact sprays.

Black rot is the most serious enemy of the grape. The disease may be seen on the leaves as dark spots, showing larger on the under side of the leaves. It also affects the fruit, causing it to rot, the mummified fruit hanging on the bunches, as shown in the figure.



The disease is not easily controlled when it has become serious. Spray with Bordeaux mixture 5 : 5 : 50, when about the third leaf is forming on the new shoot; just before the bloom opens and again just after the bloom falls, and give two more sprayings at intervals of two weeks. If it is very rainy and the disease has been serious in other years, it will be necessary to give even more sprayings than this. A spraying just before a rain, however, will do more good than one given just after a rain. If the vineyard has been neglected, it may be impossible to entirely control the disease in a wet season, but it can be kept in check if spraying is done each year. It also pays to clean up the vineyard each year, cutting out all bunches of mummified fruit.

FEATURES OF SUCCESSFUL IRRIGATION

Putting Up the Overhead Irrigation System. Placed on Barrels and Boxes Temporarily While Drilling Is Being Done.

If I were to name the most essential features to successful irrigation farming in the order of their importance, the thorough preparation of the soil and a perfectly fine seed bed would get first place. Next would be well developed and thoroughly matured seeds, plants or trees. Much care and thought should be given to the selection of seeds and plants. Then we come to intensive cultivation, the greatest and most effective moisture-retainer known to the science of agriculture, writes Z. L. Rogers in the Denver Field and Farm. Altogether too many of the farmers are depending entirely upon water. Of course water is one of the essentials to plant growth, but plants do not wholly depend upon water.

No one thing can possibly perfect plant development but a complete combination of work, from soil preparation clear through to the market ing of the produce, is what brings results. No one hobby will insure success in any business. The water should be applied through furrows, seepin, to the roots of the plants or trees. Flooding is surely injurious to the soil. Cultivation should follow each watering just as soon as the soil is in condition, and after reading Wilcox's Irrigation Farming I should say cultivate at least once each week between the waterings. Surely such cultural methods as these would hold moisture in the soil for six to eight weeks.

Then, if necessary, water again and continue cultivation as before, but never give water until the plants ask for it. They have their way of showing when they want a drink. The soil itself will indicate when moisture is needed. They often have eight weeks in the humid states without rain when the thermometer registers 98 degrees in the shade, but by cultivating shallow every week and keeping the soil loose with hoes in the row around the plants they experience no difficulty in retaining sufficient moisture to keep the plants in vigorously growing condition.

I never follow a hobby, but if I did it would be more cultivation and less water. I am enthusiastic on cultivation because experience has taught me that continuous, vigorous growth is obtained only when the digestive organs of a plant are in a healthy condition and to do this we must keep the bacteria active, which means that we must supply them with an abundance of air through cultivation.

Steady Income From Hens.

A well-kept flock of hens means a steady income enough to keep you in spending money while you are waiting for your crops to grow. That one thing is enough to recommend poultry keeping as a suitable "side line" for the boy farmer.

Dairying and Hogs.

The dairy farmer can raise hogs cheaper than anyone else and naturally this makes a better profit for him from this one line.

Avoid Spring Rushes.

Every acre turned over now is that much less work for next spring. And only the man who has outlived a number of spring rushes knows how important it is to reduce the intensity of them.

Peanuts Splendid for Hogs.

Peanuts make a splendid feed for both hogs and cows and wherever they can be grown they should be used, for they furnish nourishment and variety.

A DAY WITH LEFTOVERS.

To use mutton the day after—chop a small onion and fry in a tablespoonful of butter or other fat, then add a tablespoonful of flour and let it brown. Mix a tablespoonful of Worcestershire sauce, a tablespoonful of vinegar, pepper and salt and a tablespoonful of red currant jelly with a cup of water. Cook all together, and when hot add thin slices of cold cooked mutton, and simmer for fifteen minutes or until the meat is well heated through.

Miroton De Boeuf.—This is a French method of using left-over boiled or stewed beef: Cut in slices four onions and cook them in butter or fat, add a tablespoonful of flour to form a roux, or sauce, and thin this with some of the broth of the meat, or bouillon, adding pepper and salt. In this sauce, which should be extremely thin, put in the meat cut in thin slices. Let it cook on a slow fire for an hour, stirring it from time to time. If the sauce becomes too thick, add broth or water. A little tomato sauce added at the last is relished by many.

Fish and Egg Pie.—Flake a pound of cold cooked white fish, cover with chopped parsley (a tablespoonful), add a tablespoonful of anchovy essence, two tablespoonfuls of butter and a half cup of cream or milk. Cover with a pastry made with two cups of flour, a teaspoon of baking powder and a half teaspoonful of salt, with a half cup of rich cream. Bake until the crust is well done, remove from the oven, lift the cover and pour in three well beaten eggs. Replace the crust, put in the oven for a minute or two. Serve very hot.

A good pudding sauce which will be all ready to use may be made from a little of the juice poured off from juicy apples when they are stewing. When wanted, add a little lemon juice and reheat.

A delicious sauce to serve with warmed-over meats is this: Chop one dozen olives fine. Brown a tablespoonful of butter, add a tablespoonful of flour and brown again. Stir in a cup of stock; continue to stir until smooth. Season with salt, pepper and Worcestershire sauce, then add the chopped olives, and cook slowly for five minutes.

Melted ice cream should not be thrown away; it may be used in cake or cookies, leaving out the milk called for in the recipes.

There is a shady side of life,
And a sunny side as well,
And 'tis for every one to say
On which side he'd choose to dwell.
For every one unto himself
Commits a grievous sin,
Who bars the blessed sunshine out
And shuts the shadows in.
—Josephine Pollard.

THANKSGIVING TABLE.

Frozen cranberries make a delicious change from the ordinary way of serving the berries at this season. Pick over and wash a quart of berries. Dissolve two cupfuls of sugar in two cupfuls of water and heat slowly until boiling hot, then add the cranberries and cook until soft; cool and add one half cup of lemon juice. Rub through a sieve, turn into a melon mold and bury in ice and salt for four hours.

Dainty little individual pumpkin pies, baked in patty tins, are great favorites with the children and even grown-ups seem to tolerate them fairly well. Serve with a spoonful of whipped cream sprinkled with grated cheese, for the older people.

Candles, with pumpkin yellow shades for each corner of the table, go well with this centerpiece.

Thanksgiving Pudding.—To two cups of chopped suet add two cupfuls of fine bread crumbs, softened with one cup of grape juice; add three well beaten eggs, one-half cup each of brown sugar and molasses, salt, cinnamon and nutmeg to taste. Mix well and add one cup of raisins, chopped, one-half cup of dried currants, one-fourth cup of candied orange peel and a half cup of nutmeats, all well dredged with flour. Sift two teaspoonfuls of baking powder with a half cup of flour and add, beating well. Put into well buttered molds or a mold and steam three hours. When ready to serve garnish the pudding with nut meats.

Sweet potatoes cooked until tender, then buttered and sprinkled with sugar, set into the oven to brown, make a pleasant change from the every day way of serving them.

Money, because of the material things it can buy, the political influence and the social prestige that its possession facilitates, becomes an efficient minister to selfishness, and therefore a great enemy of friendliness. The remedy is, to begin to use it as soon as one has even a little bit of it, in friendly ways.
—Edward Bosworth.

THINGS WE LIKE TO KNOW.

To keep comforters and blankets clean, have a strip of white cloth about twelve inches wide to face the ends of the bedding used next to the face.

Ice can be made to last almost twice as long by wrapping well in newspapers.

When a crack appears in a stove it may often prove a great menace to life, especially if it is a coal heater. Mix wood ashes with common salt made into a paste with a little water, and plaster over the crack. It may be put on to a cold or a hot stove equally well.

Health Bran Bread.—Take two cups of graham flour, two cups of bran, two cups of white flour, one teaspoonful of salt, one egg, one pint of milk, or buttermilk, one cup of New Orleans molasses, one cup of raisins, two teaspoonfuls of soda and a half cup of boiling water. Mix well and steam three hours. Bake a half hour or more in the oven to dry off. Put into one pound baking powder cans and remove the covers when put into bake.

When one has part of a bottle of olives, pour a tablespoonful of olive oil over the liquid in the bottle and they will keep indefinitely without becoming tasteless.

A magazine heated in the oven will make a first rate foot warmer or take the place of a hot water bag without any fear of a leak.

When putting pockets on aprons, place a small piece of the goods at each corner and stitch down twice, then nothing short of a wrench will tear it down.

Those who use radiators will find that after food has come to a good boil on the stove it may be placed on the radiator, and if well covered, will continue cooking. This is especially good for long, slow cooking.

Open the gas oven for the steam to escape before heating it for baking. The moisture runs down into the hinges of the door otherwise, and will in time rust them.

One mother who has several children away from home writes with impression paper, thus making as many copies as she needs. Each gets his letter, with any personal additions, with the work of but one.

Go on with your work and be strong
Halting not in your ways,
Balking, the end half won
For an instant dole of praise.
Stand to your work and be wise,
Certain of sword and pen.
You are neither children nor gods,
But men in a world of men.
—Rudyard Kipling.

SOME GOOD THINGS.

Stir up with a spoon a soft biscuit dough and fill greased muffin pans half full. Make a hollow in the center and fill with a little marmalade or jam. Bake in a quick oven and serve with cream or a liquid sauce, flavored with lemon juice or vinegar. This is a good emergency dessert to keep in mind when there seems nothing to have for dinner.

Chili Con Carne.—Boil until tender two cups of the little brown beans. Grind a pound of round steak, put into a saucepan to cook with cold water to cover; add a tablespoonful of butter, as much red pepper as you can endure, and cook an hour and a half. When the beans are tender, add them and cook an hour longer.

Spaghetti.—Fry a clove of garlic in a tablespoonful of olive oil or butter, add two tomatoes, sliced; cook until the tomatoes are smooth and cooked to a pulp. Prepare the spaghetti by boiling in salted water until tender. Drain and add to the tomatoes, well seasoned with salt and red pepper.

Garlic is one of our most wholesome flavor vegetables, but is in disrepute because of the unwholesome manner in which it is used by some. There should be just a suggestion of the flavor, illusive and indefinable, to make a perfectly flavored dish. Garlic is said to help digestion, and preserves one from epidemics and pestilential diseases.

STIRRING THINGS UP

By C. HAMBURG.

"By the way," said Harstetter, in the middle of a peaceful dinner at his country cottage, "I asked the Powells to come across the lake with me next Saturday. I thought we ought to have them."

Presently the dead silence caused him to look up from his salad. "What's the matter?" he inquired in astonishment.

Mrs. Harstetter was gazing at him with a tragedy face. "James Harstetter," she got out at last, "I should think you would have known better! Why, this week I'm getting ready to close the cottage for the winter—and we're all going back with you next Monday—and the cretonnes will all be down and the house looks like fury without them—and the curtains—and, Mrs. Powell has never been here, and what on earth will she think of the place? With the geranium boxes all emptied and everything! And eating the scraps and canned stuff that's left—oh, I could shake you!"

"I didn't think," said Harstetter. His appetite, however, seemed quite unimpaired by the turn affairs had taken.

"A man never thinks!" cried his wife. "That's why he gets married—to have some one to do his thinking for him. And then when his wife gets things planned out he does something absolutely ridiculous and foolish and thoughtless, like you've done. You know I'll be horribly busy, because there are always so many things to do at the last minute when you're leaving a place for nine months. What'll I do with company on my hands?

"They'll want to go walking and see things and go fishing and goodness knows what else—and there's all that canned fruit for you to crate. How are you going to crate fruit when you've got to sit on the front porch being a pleasant little host to a great big fat man like Mr. Powell, who wants to smoke cigars and have refreshing drinks served to him all the time and have the women sitting around languidly ready to talk and keep him amused. If it had to be some one why couldn't you have picked out any one else on earth but the Powells? I do believe there is something left out of a man's brain that women have, some sixth sense that should keep them from doing foolish things! You are just like a little boy—the present moment is all you can manage!"

"I Just Hate You!"

"I am sorry," said Harstetter, "to have stirred up such a commotion."

Mrs. Harstetter sighed in an outraged manner. "What good does that do?" she exploded. "How easy life would be if all of us went ahead and did just as we chose with no consideration for any one else's comfort or wishes or convenience, just because we could say afterward that we were sorry and that would make it all right! I believe I'll try it, and see how you like it, James Harstetter. You'll come home some night and find there isn't any dinner and I'll say: 'Dear me! I didn't have time to order it because I wanted to go to a bridge party—I'm so-o-o sorry!'"

"That would be no excuse for not providing a hungry man with his dinner," said Harstetter.

His wife made inarticulate sounds in her throat. "You are perfectly maddening!" she said. "There is no reason why the same allowances shouldn't be made for me that you expect me to make for you. All the good sheets are in the wash this coming week and Mary'll be good and angry when I tell her she has to wash out some ahead of time so I can fix up the guestroom bed! And it's so hard to keep servants contented here in the country I should think you would have thought of that! I just know Mrs. Powell will sniff at the simplicity of the place—though when the cretonnes are up and the flower boxes are filled it isn't so bad. I hate to have people see the place when it isn't at its best. Honestly, I could cry!"

"Don't cry," said Harstetter. "What's the use?"

"How are we going to get them here now that the ferry's stopped? Could you expect Mrs. Powell, in something perfectly lovely from Paris, to walk a quarter of a mile through the sand and come across the lake in a rowboat as you do, James Harstetter? She'll hate us! I should think she'd have more sense than to come to a summer cottage at the tag end of the season! It's beyond reason to expect her to think of me—"

"Well," said Harstetter, cheerfully, "now that you've got your blood to circulating—you said you were chilly when we sat down to dinner—I'll mention that that's precisely what Mrs. Powell did do! She very sweetly declined the invitation, because she said she knew you'd be so busy packing up!"

"Jimmy Harstetter, I just hate you," exclaimed his wife.—Chicago Daily News.

WOMAN ESCAPES OPERATION

By Timely Use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Here is her own statement.

Cary, Maine.—"I feel it a duty I owe to all suffering women to tell what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for me. One year ago I found myself a terrible sufferer. I had pains in both sides and such a soreness I could scarcely straighten up at times. My back ached, I had no appetite and was so nervous I could not sleep, then I would be so tired mornings that I could scarcely get around. It seemed almost impossible to move or do a bit of work and I thought I never would be any better until I submitted to an operation. I commenced taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and soon felt like a new woman. I had no pains, slept well, had good appetite and was fat and could do almost all my own work for a family of four. I shall always feel that I owe my good health to your medicine."—Mrs. HAYWARD SOWERS, Cary, Maine.

If you are ill do not drag along until an operation is necessary, but at once take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

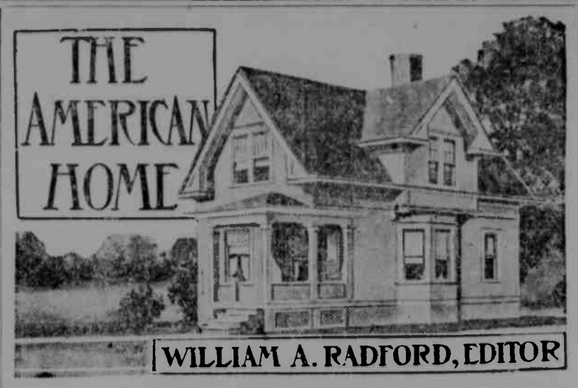
SPEAKS FOR ITSELF
Experience of a Southern Man.

"Please allow me to thank the originator of Postum, which in my case, speaks for itself," writes a Fla. man. "I formerly drank so much coffee that my nervous system was almost a wreck." (Tea is just as injurious because it contains caffeine, the drug found in coffee.) "My physician told me to quit drinking it but I had to have something, so I tried Postum.

"To my great surprise I saw quite a change in my nerves in about 10 days. That was a year ago and now my nerves are steady and I don't have those bilious sick headaches which I regularly had while drinking coffee.

"Postum seems to have body-building properties and leaves the head clear. And I do not have the bad taste in my mouth when I get up mornings. When Postum is boiled good and strong, it is far better in taste than coffee. My advice to coffee drinkers is to try Postum and be convinced."



Name given by Postum Co. Battle Creek, Mich. Write for copy of the little book, "The Road to Well-ville."

Postum comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled.

Instant Postum is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. Grocers sell both kinds.

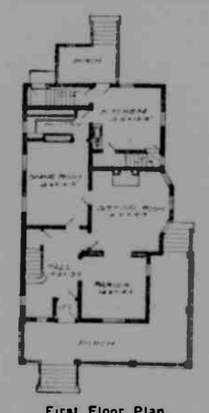
If you have $3,000 to put into a house, and have family enough to need four or five bedrooms, you probably could not find a better plan than the one here presented. It is large, roomy and sensible. This house looks well when it is new; and it never will go out of fashion, because there are no faddy notions worked into it, and it is so thoroughly well built that it will defy time and the elements for a good many years.

I have known of many instances where fancy fashions were carried into house building to such an extent that I should rather have the materials that were used in building than the house after it is finished. With the exception of a better arrangement of the partitions to economize room and increase comfort, this style of house has been built for twenty or thirty years, and it has always been popular. Such houses sell readily, especially when they are built in a good residence section of the town.



A house as large as this, practically 27 by 45 feet, should have a lot at least 50 feet wide. The appearance of a good-sized house is often injured by placing it on a narrow lot. There is no sense in economizing at the wrong place. A 50-foot lot may cost one or two hundred dollars more than a 40-foot lot; but in five years' time, if the neighborhood improves, as good residence neighborhoods usually do, the owner would consider a couple of hundred dollars a very small compensation for a slice of ten feet taken from one side of his home lot. This is one of the side issues in building that some men are prone to overlook. Successful men are the ones who look ahead a few years before making their final arrangements to build.

Second Floor Plan.

One of the first considerations before starting to build is the drainage. On this account an elevation is worth a great deal. The sewers may cost nearly as much per lot on high ground as they do through the lower sections of the town, because usually the lots are wider, although the diameter of the sewer may be considerable less. Sewers start from the higher levels, and increase in size as they go down hill. Those living on the lower lots may have plenty of outlet; but I have noticed that new sewers are needed oftener, and extensive repairs are a great deal more aggravating, in the hollows than they are on the hills.

First Floor Plan.

There is only one sewer objection that I know of on the higher ground, and that is that the air in the sewers has a habit of moving to the highest points of escape. This is not always the case, but I have often noticed in passing sewer openings that there is quite an outward draught of disagreeable, steamy sewer odors that is anything but pleasant. I have noticed this on lower ground, but I think it is a great deal more common on the hills. I do not know that this escaping sewer steam is detrimental to health. As a usual thing, plumbers are supposed to get rather more than their share of sewer perfume, but so far as I know they are a very healthy lot of fellows. At the same time, if I knew that a sewer opening would act as a ventilator, I should very much prefer moving my house a block or two away from it, but, as Josh Billings used to say: "Them is some uv the things that no feller kin find out." No matter what we do, we have to take some chances. The man who builds a house is no exception.

This plan is especially designed for a good-sized family, where there are several children. There should be children in every family, and there should be plenty of house accommodation to make things pleasant and comfortable for them. They should have their bedrooms to themselves as much as possible, and the rooms should be furnished to their liking. The tastes of children are simple and easily catered to, and it pays to do it.

Before the carpenters go away, have them make a flagpole, and put it high up, where it will show well. Then buy a good flag, and help the "kids" to hoist it every holiday, but especially the morning of the Fourth of July. It will give them a lesson in patriotism that they will never forget. These little instances are remembered in after years. They help to tie the interest of growing children to the home.

Arrange a playground for the children in the backyard. Give them a corner with a load or two of sharp sand. Put a cover over the sand pile if you can afford it, but give them the sand pile anyway. It will be worth a great deal to the "kids" in health, and it will save you a great deal of anxiety, and probably some expense in doctor's bills. Build them another playhouse in the attic for stormy days. Don't you remember, when you were a "kid," how you used to enjoy playing in the woodshed on rainy days? The neighbors' youngsters came in and helped to raise a great row, and your mother usually put up with it patiently. Well, we haven't got any woodsheds now; firewood trees are all burned up, and we don't need much of a building to hold coal; but we still have the children, and we can make comfortable playrooms for them if we have the inclination to do so. Rainy days are long days for children, unless they have some place to go other than the kitchen or the living room. They love to make all the noise they feel like making.

Phoebe Is Cautious.

The other day in my walk I came upon two phoebes' nests under overhanging rocks, both with half fledged young in them, and in neither case were the parent birds in evidence. They did not give their secret away by setting up the hue and cry that nesting birds usually set up on such occasions. I finally saw them, as silent as shadows, perched near by, with food in their beaks, which they finally swallowed as my stay was prolonged. And the nests, both on a level with my eye, were apparently filled only with a motionless mass of bluish mold. As I gently touched them, instead of four or five heads with open mouths springing up, the young only settled lower in the nest and disposed themselves in a headless, shapeless mass. The phoebe is evidently a very cautious bird, though no birds are more familiar about our porches and outbuildings.—John Burroughs in the Atlantic Monthly.

Midnight Oils.

"I suppose that you are relieved of considerable expense now that it is no longer necessary for you to supply the midnight oil for your son at college?"

"On the contrary," explained the father, "since commencement I have been impressed with the relatively higher cost of burning midnight gasoline."

"I've never seen her."

"Neither have I. I was judging by the hand-me-downs he wears."

MILITANTS LASH PREMIER ASQUITH

Make Attack With Dog Whips on British Statesman.

FOR ARRESTS IN EDINBURG.

Ambassador Page Had a Narrow Escape—Suffragettes Locked In Till Meeting Is Over.

Edinburgh, Scotland. — Premier Asquith was attacked by militant suffragettes armed with dog whips. He was driving in an automobile, accompanied by his daughter, Miss Violet Asquith, and Sir John Graham, a Scotch justice of the peace. The victims were more frightened than hurt.

The automobile was passing through the village of Plean, five miles from Falkirk, when it ran into a suffragette ambush. The "wild women," as they are called here, under cover of a shower of papers, rushed at the car and belabored the Premier and his companions. They disappeared before the police car, following that of the Premier, had reached the scene.

Ambassador Page had a narrow escape from suffragettes at his Sheffield visit with Mrs. and Miss Page. They were guests at Parkhead Hall, the home of Sir Robert Hadfield and Lady Hadfield (nee Wickersham), the sister of the former Attorney-General of the United States, and on Wednesday night the Pages attended the banquet of their Cutlers' Guild.

A band of suffragettes succeeded in gaining entrance to Cutler's Hall and hid in a room adjoining the banquet hall, awaiting the right moment to inject "votes for women" into the after-dinner oratory.

They were discovered in the nick of time and the Sheffield police locked the door on the militants and kept them cooped up until the dinner was over and the guests had departed. They were then released, crestfallen.

Four women, well known in Edinburgh and Glasgow as militant suffragettes, were arrested in Edinburgh as principals in the attack on Premier Asquith.

7,000 Suffragettes Parade.

New York. Suffragists of Greater New York, reinforced by many out-of-town allies, marched two and a half miles through the streets of Brooklyn as a demonstration of their strength. Seven thousand women and 1,500 men were assigned places in the line of march.

Women To Besiege Congress.

Washington.—With the program completed, practically all arrangements have been made for the annual convention of the National American Suffrage Association, which will meet here December 1 for a five days' session. Upward of 1,000 suffragists are expected to attend and an array of noted speakers are on the program for addresses.

Budget Committee Submits Estimates Of Next Year's Expenses.

New York.—The budget committee of the Board of Estimate announced that it had drawn up a budget calling for only $192,995,551 for New York city's housekeeping expenses next year. Although this is an increase of $284,410 over the budget for 1913, it shows the smallest increase of any budget for many years. As a rule the yearly increase has been about $10,000,000. The committee estimated the general fund of the city at $12,500,000, indicating that the tax rate for Manhattan might be reduced next year from $1.81 to $1.77.

COLLEGE TO GET $1,500,000.

Peabody Board Will Aid School For Teachers As Nashville.

Nashville, Tenn.—Friends of George Peabody College for Teachers announced that the last $5,000 of the $1,000,000 fund, on the raising of which depended an additional gift of $500,000 by the Peabody board, had been secured. As a result, when the Peabody board meets in New York this week it is expected the college will be $1,500,000 richer. This will make the total endowment of the college $3,250,000.

The revised estimate of Japan's rice crop for 1913 is now placed at 263,933,975 bushels, a 12,000,000-bushel increase over the crop for 1912, and over 14,000,000 bushels above the average annual yield. Prior to the recent heavy summer rains the rice crop for 1913 had been estimated at upward of 270,000,000 bushels. A good rice crop in Japan is ordinarily considered a basis for prosperous business conditions throughout the year, the average consumption per capita being placed at five bushels.

PLEASANT FOR MISS SMITH

Of Course Harvard Man May Not Have Meant Anything, But Then Again.

There is a man in this town who knows a good story with which to begin an after-dinner speech. He has saved it for two years, and has not had a chance to use it. He has not heard anybody else use it in that time. He offers it here in the hope that it may aid those martyrs not listed in Fox's book—of whom the toastmaster demands that most difficult oratorical effort—the happy after-dinner talk about something which one speaker has already discussed. Here it it, very short, but lending itself gracefully to elaboration:

A Harvard graduate student went to Chicago to pursue his studies. At one session of the class he attended the first speaker was a Chicago woman, a doctor of philosophy, severe and plain, but learned. The Harvard man was called on next.

"The discussion offers room for endless discussion," he began. Then he bethought him of chivalry, "but really when my learned colleague, Miss Smith, rose to her feet, it seemed that the ground was covered."—Newark Evening Star.

Nose-Blowing Drills.

A few years of school dental clinics have made toothbrush drills a daily familiar idea in many cities. It took the Toronto public nurses, or rather their supervisor, Lina L. Rogers, to originate another drill quite as unique and importance. Since last October the school children of Toronto, in squads of 20, have practiced daily nose-blowing drills, and the effect on the freshness of the atmosphere of the school rooms has been so noticeable that the teachers have become assiduous in seeing to it that no child comes to school unprovided with a pocket handkerchief. They often, indeed, themselves, order the drills without waiting for the coming of the nurse. The effect of the drill is perceptible already on individual children, in cases of catarrh, and the doctors predict that it will have an appreciable effect in time in lessening adenoids and other throat and nose affections.—The Survey.

RED, ROUGH HANDS MADE SOFT AND WHITE

For red, rough, chapped and bleeding hands, dry, fissured, itching, burning palms, and painful finger-ends, with shapeless nails, a one-night Cuticura treatment works wonders. Directions: Soak the hands, on retiring, in hot water and Cuticura Soap. Dry, anoint with Cuticura Ointment, and wear soft bandages or old, loose gloves during the night. These pure, sweet and gentle emollients preserve the hands, prevent redness, roughness and chapping, and impart in a single night that velvety softness and whiteness so much desired by women. For those whose occupations tend to injure the hands, Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment are wonderful.

Why Poison Ivy Poisons.

Poison ivy has long been a mystery; both to scientists and laymen; why and with what manner it causes the peculiar rash and irritating inflammation have puzzled both botanists and physicians. At last the reason has been discovered. Dr. Mirande of Paris read to the Academy of Sciences in that city recently the results of his study of the poisonous weed. Poison ivy contains prussic acid. This is found principally in the young leaves and buds; in the older leaves there is very little of it. In three and one-half ounces of young leaves there is about a quarter of a grain of the acid. As with other plants in which prussic acid is found, the poisonous substance does not exist in its perfect form, but develops as soon as the leaves are bruised, a chemical action being set up through the union of an enzyme with a glucosid.

Hard to Reach Her.

A good planter's wife, "befo' de wah," was teaching a jet black house girl, just fourteen and fresh from the plantation, the alphabet. Betsy had learned the first two letters, but always forgot the useless letter "C."

"Don't you see with your eyes, Betsy? Can't you remember the word see?" said the mistress.

"Yassum," answered Betsy, but she couldn't. Five minutes later Betsy began again bravely: "A—B—" and there she stopped.

"What do you do with your eyes, Betsy?"

"I sleeps with 'em, mistiss." And this ended for that day the effort to "educate" Betsy.

Brought $100 A Head.

A herd of 230 cattle brought $23,799.-05 at Ghent, W. Va., or on an average of $100 per head. The cattle were purchased by K. B. McMue, of Nicholas county, from John R. Griffith, and were driven through to Nicholas county to be wintered. The high price at which cattle are selling should give considerable impetus to the breeding of more cattle in the state.

Some fine sales of Garrett county cattle have been recently made. There is no reason why our farmers should not have $100 cattle to sell.

SINCE the passage of the Tariff bill the city of Baltimore has received three consignments of beef, 20,000 pounds each, from Canada. It is needless to say that there has been no decrease in the price of beef to the consumer.

Had a Long Walk.

Wm. A. Murray, a traveling man representing a large tank manufacturing Company, was in Frostburg last Friday. He had some business at Grantsville. He enquired of a man he met how far it was to Grantsville? The reply was, "Five miles." Mr. Murray thought that would be a nice walk and started on the journey. After walking what he thought must be five miles, he enquired again the distance to Garrett county's popular village on the pike. He was astounded when the reply came, "It is about 10 miles." He would not turn back, but pushed on untill he reached Grantsville. The day was real wintery and part of the road very rough. Instead of reaching the town by dinner time it was 3 p. m. when he reached the Nationol hotel.

SUDDEN DEATHS.

Mr. David M. Evans, one of Lonaconing's oldest and most prominent citizens, was found dead at an early hour yesterday morning by a train crew along the tracks of the B. and O. Railroad near the pulp mill in Luke. The remains were taken to Piedmont to the Fredlock undertaking establishment, where a coroner's jury rendered a verdict of death by exposure.

D. N. Shaffer, one of Rowlesburg's oldest and most honored citizens, met death suddenly last Tuesday by falling from the porch roof of Dr. Brynar's residence, striking his head on the pavement, dislocating his neck Drs. Marple and Proudfoot were summoned immediately but were unable to restore him to consciousness. He died in less than an hour after being hurt.

Mr. Shaffer for years has been a well known contractor and builder, having built many of the business houses and dwellings of the town. He leaves a wife, five children and several brothers and a host of relatives and friends.

Pratty Hard To Believe.

The automobile was a thing unheard of to a mountaineer in one community, and he was very much astonished one day when he saw one go by without any visible means of locomotion. His eyes bulged however, when a motor cycle followed closely in its wake and disappeared like a flash around a bend in the road. "Gee whiz!" he said, turning to his son, "who'd 'a s'posed that thing had a colt."

The National Womans' Christian Temperance Union at its convention Tuesday elected, for the fifteenth time Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, president, and Mrs. Francis P. Parks, of Evanston, Ill., secretary. Both of these ladies ladies are well known in this vicinity. Mrs. Parks for a number of years occupied a cottage at the Park.

The first year of democracy in power at Washington will be characterized by the passage of many radical laws; the rest of them will be spent in apologizing for them.

PARCEL POST PROFITABLE.

Earnings During Calendar Year 1913 Will Be About $30,000,000

It became known that the profits of the Government from the operation of the new parcel post system during the calendar year 1913 would be about $30,000,000. The new system became effective on January 1 last. It was estimated that the profits for the first year would be about $15,000,000 but the actual figures now in possession of postal officials convince them that the profit will be $30,000,000 for the first year.

Plans Rejected For Potomac River.

Lieut. Col. William C. Langfitt, of the Engineer Corps of the Army, Washington, sent a notification to the effect that the report on a preliminary examination of the Potomac river, with a view of its improvement from Washington to Cumberland has been completed and is unfavorable to the project. This survey was authorized by the River and Harbors Act of Congress, passed on July 25, 1912. It called for a survey of the Potomac river, from Washington to Cumberland, with a view to making it navigable by locks or otherwise. Communities all the way from Washington to Cumberland were interested in this project and four states were awaiting the report having interested themselves through their members of Congress.

The reason given by Col. Langfitt, for the unfavorable report on the project are comprised by him in the notice he sent out, in a single sentence:

"That the very large cost of any suitable improvement and of its after operation and maintenance are not justified at the present time by any resulting benefits to commerce.

This appeal may be taken to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, a permanent body sitting in Washington, to which the unfavorable report in the upper Potomac river project has now been referred.

Both Legs Broken

Joseph Welsh, a teacher in the Pittsburgh high school, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. K. A GREAT SNOW STORM VISITS THIS COUNTY

De'ays Railroad Traffic--Service On R. F. D. Routes Abandoned.

When the people of this mountain summit awoke Sunday morning they were surprised to find the ground covered with six inches of snow. It continued to snow and blow for the next two days. Bushes and young trees were bent down to the ground, and the limbs of the mighty oaks were heavily festooned with snow. The snow drifted badly, greatly interfering with the movement of trains, causing them to be many hours behind time. Travel on the public highways was closed on account of the immense snow drifts, in some places more than eight feet high. All of the R. F. D. and star mail routes leading out of Oakland had to be abandoned. One or two carriers succeeded in getting a mile or two out of town. It is estimated that at least twelve inches of snow fell during the storm. Monday morning Blaine Geisman undertook to take Prof. Teats and Miss Margaret Hart to Crellin, but had to turn back after going about a mile. Tuesday morning Mr. Ashby, the Accident mail carrier, accompanied by his father, started out with the mail. By persistent effort and much shoveling of snow he succeeded in reaching Accident about 6:15 p. m. After the mail was changed he started on his return trip, but only got as far as Hoyes, where he remained all night. Mr. George Geissman, the carrier, succeeded in getting the mail through to Sines and Swallow Falls. The two R. F. D. carriers failed to deliver their mail.

It will be several days before all the roads will be open for travel. At Mountain Lake Park a number of electric light poles were blow down and many of the wires were broken. The entire line of wires will have to be overhauled before they can be put in service.

No one can recall such a storm in the month of November. It was a regular mid-winter storm. Yesterday was an ideal winter day. A most delightful and welcome change.

THIS COUNTY MAY FURNISH TREE

A Tremendous Pine Wanted As Municipal Christmas Tree in Baltimore.

The people of Baltimore have been planning for some weeks to have an unusual Christmas celebration by inaugurating a movement to have a municipal Christmas tree which is to be ladened with gifts for the poor of that city and distributed uuder the patronage of a committee, appointed for the purpose. Where to get the tree has been a problem that has confrunted the managers of the project. Some have wanted to send to the pine woods of Maine while others of the city were in favor of securing it at some other point. The committee, however, wants a Maryland grown tree, and how to secure it was outlined in an interview with Dr. Henry W. McComas published in yesterday's Sun, who has been in Baltimore for some time past to watch over several patients in Johns Hopkins Hospital, and who is stopping at the Hotel Kernan.

Upon the subject of the municipal tree Dr. McComas said to the Sun reporter:

"I have been following the progress of the arrangments through THE SUN," said Dr. McComas, "and I am pleased to see the community take it up. It is a grand idea. But that tree should certainly not be brought in from another State. We have trees big enough right here in Maryland. If anyone doubts it, let him go to Garrett county and see the stately white pines there. Some of them are enormous. The Ashby Lumber Company, at Oakland, or the Kendall Lumber Company, at Crellin, Md., know all about these trees. Why not have the committee get into communication with them?"

An Educational Rally.

The Board of School Commissioners of this county has arranged for an Educational Rally to be held at Friendsville, Friday, November 21st. This rally has been called for by the State Board of Education, and several of its membes will be present, including its secretary, Dr. M. Bates Stephens, States Superintendent of Schools.

These rallies are being held in each of the counties of the state, for the purpose of centering the attention of the people upon these principles that will make for the improvement of the local and state school systems. Several bills will be introduced at the coming session ot the Legislature at the instance of the educational authorities of the State, it is to these that the attention of the public is called. Several problems of a local nature will also be empasized at this rally, one of them being better school attendance upon the part of the boys and girls of this county.

A holiday has been declared in all the schools of the county, the teachers or pupils of which attend the rally. If the weather permits, a large parade of public officials, teachers and pupils will be conducted, for which the Friendsville band has been engaged. All citizens of the county interested in the schools are invited to attend.

Securing Positions for Students.

Johns Hopkins University is to establish a bureau to assist students and graduates to secure positions. A similar bureau is being conducted at the University of Maryland under the direction of Samuel Want, an instructor in the Law Department. The purpose of the bureau is remunerative and then to give the students an oppotunity while pursuing their studies to do practial work in the line of their professions.

Rev. and Mrs. E. Manges will leave Oakland tomorrow morning for Lemoyne, Pa., to assist in the installation of his son Edwin L. as pastor of the Lutheran church, of that city, on next Sabbath. Mr. and Mrs. Manges expect to be absent about ten days.

Chief Judge Henry D. Harlan resigned from the Supreme Bench of Baltimore to become general counsel for the Fidelity Trust Company.

Steps are being taken for theorganization of a State university through the combination of the University of Maryland, St. John's College, Washington College, the Maryland Agricultural College and Western Maryland College.

APPALAGHIAIN RANGE BURIED UNDER SNOW

Storm Continued Unabated And Communication Demoralized.

The snow, sleet and wind which swept West Virginia and Western Maryland, a large portion of Ohio and Western and Northern Pennslyvania the first part of the week, crippling all means of transportation and seriously retarding wire communication, continued unabated from Sunday morning until Tuesday night in the neighborhood of Oakland and Terra Alta, W. Va., and other mountain areas, snow from 12 to 24 inches deep being reported in some places. The visitation, instead of following the coast, as is generally the case, jumped over mountain ranges and engulfed a disturbance that had previously started over the Lake Superior region.

An extraordinary snow fall is recorded from points available in Ohio, Western Maryland, West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania. The fall is from 10 to 16 inches. Thousands of miles of wire are prostrated, broken by falling poles or trees; scores of towns were in darkness throughout Sunday night; train service was seriously handicapped and trolly lines over a wide area were practically put out of commission.

Despite the suddenness and severity of the storm, which caught railroad, street car and telegraph companies by its swift descent, few fatalities were reported. Railroad trains were from 1 to 15 hours late. Telephone lines were carried down under the weight of the snow. Several towns in Allegheny county, Pennsylvania, were without electric light service.

Beginning with a light rain early Saturday morning, the storm had assumed the proportions of a gale by Sunday noon. Twice as much snow fell as has ever been recorded by the Pittsburgh Weather Bureau for the entire month. Records which have held for 34 years were broken. The temperature dropped from 48 degrees to 20 degrees in less than 15 hours.

Gratton was completely isolated, all the telegraph and telephone lines were out of commission. The only wires out of Grafton connecting with Clarksburg went down Monday morning under the weight of the snow.

B. & O. Passenger train No. 1, to St. Louis, which left Cumberland Sunday night about 8:30 o'clock, was greatly delayed in descending Cranberry grade. The flagman was compelled to walk the track ahead of the train in the biting cold a distance of 12 miles to keep a lookout for telegraph poles, cross-arms and wires that had fallen across the track.

Five trainloads of telegraph camp cars were sent out from Cumberland Monday morning to points on the west end of the Cumberland division.

Reports from the Western Maryland Railroad offices state the snow tall in the neighborhood of Thomas was from 15 to 20 inches deep, while at Markleton, on the Connellsville division, it was 24 inches deep. Dispite this, traffic is moving all right on this division, the tie up being on the West Virginia division. Nothing is known of conditions west of Thomas, as the wires remain down.

Mr. Herbert H. White, of Terra Alta, recently elected cashier of the National bank to be established at Albright, W. Va., spent yesterday in Oakland on a visit to Mr. and Mrs. S. T. Jones.

Johns Hopkins Hospital is by far the finest hospital in the world, according to Dr. Ralph Vincent, recognized as the leading medical authority in the world on prevention of diseases in children.

Mrs. E. F. Grayson, of Fostoria, Ohio, who attended her father's (Rev. Clary) funeral at Deer Park, underwent an operation at the Western Maryland hospital, Cumberland. She is improving rapidly.

Miss Helen Townshend, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Townshend, of Oakland, underwent a painful but successful surgical operation for throat trouble at Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, Tuesday.

Lewis Sellers, one of Garrett county's progressive farmers, has on exhibition in the large show windows of Messrs. D. E. Offutt & Sons' store a splendid sample of white corn which he raised on his farm, near Oakland.

The Aid Society of the Western Maryland Hospital has undertaken to collect a sufficient fund to build and equip a sun parlor in connection with the new portico for which a contract has been let by the board of directors and which will extend along the entire front of the building.

Mr. W. L. Thomas spent several days recently or a visit to relatives at Fairmont, W. Va.

At the rectory yesterday a silver tea was given by the Ladies Guild which was largely attended.

The trouble with the income tax law appears to be an original absence of information and common sense at the source, where such things should have been collected before any attempt was made to frame a measure for action by Congress.

A STRANGE HUNTING EXPERIENCE.

A Newspaper Man Seldom Well-He Never Lies.

P. L. Livengood, editor of the Frostburg Spirit of Frostburg, gives the following interesting account of a hunting trip in his paper of last week:

The editor of this paper once had a similar experience to that of Mr. Garlitz. It happened when the editor was a lad 13 years old. He went gunning for wild ducks along the Casselman river, near Salisbusy, Pa., one day when the elements raged in their fury and snow and rain fell at intervals all day long.

Locating a big flock of ducks on a big stretch of dead water known as Flog Pond, he stealthily crawled through the tall swamp grass of an adjacent meadow untill he came in range of the ducks. Raising his head and sholders a foot or two from the ground, he aimed at the ducks through some brush growing near the water's edge, and fired.

The result was surprising, for he killed three ducks on the water and about a halt-dozen quail that were in the bushes through which the shot was fired, but unobserved by the youthful hunter until some unharmed ones in the flock began to fly away, and the dying ones were noticed fluttering in the bushes.

Reader, imagine if you can the youthful hunter's excitement at that moment! He had read the life of Meshach Browning, the great hunter who figured so prominently in Garrett county during the early days of Western Maryland, and up to that time regarded him as the greatest man that ever lived. But after firing the shot from the old shotgun that killed three ducks and about twice that many quail at the same time, Meshach Browning, the idol in the writer's youthful mind crumbled and fell. No more was he a hero, but rather an object of pity, if not actually of contempt, in the estimation of the youthful hunter.

Soliloquizing, he said: "Did Meshach Browning ever kill that many birds in one shot?" And he answered: "Naw, bet yer life he didn't!" And it is a safe bet that old Meshach never did. But how to get the ducks was the next question. They were in mid stream, where the water was about 10 feet deep and very wide. A strong gale was sweeping up stream, and the dead ducks seemed to remain almost stationary. Now, be it known the writer never was blessed (or should we say cursed?) with a very large stock of patience. He wanted those ducks, and being a good swimmer almost from the time he was knee-high to a duck, a graduate from the old "deep hole" near Little Crossings bridge, below Grantsville, he just yanked off all of his clothes, except underwear, of which he had none to yank off, as boys in those days had no use for such luxuries. Yes, he undressed while the snow-flakes were falling thick and fast, and into the icy waters he leaped and soon had the ducks out on the bank.

Whether God tempered the wind to the "shorn lamb," or whether the boy's enthusiasm kept him warm, he never knew nor never cared. It just seemed like those dead ducks were saying: "The water's fine, come in!" And really it was fine, so refreshing, ugh! and the experience was along Meshach Browning lines. Did the boy catch cold or get sick? Not on your life! He didn't know how to get sick, those days, and he enjoyed the swimming so well that he played dog for another hunter the balance of the day, bringing ducks out of the water whenever the other fellow killed any, which was pretty often.

This is also a true story, for editors never—well, hardly ever lie, and this is one of the instances where the truth is more interesting than a related hunting incident that never happened would be.

AGRICULTURAL ASSOCIATION OE GARRETT COONTY

Reorganized for 1914 At Its Annual Meeting—Plans For a Bigger Fair Next Year.

At the annual meeting of The Agricultural Association of Garrett county, held on Wednesday afternoon of last week, the old officers were re-elected with one or two exceptions and plans were discussed for bigger things for 1914.

The meeting was well attended and much interest was manifested in the future of the organization. Ex-Senator W. McCulloh Brown and Attorney Fred. A. Thayer were present and discussed matters pertaining to next year's Fair.

The following are the officers for the ensuing year: President, R. E. Sliger; vice president, W. McCulloh Brown; secretary-treasurer, Jas. D. Hamill; directors, Mrs. E. Z. Tower, Harland L. Jones and Jos. T. Glotfelty. These directors with the officers will constitute the governing body of the Association for the coming year and will be empowered to appoint district directors in each election district ot the county and the adjoining counties of our sister states.

A number of new by-laws, rules and regulations were passed for the better government of the association and the conduct of its annual exhibit to be held during the early fall of 1914.

The secretary-treasurer submitted his report of the finances as follows:

RECIEPTS:

Amount from membership fees.	$240.00
Amount from admissions	993.00
Amount from advertising, premium list	131.00
Amount from concessions and entrance fees	207.65

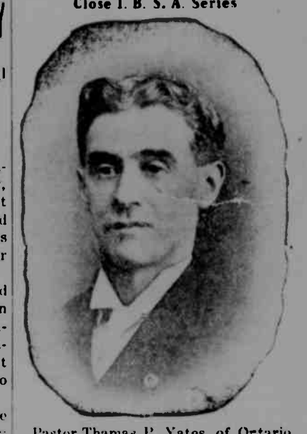
There are some unadjusted premiums and incidental bills, not yet presented for payment and enough rents due the association to pay these accounts and the association has in storage for next year's exhibit, material and tables to the value of about $300.00 all of which is paid for and storage fees all paid, so that our annual exhibit next year will start off with very much less expense than the present year.



The officers of the association will hold a meeting at an early date at which plans will be formulated for next year's exhibit and it is hoped that every citizen of the county will feel free to offer any suggestions for the betterment of the fair for 1914.

TO SPEAK HERE

Thomas P. Yates, of Ontario, To Close I. B. S. A. Series

Pastor Thamas P. Yates, of Ontario, will give the last lecture of the I. B. S. A. series, Thursday evening, Nov. 20, at 9:45 o'clock in the Empire Theatre.

Considerable interest has been manifested in this series of unsectarian Bible lectures. The subjects have been attractive, and the speakers able men. The subject of the closing lecture is: "Two Salvations, but no Second Chance." Many are commenting on the "Second Chance" theory, some claiming that those who live wickedly here will get another chance hereafter, while others think that only one chance will be afforded to anyone. This is said to be most interesting lecture of the series. With an able Bible scholar for the speaker, and a lively theme for dicussion, a good turnout is expected.

Note: Pastor MacPherson, of New York City, will lecture tonight at the Maryland Theatre instead of the Court House as advertised last week. Topic "Victory O'er the Grave."

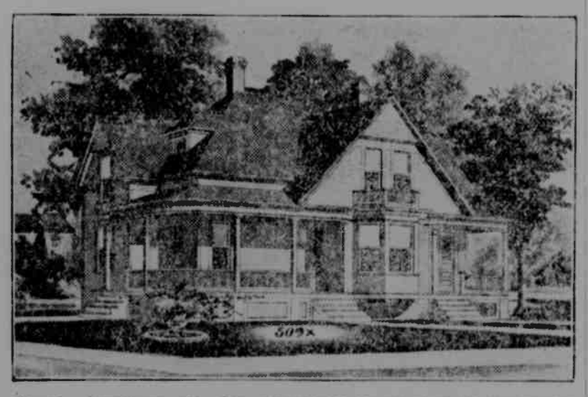
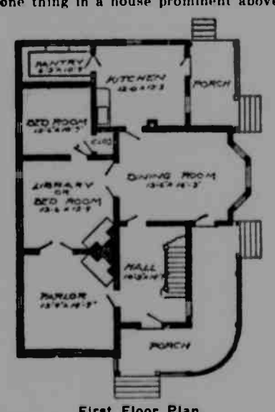
THE AMERICAN HOME



Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 178 West Jackson boulevard, Chicago, Ill., and only enclose two-cent stamp for reply.



In some locations a house of one story and a half looks better than a higher one. Some folks like to build low houses and to make them wider. There are all kinds of houses and all sorts of people, so that everyone should be satisfied. There is a comfortable look about the little cottage here illustrated that I like. It has a roomy, comfortable, cool appearance for summer; and it looks as though a good furnace in the cellar would make it warm and cozy in the winter, too. It is 30x45 feet long on the ground, with the addition of two comfortable porches.

This house should face the north. Not every house plan is suitable for a lot with a northern exposure. Generally speaking, a southern frontage is preferred; but sometimes a northern outlook is desirable. It is not possible to face every house to the south, because there are not sites enough of this kind to go around. There are advantages in a northern exposure, with a house built like this, which offset some of the disadvantages. The parlor, library and downstairs bedroom could get the east sun in the morning. The kitchen would be bright and cheerful while the work is going on in the forenoon, and the dining room would be pleasant in winter time from ten or eleven o'clock in the morning until night. The hallways, both upstairs and down, could be spared for the northern exposure, because hallways are not occupied except as passageways.

There is an opportunity in this house to put in two grates, one in the library and one in the parlor. A great deal of attention is now being paid to grates and mantels. Some new California grates are raised above the floor of the room, set upon a sort of step or pedestal. The idea is that raising the fire slightly gets it up where it may be seen to better advantage, and it is said to be a little cleaner. Sometimes the fire step reaches out in front like a hearth and extends on one side to the outer edge of the chimney. Architects and builders are giving more attention to grates and mantels, and the result is that some extraordinary effects are being introduced into expensive houses. It is all right to make an interesting feature of a grate and mantel; but it is all wrong to make any one thing in a house prominent above everything else. There is such a thing as harmony in house construction, as well as in dress or music.

One reason why open fires are not more popular is because the draft of the chimney has so often been left out of the contract. It is easy to specify the size and height, and to stipulate the amount of brick to be incorporated in the chimney; but it is not so easy to specify the amount of air that shall pass up the flue in a given length of time. The draft however is more important than any other part of the chimney. Without a good draft it is impossible to have a satisfactory fire. Builders of chimneys seldom agree about the proper way to insure a "draw." If the fire will not draw, it is an intolerable nuisance. It drives everybody out of the room with tear stained eyes and unprintable expressions. It also leaves a trail of smoke on the walls, and other things very much to the annoyance of the housekeeper.

Some masons insist that a chimney must have a big throat in order to make it draw; others are very particular to have a long, narrow opening above the fire pot; but probably no man understands exactly why one chimney will have a good draft, while another chimney that looks just like it will have no draft at all. Some chimneys with a big throat fail to draw, and others with comparatively small openings work very satisfactorily.

Some of the best looking chimneys are the poorest in this respect. Sometimes an outside chimney will not draw well because it is too cold. When air gets heated, it naturally goes upwards; but until the chimney gets warm the current of air is not inclined to follow up through the flue. For this reason some builders refuse to put a chimney on an outside wall, but the fact remains that some outside chimneys work firstrate. A miner in the foothills will build a chimney for his cabin out of stone or mud, and it will work well; while a high priced mason will spend considerable money in constructing a fine house chimney that will not accept a consignment of air at any price. It is difficult to account for some things.

There is as much difference in grates as there is in chimneys and mantels; from the old-fashioned and irons to the closed-in chimney stoves there are many variations. There is also a great variety in sizes. Some grates are too small for any practical use, while others are so large that they entail a great waste of fuel. Some of the closed-in stoves, those that have revolving grates, may be a little cleaner and easier to take care of; but they lack the charm of the free, open grate. The fire never looks the same in one of these expensive affairs. It lacks interest. It is a sort of cross between the fireplace and a stove, it is neither one thing nor the other.

Building a fireplace in any house is a mistake unless it is intended for use. A sham ornament of this kind is a mere mockery, and it is a disappointment. Shams are never satisfactory. A fireplace that is never used is a sham. It does not look well, and should never find a place in a dwelling house.

It is estimated that a house like the one here shown can be built complete, with fireplace, flues and registers, for from about $1,800 to $2,000; and this estimate is probably correct for most localities. Of course, wages and cost of material are very much higher in some places than others and this must be taken into consideration in studying house plans and estimates.

Metal Soles for Farm Shoes.

Shoes with aluminum soles are now made for farmers and laborers who are required to work in water or on damp floors. The top of the shoe is of leather and the sole is a continuous piece of aluminum which covers the entire bottom and folds up along the sides. Between the foot and the metal is a heavy felt insole, and the heel has a core of wood to decrease its weight. Lack of flexibility in the sole is made up for by a bar under the ball of the foot, which gives a buoyant roll to the step and prevents flat-footed walking. Aluminum is used in preference to any other metal because it combines lightness with great durability, the soles wearing longer than rubber and being more impervious to water. The shoes are made in three heights and are comparatively inexpensive.—Popular Mechanics.

Their Money's Worth.

"I wonder why the collection is always taken up at our church before the sermon?" said Bill.

"Why, don't you know?" asked little Sammy Black, with a slight assumption of superiority. "That's so the preacher can tell how good a sermon to preach."

MANAGEMENT OF SOIL IN ORCHARDS

By Maintaining the Fertility of the Orchard Soil Your Trees Are Due to Bear a Heavy Crop of Fruit. An Apple Orchard in Bloom Last Spring That Yielded This Fall a Wonderful Crop. Care of the Soil Helped in This Instance.

(By W. MILTON KELLY.)

The problem of securing the fertility already in the soil is a matter which we should carefully consider before we apply commercial plant foods and manures to our orchard soils.

On soils which contain a reasonable amount of available plant food and which have been brought to a good physical condition, the need of applying manures and commercial fertilizers will be reduced to a minimum until the trees have attained a size and age when their roots occupy practically all of the soil.

How to prepare the soil so that the roots may go deep into the subsoil after mineral plant food, and so that the surface roots may reach out into the surface soil until they interlock with the roots of adjoining trees is the question for us to consider. First of all, the soil must be well drained and prepared sufficiently deep so that the roots may reach deep into the subsoil. Second, the surface soil must be cultivated frequently and a rotation of cover crops and catch crops employed so that a sufficient amount of plant food will be made available to promote a rapid and healthy growth rather than forcing the growth of the trees by the use of manures and fertilizers rich in nitrogen.

In some instances the soil may be deficient in plant food and the intelligent use of mineral plant foods will prove very beneficial to the young trees.

It is when the orchards begin to bear large crops of fruit that the demands for plant food must be met if profitable crops of fruit are secured. At this time the roots of the trees have taken possession of practically all of the soil and have utilized the larger part of the available plant food so that the addition of some form of manure or fertilizer is essential.

The function of the soil in furnishing the tree with plant food is an exceedingly complex one, and there are certain well defined laws that must be kept in mind for the improvement and maintenance of the fertility of the soil that is occupied by the trees. Some fruit growers advocate sod mulch, others depend upon clean cultivation and the liberal use of manures and fertilizers, others grow cover crops and use mineral fertilizers as a means of maintaining the fertility of their orchard soils.

The fact that no two soils require the same line of treatment has caused a confusion of ideas in the management of orchard soils. After studying the matter in its various phases, I have arrived at the conclusion that the best line of management consists of a system of clean cultivation, the use of cover and grass crops and the use of an incomplete fertilizer, the whole line of management to be governed by the growth of the trees and the year they are due to bear a heavy crop of fruit.

In adopting any system of soil management for the orchard, it is imperative that we select the one which possesses as many of the good points and eliminates in a large degree all of the undesirable ones and exhausts the least fertility from the soil, and which will need the least possible amount of purchased fertilizers, and at the same time maintain the trees and fruit in a thrifty and healthy condition.

When we consider any method for maintaining the fertility of orchard soils, there are three classes of relations that must be given consideration both separately and also in their relations to each other—the physical, the chemical and the biological condition of the soil. These three relations are so closely connected and so much dependent upon each other that it is a difficult matter for us to decide where one begins and the other leaves off, so I will consider them together.

To show how it is possible to adopt a system where all three may be maintained and improved by the use of a limited amount of mineral fertilizers and the use of a well planned system of legume crops for maintaining the supply of humus and nitrogen, and the use of fertilizers to encourage the legumes in the work of gathering nitrogen and plant food, and the employment of a grass or cover crop to protect the fruit from the mud during years when the trees are due to produce a large crop of fruit.

The physical condition of the soil is very important, but if we consider it alone we will gain increased crops for a few years, but in the end will exhaust our soil and the crops of fruit will become smaller and more imperfect until we will be compelled to use large amounts of manure or fertilizer. It is always more profitable for us to maintain the fertility of the orchard than to skin off the fruit and then try and bring it back to a condition where it will produce profitable crops of fruit. To successfully maintain the physical condition of the soil we must supply it with an abundance of humus forming material and give it good tillage. The biological condition of the soil deals with the soil organisms that work for us in making the substances of the soil into a condition available to nourish the growing plants. Without them the soil would not be in a condition to furnish the plants with nitrogen and the growth of the tree would be practically arrested. These soil organisms require for their best development suitable temperature, air movement and an abundance of moisture, some base for their products to combine with and some food.

When we discuss the chemical conditions of the soil many orchard owners think we are discussing something mysterious, and jump at the conclusion that the subject is one which they cannot understand. The first law of chemistry is that we cannot make something out of nothing, and that we are the loser every time we try to get a crop of fruit from a soil which is deficient in available plant food. The trees must have food from the soil before they can produce fruit. Now, after discussing these three relations, let us discuss the methods best adapted to maintain them separately, and also in their relations to each other, so that we may feed our trees and fruit in the most efficient and economical manner possible.

Plowing under green foliage adds humus and improves the texture of the soil, assists in conserving moisture and prevents soil washing. The amount of plant food which is made available depends largely upon the carbonic acid produced by the decomposition of the vegetable tissue, and the roots and organic matter. Thus in humus we have a substance that assists in the liberation of mineral as well as of nitrogenous plant food, besides improving the physical condition of the soil.

All plants will make humus, but when we employ legumes we are enabled to increase the nitrogen content of the soil, for these plants have the power of obtaining their nitrogen from the atmosphere and depositing it in the soil in a form available for succeeding crops of fruit and wood. Thus, when legumes are grown to increase the supply of humus and nitrogen, it is not necessary to use high-priced complete fertilizers. Nitrogen is the most expensive element of fertility, and the air is a much cheaper source than the fertilizer works.

In many respects cultivation and cover crops resemble each other in their general effect upon the store of plant food in the soil. It is made more available by tillage, while cover crops and tillage together will accomplish all that tillage possibly can, and at the same time improve all three of the important conditions, besides adding large quantities of nitrogen for future use. Cover crops will also prevent soil washing and hold the leaves until they may be plowed under. Have you ever noticed how a clump of grass will hold leaves from blowing away? The saving of leaves is nature's method of maintaining fertility for the tree.

When the trees are making too heavy a growth of wood it is often best to use some other crop and omit the legume for a season or more.

Silage for Cattle.

Nebraska farmers living in a region where the land sells for $120 and upward an acre are finding greatly increased profits from the use of silage in fattening their cattle. One successful farmer having been engaged in feeding 150 tons of silage from twenty four acres of land, putting all his stock in prime condition.

Cattle fed this way are marketed in fine shape, and feed bills are greatly lessened. The reports of increased profits are inspiring other neighboring stockmen to do the same thing, and many farmers are now raising their own feeders in this way. It is probable that in the end the increase in silos will do more than anything else to bring the beef crop up to the normal standard.

Give Cows Attention.

Give the dairy cow a chance by giving her plenty of feed and good care. The average farmer has common cows but better attention given them will bring more money to the owner.

SOME THANKSGIVING GOODIES.

The time-honored dishes which are inseparable from Thanksgiving are so often discussed that a few different ways of serving the common vegetables may be of interest at this time.

Beets that are baked in the oven have a better flavor than when they are boiled. Care should be taken in turning them not to break the skin. Serve them sliced or chopped, seasoned with butter and pepper and salt.

Stuffed Onions.—Take as many onions as there are people to serve, parboil them until tender but not broken. Drain, remove the centers when cold, chop three of these centers and mix with a cup of cold cooked ham, finely chopped. Moisten with cream and the yolk of an egg, well beaten. Fill the centers with this mixture.

Place a piece of butter on the top of each, put into a deep dish and bake. Pour a little milk about them and bake a few minutes covered, then remove the cover, sprinkle with buttered crumbs and when brown, serve.

Brained Cabbage.—After cutting a good sized cabbage in half, soak it in cold water for an hour or more. Then boil quickly in plenty of boiling salted water. Drain and remove the stalk from the center, after cooking twenty minutes. Put into a sauce pan one sliced carrot, one sliced turnip, one stalk of celery, a few sprigs of parsley, one sliced onion and a bunch of any herbs. Lay the cabbage on top, pour over two cupfuls of stock and boil until tender. Drain. Lay on a hot dish and serve at once.

Young Carrots.—Scrape the carrots and put them into a sauce pan with a small onion, a bay leaf, a little salt and pepper. Cover with stock and stew until tender. Place on a dish around a mound of mashed potatoes.

Fried Celery.—Wash nice pieces of celery and simmer in boiling salted water until tender. Drain and cut in halves, lengthwise; brush over with beaten egg, seasoned with salt and pepper. Fry in deep fat and when a light brown remove and drain.

Sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve.

When the large, fresh mushrooms may be obtained, there is nothing more delicious to serve with a stuffing or forcemeat made of chopped ham, and seasonings, filling the caps, and then bake in a hot oven fifteen minutes.

Smile awhile, and while
You smile another smiles,
And soon there's miles
And miles of smiles,
And life's worth while
Because you smile.

CHESTNUT TIME.

This delicious nut is so good in many ways that those who are fortunate enough to have plenty are to be congratulated.

As a stuffing for fowl they are a great delicacy. Boil and mash and season well with butter, salt and red pepper. The addition of bread crumbs helps in filling a large turkey. Mushrooms or oysters may be substituted for part of the chestnuts, if so desired. Onion, thyme or sage is added for seasoning. Plain boiled chestnuts, mashed and seasoned, are a delicious dish served as a vegetable.

French Chestnut Soup.—Peel and boil a quart of large chestnuts in salted water, remove the brown skins and chop fine. Add a teaspoonful each of salt and sugar, the rind of a lemon and a quart of water; bring to a boil and cook slowly for an hour. Rub through a sieve, add two quarts of veal or chicken stock, a teaspoon of parsley, finely minced, a tablespoonful of flour and butter well blended, and season with red pepper. Simmer twenty minutes, stirring all the time. Put through a sieve and serve. A yolk of egg well beaten may be added just before serving, if so desired. It makes a richer soup.

Chestnut Pancakes.—Beat separately the yolks and whites of three eggs, add three-fourths of a cup of cream, a tablespoonful each of butter and sugar with sufficient flour sifted with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder to make a batter. When the cakes are baked, spread with chestnut puree, seasoned with salt and mixed with a little cream. Roll the cakes and fasten with toothpicks. Sprinkle with powdered sugar and brown in the oven.

How many smiles there could be

"Good morning, neighbor, let me give A helping hand today!"
How many smiles there will be,
My friend, when you and I
Have learned to practice what we wish
There's other folks would try!

HINTS WORTH KNOWING.

Here is a suggestion for fixing a pine or soft wood floor which is certainly invaluable. Smooth off the floor, filling all the cracks with filler or putty, and then paint it with a coat of sodium silicate (soluble glass), the same that is used to preserve eggs. It will also preserve floors and save the back of the woman who has to scrub and clean them. The waterglass will dry almost immediately, and three coats should be put on, one right after the other. If you wish to change the color of your floor, add yellow ochre or Vandyke brown (water colors, not oil). Try on a board until the color desired is obtained. When the paint is dry, cover it with a coat of three parts boiled linseed oil and one part Japan dryer, mixed. Any kind of a floor or old furniture may be treated in this way.

Apply a raw white egg to a cut; it will keep out foreign matter and allay the pain.

For a cough, a roasted lemon is both healing and pleasant to take. Roast the lemon carefully until thoroughly hot, then squeeze the juice into a cup containing a few tablespoonfuls of sugar. Take a spoonful whenever the cough is troublesome.

Burn a little camphor gum in the closets where moths have been found. Close the door and keep the fumes in as long as possible.

A piece of camphor gum in the silver chest will keep the silver from tarnishing.

A lump of lime kept in the fruit closet will keep mold from forming on jelly and preserves.

When peeling onions, a pair of auto goggles worn will keep the eyes from troubling.

Keep a list of easily prepared dishes inside the cupboard door or in an equally handy place, so when unexpected company arrives in the flurry of trying to think of something to eat no time need be lost.

Slip a paper bag over the egg beater when whipping a little cream in a bowl, so there will be no splatters.

A dish mop is a good window cleaner. Use two, one to wash and the other for polishing the windows.

Bread dipped in milk and baked makes delicious rusks to serve with salad or soup.

Smile even when you're down and out,
Smile when trouble routs about
Smile in sorrow, smile in pain,
Sunshine always follows rain.

THERE'S POETRY IN PIE.

There is probably no pie more generally liked than pumpkin, when it is well made and properly seasoned. A cup of sifted pumpkin, or at most a cup and a quarter will make a good-sized pie. One or two eggs, a pint of milk, sugar, ginger, a little cinnamon or cloves, if one likes a dark pie, with a few drops of lemon extract gives a good flavor. The richer the milk the better the pie, of course.

Pineapple Pie.—Make a good rich crust, add the pineapple with enough sugar to sweeten, put a teaspoonful of flour sifted over and then place the top crust. Bake as usual. Long, slow baking brings out the flavor of pineapple as well as ordinary apple.

Cornstarch Pie.—Scald a pint of milk, add two tablespoonfuls of cornstarch, the beaten yolks of two eggs, a pinch of salt and a quarter of a cup of sugar; boil, then pour into a crust. Cover with a meringue made from the whites with two tablespoonfuls of sugar. Brown in oven. Flavor with any desired flavoring.

Cream Pie.—Bake a rich crust, and when cool fill with sweetened whipped cream flavored with vanilla. Just before serving dot with bits of red jelly.

Sour Cream Pie.—Take a cupful of sugar, choped raisins and sour cream; add one egg well beaten, one-half teaspoonful each of cinnamon, nutmeg and salt, a fourth of a teaspoon of cloves and a teaspoonful of vinegar. Bake with two crusts.

Apple Custard.—Add a cup of sugar to a cupful of grated apple, two eggs well beaten, one cup of sweet cream and the grated rind of a lemon. Pour into a pie plate lined with pastry, and bake.

Any fruit may be put into a baked shell, covered with egg white and baked, making a very attractive pie.

Remark of Small Brother Must Have Driven Last Hope From Poor Mr. Blinks.

It was a clear case of unrequited affection; but, despite numerous setbacks, Blinks persisted in his calls. The lady's name was May, but her attitude toward him was December. Her ten-year-old brother Billy received poor Blinks the last time he dropped in.

"Is your sister at home?" asked the suitor.

"No, she's gone out."

"Ah, so I've come to the cage out; to find the bird has flown."

"No, you ain't," retorted Billy. "But you're like the month of June."

"How's that?"

"Every time you come in May goes out."

How Sunday Reached the Frontier.

High principle and humor have ever made an irresistible combination. Early merchants on the American frontier conspicuously failed in the observance of Sunday; therefore, when a young New Jersey trader, who had settled at Louisville, Kentucky, closed his store on the first Sunday after it was opened, there was much ado in the town.

Other establishments kept open; had he not noticed it? he was asked. Yes, he knew it. Why did he close? He was the first to do so; he must know that, also.

"Why," said a facetious merchant, "Sunday hasn't yet crossed the mountains."

"Yes, it has," declared the newcomer, pleasantly. "I brought it with me!"

That simple and ready reply proved more effective than any amount of argument, and although he was the first to observe the day in town, he soon had many followers in Sunday-closing.—Youth's Companion.

WORKS ALL DAY
And Studies at Night on Grape-Nuts Food.

Some of the world's great men have worked during the day and studied evenings to fit themselves for greater things. But it requires a good constitution generally to do this.

A Ga. man was able to keep it up with ease after he had learned the sustaining power of Grape-Nuts, although he had failed in health before he changed his food supply. He says:

"Three years ago I had a severe attack of stomach trouble which left me unable to eat anything but bread and water.

"The nervous strain at my office from 6 A. M. to 6 P. M. and improper foods caused my health to fail rapidly. Cereal and so-called "Foods" were tried without benefit until I saw Grape-Nuts mentioned in the paper.

"In hopeless desperation I tried this food and at once gained strength, flesh and appetite. I am now able to work all day at the office and study at night, without the nervous exhaustion that was usual before I tried Grape-Nuts.

"It leaves me strengthened, refreshed, satisfied; nerves quieted and toned up, body and brain waste restored. I would have been a living skeleton, or more likely a dead one by this time, if it had not been for Grape-Nuts."

To Indorse Tuberculosis Day.

Requests for indorsement and approval of National Tuberculosis day, December 7, have been sent to President Wilson, to almost every governor, to hundreds of mayors, to the leading church dignitaries and to other prominent men. Last year ex-President Taft, Colonel Roosevelt, Cardinal Farley, about a dozen governors, and a large number of mayors and others indorsed this movement.

The story that the kaiser loves most to tell his intimates, declares Mr. William Armstrong in the Woman's Magazine, concerns the visit of his brother, Prince Henry of Prussia, to America.

The incident happened just as the prince was landing at New York. Beside him on deck stood Admiral von Tirpitz. On the dock was a dense crowd. From its midst a stentorian voice called, "Henry! Henry!"

The prince did not understand that the hail was meant for him until the admiral, smiling broadly, said, "Your royal highness, I think some one wants to speak to you."

Then Prince Henry looked over toward the human megaphone, who still continued to bawl out his name. Seeing that he had caught the royal gaze, the owner of the voice shouted, "How's Bill?"—Youth's Companion.

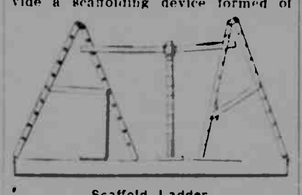
MANTLES THAT WON'T BREAK

English Article That Can Be Tossed About Like Ordinary Rubber Ball—Big Gas Saver.

An astonished gathering at the Hotel Cecil saw incandescent gas mantles thrown about the room, caught by the skillful and afterward thrown back again to the platform, writes the London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian. Then the ill-used mantles were put on gas burners and gave a brilliant light, as if nothing had happened to them. Then the demonstrator, while the gas was still burning, pushed the mantle up with a rod until it bulged and let it fall back again. And still it continued to give a brilliant light. An ordinary gas mantle burning alongside it collapsed at a touch, as, of course, any ordinary gas mantle would. The reason why the ordinary gas mantle gets crippled so easily is that in structure it is a network of woven fabric, so that when you break two or three vertical threads at the neck or collar all the dependent horizontal threads give way, too.



The new mantle is made of exactly the same materials as the old, but it consists entirely of vertical threads, so that destruction of the threads does not alter the hang of the mantle and destroy it wholly. You must destroy every single thread, since each thread (there are 500 of them in a mantle) hangs by itself. The new mantle, in fact, looks like an inverted tassel.

SCAFFOLD LADDER IS HANDY

Adapted to Be Variously Adjusted and Rearranged for Accomplishment of Various Purposes.

The Scientific American, in describing a scaffold ladder, the invention of C. G. Bishop of Southampton, N. Y., says:

An object here is to arrange improved means adapted to be variously adjusted and rearranged for accomplishing a plurality of purposes, all of which relate to the use of scaffolding of various kinds. Further, to provide a scaffolding device formed of two members connected by a pivotal link and carrying braces for holding the supporting members a proper distance apart and locking the same in that position. The scaffolding ladder is associated with intermediate supports designed to support scaffolding bars. The ladder proper may be used in various capacities as a support for scaffolding, as an ordinary ladder, and as a scaffolding support for use on roofs of various shapes.

A whole cabinet of tools, including vise, cutting pliers, wrench and hammer, along with the numerous small tools usually included in combination tool sets—all part of the hammer, or nested in the hammer handle—is a novelty from France, says the Popular Mechanics. The hammer head may be used as either a vise, a cutting plier or a wrench. The sleeve, which holds the end of the hammer handle and the other leg of the tong together when the tool is being used as a hammer, serves, when removed, as a handle for the small tools. A small anvil is also provided with the outfit, for use in connection with the vise.

To Harden Steel Tools.

Hardening of steel tools consists of heating, followed by sudden chillings, and softening from the chilled state into the degree of hardness desired. Salt water will harden steel more than common water will, but very few tools need to be made harder than soft water will. Soft water is really the best for ordinary use in spite of the many kinds of tempering fluids employed by blacksmiths.

BRUSH HOLDER MADE USEFUL

Most Convenient Article, Invented by Illinois Man, Enables Painter to Reach Long Distance.

Painters, janitors, porters, housemaids and heads of families who like to do the painting themselves will find the extension brush holder invented by an Illinois man a most convenient article. It will enable them to reach points that otherwise could be reached only by means of a ladder or by more or less dangerous climbing, and will thus not only save the user trouble, but will eliminate an element of danger. A metal head is made to fit over the end of a pole, which can be as long as is needed for the work to be done. The upper part of the head has a hinged-holding device in which the handle of the brush is placed and held firm by a thumb screw. This holding portion is also hinged to the lower part of the head and adjustable upon it, so that it may be turned at any angle at which it is desired to use the brush and held there by a screw.

NEW TRADES ARE TAKEN UP

Advent of Steel Sleeping Cars Throws Many Wood Workers Out of Jobs at Pullman Shops.

An apt illustration of reduction in the premium on skill required of the industrial worker is found at Pullman by Graham Romeyn Taylor, who writes in the Survey:

"The advent of the steel car threw wood carving, cabinetmaking and many other skilled crafts on the scrap heap and substituted metal work, demanding distinctly shorter training. Steel sleepers were first made about 1907. This year not a single one of wood is being manufactured. Of the ordinary coaches built on contract for railroads about 75 per cent. are steel body and wooden interior finish, 15 per cent. are all steel and only 10 per cent. are of wood. More would probably be made entirely of steel but for the difficulty experienced in heating them.

"When the steel construction began all the older and skilled employes were encouraged to learn the newer trades, and officials say that many of the cabinetmakers readily adapted themselves to the changed conditions, utilizing much of their old skill in the steel cabinet work. But they frankly admit that the great amount of semi-skilled work, such as the assembling, erecting and riveting of the steel cars, has borne hard on the older employes, who cannot 'stand the racket.' Slavs, who 'don't seem to have any nerves,' take these jobs. What this means for the older employes was vividly pointed out by a Dutch tradesman in Roseland, who said that when the steel car work came in about 200 members of the Dutch church he attended left, saying that the change of trades was too much for them."

TRAINMEN GET WAGE INCREASE

Eastern Employes' Raise to Average Seven Per Cent.

MEANS $6,000,000 TO ROADS.

Federal Board Rules Against Workmen On Four Out Of Five Points, But Finds For Them On Higher-Cost Argument.

New York.—The long-lived controversy between railroads of the East and their conductors and trainmen over the latter's demands for more pay is at an end. The employes are granted an increase in wages averaging 7 per cent. and totaling $6,000,000 annually—about half of what they wanted—from October last, effective for one year. One hundred thousand men will share in the increase.

Thus ends, by arbitration under the Newlands amendment to the Erdman act, a controversy that threatened at one time to tie up by a strike the transportation facilities of all States east of the Mississippi River and north of the Ohio. The award of the arbitration commission, filed in the Federal District Court, is binding and final. The two board representatives of the employes filed a minority report in addition and the two representatives of the 41 railroads a dissenting opinion.

In reaching its award the board ruled mainly against the employes on four out of five points submitted as reasons why the increase should be granted and found for the men the fifth—the increased cost of living. Since 1909, when last an increase was granted, the arbitrators found the cost of living has increased 7 per cent. Certain minor contentions embraced also were conceded to the employes. It was, therefore, more than a coincidence that the increase granted in wages is exactly the increase in the cost of living, as outlined by documents introduced by the employes.

"The board does not found its action entirely upon the increased cost of living," reads the award, a document of 75 printed pages, "though it looks upon this as basic."

Without attempting to standardize the rates of pay between railroad employes of the East and the West, the board asserts its belief that it is desirable, but not possible at the present time. As to this, the award voices the opinion that Congress should make an inquiry as to whether there is any longer a substantial reason for the maintenance of a wage differential between the two sections.

"Such an inquiry ought to result in a recommendation," reads the award, "if it is found that such a differential ought to exist, as to what the differential should be. Those making the inquiry should be empowered to report upon existing wage scales in all territories for the purpose of ascertaining, if possible, a scientific basis for the payment of railroad employes who operate trains. This suggestion does not contemplate that the body making such inquiry should attempt to fix wages."

It is suggested that the Committee on Industrial Relations, recently appointed by President Wilson might be competent to carry out the suggested inquiry.

BEILISS A FREE MAN.

Verdict Says Murder Was Committed In Zeiteff Works.

Kiev, Russia.—"Mendel Beiliss not guilty, but the murder was committed in the Zeiteff works." This was the verdict returned by the jury, after two hours' deliberation. When Beiliss was taken out of the prisoners' room of the court for the last time and brought along the dingy corridor, it was seen that his guard had been increased to five soldiers. Two officers entered the dock with him. Beiliss was outwardly calm. The court was crowded, but the deepest silence followed the entry of the president and other judges. The jury then filed in, and the foreman advanced a few paces from the box and read the verdict.

PLAN FOR MEMORABLE TIME

Tuberculosis Day, December 7, Is to Be Participated In by Hundreds of Thousands.

Nearly 600,000 members of the Young Men's Christian association of the United States, including several thousand members of the allied health leagues, hundreds of physical directors and 345,000 members of the physical departments will be urged to cooperate in the Tuberculosis day campaign during the week of December 7, according to an announcement made from the headquarters of this movement in New York.

Lectures and discussions on tuberculosis will be held on Sunday afternoon, December 7, and during the week preceding or the week following that date, by many organizations connected with the Y. M. C. A. Prominent speakers in various cities of the country will address these meetings. The details of the program are being worked out by Dr. George J. Fisher, director of the physical department of the international committee of the association.

Secretaries of the local branches of the Y. M. C. A., or members of the association who are interested in this subject can secure literature, free of charge, from the office of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, 105 East Twenty-second street, New York city.

Clerical Humor.

When Rev. Doctor Snow rose to address his evening congregation his voice was slightly husky.

HUMOR DISFIGURED BABY

Clarendon, N. C.—"My baby was broken out with a red, thick and rough-looking humor when about two months old. It would come in patches and went almost all over her in that way. The places were like ringworm and as they would spread they would turn red and make sores and itch. The trouble went to her face and disfigured her badly. Her clothes irritated it.

"I saw the advertisement of Cuticura Soap and Ointment and I got a sample and in one night's time I could see a change in the redness and in two days the place would be nearly gone. I sent and got one twenty-five cent cake of Cuticura Soap and two fifty-cent boxes of Cuticura Ointment, which cured my baby. She was well in three months." A Woman Is as Old as She Looks

But her beauty once gone is not lost forever. Science has come to her relief, and she can now smooth back the wrinkles and crow's feet, bring back the bloom of youth to the faded, sallow cheeks, and clear that muddy, mottled complexion. Here is the wonderful secret. Purchase from your druggist two ounces of Cascoterine and add to four ounces of water, this will make a massage cream which should be used each night, also purchase two ounces of Boroglycerine and add to eight ounces of water, this will make a greaseless cream, which should be used directly after the massage. These preparations need not be confined to the treatment of wrinkles alone, their use as a cleanser is unsurpassed, they will preserve a healthy complexion, preventing or curing all blackheads, and pimples. If your druggist is unable to supply you, send one dollar direct to the Cootes Laboratories, Norfolk, Va., and receive these products by return mail.

THE REPUBLICAN,
Oakland, Md.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 1913.

A UNITED States $1 bill is worth $2.86 Mexican money.

NOW that the political campaign has ended and the election is over, the citizens of Garrett county should get down to earnest work for every thing that will be for the best interests of our county.

THE special prizes offered by the Allegany—Garrett County Fair association for the best crop of potatoes, and by Mr. Annan of Cumberland, for the best corn should receive the attention of our farmers, as should also the interests of the fair to be held in Oakland next fall. Garrett county products are prize winners. The exhibits made at our fair last October were a surprise to everybody. The display of potatoes especially attracted great attention.

THE Agricultural Department has issued a new publication, devoted to reports of crops, consideration of the condition and prospects of the dairy, live stock and general farming interests, and other subjects of interest to the farmer at the time of issue. It is called the Agricultural Outlook and will be issued several times a year. Congressman David J. Lewis has 200 subscriptions to this publication to distribute among the farmers of the Sixth district and will allot to the farmers of this county, who write him making request for it. Farmers who wish to have the Agricultural Outlook should write him at Washington, D. C.

LEGAL friends of Blair Lee, United States Senator-elect, have advised him that his term in the Senate begins about the middle of January, on the day that the Legislature would have commenced to ballot for candidates if no direct election had been held.

Senator Lee has stated that he will present his credentials to the Senate as soon as they have been received. The State Board of Canvassers will meet this week and review the returns. They certify the result of the election to the Secretary of State, who will, it is thought, prepare the credentials for all the successful candidates chosen at the last election. Senator Lee will, of course, be included in the number.

MARYLAND week will be observed at Fifth Regiment Armory in Baltimore, November 18 to 22, when the State Horticultural Society and its affiliated bodies will hold their annual meetings and exhibit the products of the farm. There will be many features of the exhibition that will make it worth while for the farmer to see. There will also be a social side, for the visiting farmers will be the guests of the Baltimore Board of Trade at luncheon, an automobile tour of the city and a boat ride around the harbor. Maryland week is largely educational, with exhibits from the experimental station of the Maryland Agricultural College and with speakers of national importance. Every man who can possibly spare the time should go. Scientific farming means larger and better crops and the result of scientific farming is shown during Maryland week.

THE REPUBLICAN last week published a large list of prize winners at the Lonaconing fair, who reside in different parts of Garrett county. A number of these gentlemen will be prize winners at the great show at Baltimore, during Maryland week.

We are glad to record their success, but we want to see greater exhibits, and a larger number of them at the fair next fall. We had only about six weeks to prepare for the fair of 1913. In that time much was accomplished. What ought we to accomplish in the whole year before us? Farmers of Garrett county interest your entire family in this work. Utilize these two occasions, the Garrett county fair, the Annan corn contest for your profit and for the awakening of an interest in better and more successful farming. Encourage your boys, your girls to be prize winners; with them plan for the contest, prepare the ground for good results, select good seed and do your best to win; improve your horses, cattle, sheep, swine and chickens. Strive for the best, and as you thus plan and work a richer, better Garrett county will develop, and a more happy and better contented citizenship will be found.

Miner's Hospital About Completed

The finishing touches are now being put on at the Miner's Hospital at Frostburg, and as soon as the painters who are varnishing the floor complete their work, the furniture for the various rooms of the building will be placed. The date of dedication will no doubt be determined within the next week and arrangements will follow for suitable exercises.

THE STATE OF MARYLAND AND HER GOOD ROADS

State Problem As Major W. W. Crosby Sees It.

In an article on "Maryland and Good Roads," Major W. W. Crosby, in the magazine "Better Roads," says:

"The advantage to be secured from the cordial co-operation of the various interests concerned with highway improvement are every day becoming more evident. 'Many hands' do, indeed 'make light work,' when intelligently directed. It is not the purpose of this article to discuss the details of an organization that should include in its membership all the varied societies or classes of citizens which would be actively interested in the betterment of our roads, but rather in view of recent events, to emphasize the immediate need for actual co-operation between two classes of the probable members of such an organization—the automobilist and the road authorities in charge of the construction and maintenance. As one of the latter, the writer desires to present for the attention of the former one or two points seemingly worth consideration.

"The automobile is no longer a theory, but is today a fact rapidly increasing in prominence. It is also undoubtedly a fact that in the rural districts a strong feeling—prejudice, if you will—exists against the automobile and its users. It may be questionable whether this feeling is locally increasing or fading, and which ever course it may be taking anywhere probably depends mainly on degree of cooperation existing between the automobilist and the authorities and residents of that particular locality.

"The automobile itself, as frequently asserted is here to stay. We hope the prejudice against automobiles is not here to stay. This prejudice is sometimes bitter and unreasoning, at other times it seems partly justifiable, and it has been quite general in Maryland. Our State Roads Commission recently completed a series of hearings in each county town in this State. The writer accompanied the commission at all of these hearings and the impression he retains is that there was not a single instance where this prejudice of the farmer against the automobile did not make its appearance in one form or another. We do not think Maryland an exception among agricultural communities in this respect.

As to whether the opposition in any case was reasonable or not, need not be argued here. The point is that such opposition exists, and that a certain amount of opposition to the improvement of the roads of the State, because of the conception that such improvement of the roads would be more for the benefit of the automobilist than any one else, exists also. It is up to the automobilist to overcome this prejudice and opposition.

It is the opinion of the writer that success in the matter will best be secured by 'moral suasion,' rather than by force, even if the latter were possible, for the large majority of the of the supporters of the movement for improvement of roads is not yet composed of automobilists.

For a number of years the agitation for better roads has been carried on among the country people where the roads lie and to whom it has been necessary to present argument for road improvement. The people of the cities generally have approved for some time of the betterment of the country roads and have been willing to contribute toward the cost of the work.

The farmer, naturally from his circumstances more conservative, has been the obstacle to expensive modern highway work, consequently, the arguments have had to be such as would appeal to him and have had to be directed at him. He now views with alarm the advent of the automobile, and unless the automobilist recognizes the facts of the situation and co-operates with those working for better roads, and in his co-operation is willing to submerge his identity in that of the already recognized road workers, who have in many instances, partially, at least, gained the confidence of the country people, there seems to be danger of a serious setback to the work of securing modern results on the public highways.

It is of little use for the automobilist under present circumstances to demand his 'rights.' His rights must be subordinate to what the majority of the people of the community consider as their rights. He should be content as long as he remains in the minority to accept what the majority is willing to allow him and to continually strive for greater allowances by either educating the majority to the automobile or by proving to the existing majority the safety and reasonableness of making him further allowances. The automobilist is everywhere enthusiastic for better roads and as the roads are improved the number of automobiles increases. If, therefore, those who at present use automobiles would work persistently, but unobtrusively for the improvement of the roads, it is possible that eventually the automobilist will be in the majority and will control the work of the roads and the regulations for their use.

In the opinion of the writer, with the present state of the public mind as he knows it, the taking charge of the movement for better roads by the automobile interests would simply irritate the existing prejudice and make the future work of the good roads people much more difficult, if it did not actually give it a serious setback. It is not that we do not want the active and earnest support from every possible class of citizens. It seems as if, properly managed, the support of the automobilist might be more effective than possibly that of any other class of citizens who have joined in the work for better roads. They comprise a considerable portion of the wealth and inteligence of the community and ought to be able along proper lines to exert a powerful influence for general and modern road improvement. If, however, they attempt to force, in spite of the existing prejudice among others, the methods and means to this end, they are doomed not only to bitter disappointment in the result but also to even more severe restriction of their use of the existing roads than now prevail.

This State has already felt a demand from the farmers for its assistance to the police authorities of the various communities in preventing excessive speed by the automobilists on the roads. Where the drivers of the machines, in the opinion of the inhabitants of a locality, are inconsiderate in their use of the roads, and where the technicalities of the laws or the feebleness of the legal authorities have prevented the majority of the users of the road from enjoying the road according to their own ideas, provision has been asked for such form of construction as will absolutely prevent the enjoyment of the road by the automobilists according to their customs. So far it has been possible to resist this demand, but it depends upon the automobilists themselves how much longer it will be possible to do so. As before stated, it makes no difference at present whether or not the ideas of the majority are right and up-to-date, as long as the majority with its ideas referred to, exists.

The farmers are continually reporting the damage done to our modern roads by the machines, and already extensive repairs at the expense of these farmers have been rendered necessary to first-class modern macadam built less than three years ago because of the severe use of them by automobiles at excessive speed. Unless ways and means are provided to prevent and repair the destruction of ordinary macadam under such circumstances, it seems entirely possible that the further construction of such roads will be opposed, if not prevented.

The automobilists could render valuable aid to the cause for better roads on this point alone, and at the same time do much toward the overcoming of the prejudice against them, by voluntarily supporting a contribution from the automobilists, that would at least cover the cost referred to. In the opinion of the writer, this contribution is sure to be demanded despite the protest occasionally appearing from some automobilists and their indignant denials of their responsibility. Without doubt, however, the majority of them will agree that much can be done both for the good roads cause and themselves, by their voluntary contributions. It is doubtful, even, that they would feel that any serious sacrifice was being made.

"Public opinion is extremely difficult to force, but it can be led by patient, persistent, and intelligent work. Road authorities generally are willing to lead it the right way, but the officials are directly responsible to their employers, that is, to the majority of the citizens whom they represent, and only through that majority becoming automobilists themselves or being educated to see the automobilists' side of the question can it be expected of the road authorities to permanently advance along the lines desired by the automobilists. It is useless to expect the road authorities to be very far in advance of their constituents, even though their training and experience should lit them for seeing farther ahead and more clearly. It certainly is up to the automobilists to make good in the community, and until they do so, it seems to be unavoidable for the success of the work of better roads generally, that they must be content to assist as they can in the movement and not demand to lead it.

"Recent conventions under the auspicies of motorists, which have been largely attended by good roads workers from all sections, have undoubtedly done much good, for it has been apparently intended, as they seem to have done, to interest and organize the different interest in the cause of better roads. It would be a mistake however, in the opinion of the writer, to now place the work for the cause in the hands of the automobilists and to make them the recognized leaders of this work. The co-operation of all interested is most desirable, and probably the best way would be to effect a new and broader organization with such leaders as would command the confidence of public generally and with such division of the general organizations into sections as would enable the formation of subdivisions composed of closely allied interests and the consideration, in section, of the peculiar problems and work of each.

Leased Wills Mountain Hotel.

H. Strachan, Blaine, W. Va., and J. E. Chappell, Kitzmiller, Md., former member of the Maryland House of Delegates, have leased from Charles G. Holzshu the Wills Mountain Sanitorium, on Wills Mountain, overlooking Cumberland, and will re-open the institution about the first of the year for the treatment of victims of the liquor and drug habits. The building, a fine structure of brick, has not been occupied for several years. Several prominent Cumberland physicians are interested in the project. The building will be overhauled. The lease is for five years. The lessees have been conducting a sanitarium at Kitzmiller for several years, administering the Marion cure. Mr. Chappell is manager of the Kitzmiller institution, which has achieved much success.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

Paster Russell Regrets His Error.

To the Editor of the Republican:

DEAR SIR: A copy of THE REPUBLICAN of October 30th is before me, which seems to imply that I have been misinformed respecting Rev. J. J. Ross' experiences in Baptist pulpits in Toronto and Hamilton, Canada. I wrote on what I considered reliable information, and regret any error in the statement.

Your readers will recall that I brought no railing accusation against Rev. Ross, but merely used what I was informed were his experiences as a warning to other ministers that the cultivation of a spirit of slander, malice, hatred and strife would surely be injurious to their influence with right-minded people, but to be gentle toward all—not a brawler, not a slanderer.

"Birds of a feather flock together.' If the congregation served by Rev. Ross appreciate him and love the spirit which he manifests, it certainly speaks badly for them. My experience has been that noble-minded people neither enjoy nor sympathize with slanderers and traducers. If the Baptist laity of Canada endorse Rev. Ross' course, they depreciate themselves proportionately in my estimation.

Noticing again the article you publish, I remark that it says Rev. Ross was not asked to resign any of his charges, but gives no explanation of why he did leave Toronto. Very rarely are ministers asked to resign in so many words. Hints of dissatisfaction and coolness are usually enough without an open vote and request of resignation. I notice also that the Hamilton deacons say that Rev. Ross is now serving a united and happy people; but this does not prove that some discontented and unhappy people did not withdraw, as I was informed. In other words, my information respecting trouble was so straightforward that I am slow to think that it had no foundation. Besides I still incline to give the Canadian Baptist laity credit for a measure of dissatisfaction and righteous indignation against so unchristian a course as Rev. Ross has pursued. Very truly yours,

C. T. RUSSELL.

Brooklyn, Nov. 6, 1913.

In Memory

On Wednesday morning, Nov. 6th, 1913, Thomas W. Ashby, of Elk Garden, W. Va., passed from time to eternity, at the old Dixon homestead, where four years ago next January J. Frank Dixon passed away, and where, "Tom" as he was generally called had years ago found his bride, and where he had lived all his married life, and found a happy home, here death found him, but found him ready watching, waiting.

We have known "Tom" personally and intimately for years. We have been with him on such various occasions, that we knew him well.

We knew that his heart always beat in sympathy, and in response to the cry of distress and need. We know that on sundry occasions a sack was filled with substantials, and send to the home of some poor needy family. His hand was ever open, his heart ever willing to help a worthy cause. When the movement to establish a home for homeless children was inaugurated last fall, the name of T. W. Ashby and wife were pledged for one hundred dollars. We do not speak of these things to unduly praise him, but to do him justice. We could not, if we would, add one laurel leaf to his crown. For each of us is the weaver of his own crown, but we can now that his lips are cold, silent and sealed in death, reach back into his past, ended life, and bring forth and record those noble traits of character, and those kindly deeds done that dried the tear from the orphan's eye, and that fed the hungry in the hour of need. These are the leaves that he wove, and he himself having woven leaves of healing, leaves of gladness, leaves of sunshine, leaves of helpfulness and cheer into other lives, these leaves, bright, resplendent and glorious will all be gathered again and woven into that crown that shall adorn his brow forever. "For inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these, even the least of these my brethern, ye did it unto me."

On Sunday after the funeral services which were conducted by Rev. J. A. Shockey, the friends and relatives of the deceased passed the beautiful casket in which the deceased lay, his face lit up with an expression of heavenly peace and rest, after which his four brothers, Chas. A. Ashby of Deer Park, Rahlph T. Ashby and J. Frank Ashby of Crellin, Wm. C. Ashby of Corinth, W. Va., and his two nephews Jesse J. Ashby and Stanley Ashby, of Crellin, tenderly bore him to the home cemetery.

At the cemetary undertakers Rollman and Son placed the casket in a steel vault and all that was mortal of Thomas W. Ashby our friend, was tenderly laid to rest.

Mr Ashby had reached the age of 65 years, on the 8th day of last June. He leaves a widow Hannah S. Ashby to mourn him, and for whom he will longingly and lovingly wait on the banks of the Elysian shore.

Breaks Three Ribs.

Fearing a rear end collision, Charles Lavelle, a conductor on the third division of the B. and O., jumped from his train three miles west of Oakland Sunday afternoon and broke three ribs. He was taken to Cumberland on passenger train No. 16 and taken to the Western Maryland Hospital at Cumberland, in the Butler ambulance. It is stated that when Lavelle jumped he landed squarely on a projecting rock, which threw him to the ground with such force that it broke three of his ribs and otherwise cut and bruised him. His condition is not considered serious.

THE DEATH RECORD

THOMAS W. ASHBY.

Thomas W. Asbby died last Thursday at Elk Garden, W. Va., after an illness of several months. For years he was associated in business with the late J. Frank Dixon, who was his brother-in-law. He was a lifelong Republican and was active in the Methodist Episcopal church. His wife survives, also the following brothers and sisters: Ralph T., Jesse J., Dorsey, Frank and William of Crellin, and Chas. Asbby, of Deer Park., and Mrs. Eliza Conneway and Mrs. Helen Graham of Oakland, and Mrs. Safronia Peasley, of Seattle, Washington. The fuheral was held Sunday at 1:30 p. m., with interment at the home burying ground near Elk Garden.

T. T. BECKMAN.

T. T. Beckman, 22 years old, died near Frankville, about nine miles west of Piedmont, at 9 o'clock Friday morning from typhoid fever. His funeral took place Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the family residence and interment was made in the family burial ground on the farm. He was a member of the Loyal Order of Moose of Westernport Lodge. His brother, Mr. J. A. Beckman, is sick at the family home with the same disease.

HERMAN BECKMAN.

Last Friday the venerable Herman Beckman, died at his home near Altamont, aged 79 years. He is survived by his widow. The funeral services and interment took place Sunday. Mr. Beckman was one of the respected citizens of Garrett county.

ROSA WARD JOHNSON.

Mrs. Rosa Ward Johnson died suddenly at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Grace Chadwick, at Admore, Pa., last Saturday. Mrs. Johnson was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Ward, and was born in Winchester, Va., but was raised in Oakland. She was a sister of Mrs. Alpha Hinebaugh of this city. Her death was caused by Bright's deasease. Her husband died about two months ago. The interment took place in the Philos cemetery, Piedmont. Mrs. Johnson had fine musical talents.

A. C. DURST.

Mr. A. C. Durst died, near Bittinger, last Friday, aged 31 years. He was the son of Mr. Madison Durst. The interment took place Sunday. Among those in attendance were David Durst, of Oakland and Bruce and Harry Durst, of near Oakland.

Trainmen Get Wage Increase

The long lived controversy between railroads of the East and their conductors and trainmen over the latter's demand for more pay has ended. The employes are granted an increase in wages averaging 7 per cent. and totaling $6,000,000 annually—about half of what they wanted from October last effective for one year. One hundred thousand men will share in the increase.

Thus ends, by arbitration under the Newlands amendment to the Erdman act, a controversy that threatned at one time to tie up by strike the transportation facilities of all states east of the Mississippi River and north of the Ohio. The award of the arbitration commission, filed in the Federal District Court, is binding and final. The two boards representives of the employes filed a minority report in addition and the two representatives of the 41 railroads a dissenting opinion.

The articles are dealt with separately and fix the pay for various classifications of labor. While technical in verbiage, they provide chiefly that the monthly pay of employes in the passenger branch of the service shall be:

Conductors, $135; baggagemen, $82.50; flagmen and rear brakemen, $78; brakemen, $76.50, overtime, per hour: Conductors, 45 cents; assitant conductors and ticket collectors, 35.7 cents; baggagemen, 27.5 cents; flagmen and rear brakemen, 26 cents; brakemen, 25.5 cents.

For the freight service, the chief awards are: Through runs, conductor, 4 cents a mile; flagmen, 2.67 a mile; breakman, 2.67 a mile; any run less than 100 miles to be paid for as if it were 100 miles. In this way freight, pick up or drop, mine and roustabout service, same minimum; conductors are awarded $4.50 a day of 100 miles or less, 10 hours or less; flagmen, $3.10, and brakemen, $3; overtime to be paid for as time and one-half.

Married

COLEMAN—CHANEY—Wednesday, Nov. 5th, at the parsonage, Frostburg, G. H. Coleman, of Sutton, and Miss Nellie May Chaney, of Avilton, were married by the Rev. J. C. Walker, pastor of the First Baptist church.

NEDROW—GLOVER—Mr. Charles P. Nedrow of Addison, Pa., and Miss Hattie Glover of Friendsville, Md., were united in marriage on Friday evening, Oct. 3, at the Lutheran parsonage, at Salisbury, Pa., by the Rev. L. P. Young. This young couple have a large circle of friends who wish them much happiness and prosperity.

This Year's Crop Very Valuable

It not infrequently happens that comparative small crops sell for more money in the aggregate than very large ones. Last year's great crop, much exceeding any previous one, was worth a good deal less than crops of several preceding years when production was considerably smaller. The most valuable corn crop, prior to this year, from the money point of view, was that of 1909, when the production was satisfactory but not abnormal. This year's sub-normal crop will be worth a good deal more than last year's and will probably somewhat exceed in value the 1909 crop. It will be the smallest in more than a decade, but in all likelihood the most vaulable ever produced.

KANSAS WEDDING CEREMONY.

Justice Committed Couple Until Fees and Costs Were Paid.

A record of an unique early day marriage ceremony in Kansas was found a few days ago among some old documents in the probate judge's office at the court house. In the late '60s "Squire" Aplington, of the first settlers in the county, widely known and well liked, was elected a justice of the peace. He had very little "book learning," and not much knowledge of law, but he was a rough and ready orator of parts, and when a couple appeared at his office to be married, he was equal to the emergency, although he never before had married a couple and had no form of procedure to go by. Quite a crowd came with the bride and groom, and one of them took down the ceremony as the judge said it.

After all the preliminaries had been arranged, Squire Aplington lined the bride and groom, Amos Peabody and Amanda Thomas, and their witnesses up before him and said:

"Fellow Citizens—This here man and this here woman have appeared before this court to be hitched in the legal bonds of wedlock. If any galoot in the mob knows of anything that might block the game if took to a higher court, let him toot his bazoo or else keep his jaw to himself now and forevermore. All in favor of my proceeding as authorized by law, say 'I,' contrary 'No.' Nobody said 'No,' and the motion is carried unanimously, and the court rules there is nothing to prevent the trying of the case.

"Now (to the couple) grip your fins. (The couple joined hands). Amos Peabody do you solemnly swear that you'll freeze to Mandy for-ever and provide for her and treat her square and white according to the rules and regulations set down to govern such cases in the laws of the United States, so help you God?"

"Yes, sir, I do." Amos said.

"That fixes you end of the bargain Mandy Thomas, do you solemny swear that you'll hang to Amos for all coming time; that you'll nurse him in sickness and be square with him in wellness; that you ll always be to him a good, true, honest, up and up wife, under the penalties prescribed for such offenses?"

"I swear I will," the bride replied.

"Then by the power vested in me as justice of the peace in and for Morris county, state of Kansas, I, John Aplington, pronounce you Amos Peabody, husband, and you, Mandy Thomas, wife, and legalize you to remain such now and forever more, and stand committed until the fees and costs in the cases are paid in full and God have mercy on your souls."

THE JOHNS HOPKINS UNIVERSITY

State Scholarships in Engineering Courses.

Applications for scholarships in the Department of Engineering, established in The Johns Hopkins University under the provisions of the Laws of Maryland, Chapter 90, 1912, should now be made.

Entrance examinations for all students will be held in McCoy Hall, The Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, on Sept. 30 Oct. 2nd, 1913, beginning at 9 a. m.

If there is more than one applicant for a particular scholarship a competative examination will be held at the University immediately following the examinations for entrance.

In addition to certain collegiate scholarships, the Act provides for 6 scholarships at large and 102 scholarships, each for one year, to be apportioned among the counties and legislative districts of Baltimore city, the same number of awards so far as possible to be made each year. The undergraduate courses in Engineering will extend through four years and it has been determined to offer 33 scholarships in the year 1913-14. Allegany, Baltimore and Washington counties and the four legislative districts of Baltimore city will each be entitled to two scholarships, and each of the other counties to one scholarship in October, 1913. The six scholarships at large may also be awarded at that time.

Applicants for scholarships should address the Registrar, The Johns Hopkins University for the blank forms of application and for further information as to the examinations and the award of scholarships.—Advertisement.

Order of Publication.

John T. Steyer and wife, vs. Branard Coal Company, and Condersport Trust Company, Trustees.

No. —— Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree to vacate, annul, rescind and set aside a certain lease executed by the plaintiffs to one H. M. Datesman, his heirs and assigns, and now held by the defendants.

This bill states that on June 21, 1911, the plaintiffs leased to H. M. Datesman, his heirs and assigns, all the coal underlying Military Lot No. 36, and all that part of Military Lot No. 10 not covered or held by the heirs of Israel Thompson, situate in Garrett county, Maryland, and by certain mesne and sundry conveyances and equity proceedings in the Circuit Court for Garrett County, the interest of said Datesman in said coal is now vested in the said Branard Coal Company, and in the said Condersport Trust Company, Trustee, mortgagee, by conveyances duly of record in Garrett county aforesaid, and that by the terms of said lease covenanted to pay 5 cents per ton for each and every ton of coal mined and taken out of said land, settlement and payment therefor to be made January and July 1st in each year during the existence of said lease, and that Branard Coal Company has failed and refused to make said payments according to said lease, and that by the further terms of said lease, the said lessee was to mine and take out the first year after beginning operations on said land the minimum of 500 tons, and 1,000 tons the second year and 2,000 tons each succeeding year thereafter during the existence of said lease, and whether said number of tons be taken out or not, said lessee was to pay for said number of tons each year, and that said minimum royalty, amounting to the sum of $—— per annum, has not been paid since January 1, 1911, and is now more than two and one half years in arrears, and that said Branard Coal Company refuses to make such payment, and refuses to carry out and perform its covenants, as set forth in said lease, and that the plaintiffs are being deprived of their property and the revenue therefrom to which they are entitled under said lease, and that they are entitled to a decree declaring said lease null and void, and that the same be rescinded and set aside.

The bill they prays for a decree declaring said lease null and void and at an end, and rescinding and setting the same aside, and for general relief, and an order of publication against the defendants, who are non residents of this State, and a subpoena against said Branard Coal Company for service upon its statutory agent residing in the State of Maryland.

It is therefore ordered by the Circuit Court for Garrett County, sitting in Equity, this 4th day of October, 1913, that the plaintiffs, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 8th day of November, 1913, give notice to the said absent defendants of the object and substance of this bill, warning them to appear in this Court in person or by solicitor, on or before the 25th day of November, 1913, to show cause, if any they have, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

FOUGHT WAY THROUGH SNOW TO SAVE HIS WIFE

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Speicher Had Thrilling Experience.

Caught in a whirling snow storm on the new State road in this county while on her way to Baltimore to undergo an operation, Mrs. Charles Speicher, of Accident, was forced to remain in an automobile Sunday morning while her husband searched the surrounding country for a sled and horse to carry her to Oakland, where they were to board a train.

Because of his courage and untiring efforts, Mr. Speicher's mission was successful, and with his sick wife he reached Oakland in time to catch the Baltimore and Ohio train, which arrived in Baltimore at 1 o'clock Monday morning.

Mrs. Speicher is now at the Maryland General Hospital, where she was taken in a taxicab from Camden Station. She was operated on by Dr. Ridgeley Marfield. She is suffering from a complication of diseases.

The story of the struggle to reach the depot at Oakland is best told in the words of a local physician, who accompanied Mrs. Speicher to Baltimore. Her husband, who was so fatigued by the hardships he endured while tramping through the snowfilled roads searching for a sled, that he was forced to return to his home.

"Mr. and Mrs. Speicher left their home early Sunday morning in an automobile," said the physician. "It had been raining all day Saturday and late that night the rain turned to snow.

"After the couple left their home the snow fell harder and every moment the flakes became larger. They thought at first that they could reach Oakland without any difficult.

"When their journey was half completed the snow on the State road had piled up so high that it was impossible to drive the machine through it. Thinking only of his wife, who was ill, Mr. Speicher wrapped her carefully in several blankets and, making her as comfortable as possible, told her that he would go for a sled and horses to continue the journey.

"His mission, however, was much more difficult than anticipated. He was forced to make a path through drifts of snow that in some places were seven feet high. After several hours of labor he succeeded in reaching a farmhouse, where he obtained the sled and horses and returned to the side of his wife, who by this time was half frozen.

"The remaining part of the trip to Oakland was also beset with many difficulties, because it took almost superhuman strength on the part of the horses to pull the sled through the snow.

"At Oakland I met them. Mrs. Speicher, though suffering greatly, did not complain."

The demand for butter and eggs in Oakland and vicinity is greater than the supply and command high prices. That there is money in butter and eggs no one will question. This being true, why not plan to meet the demand? There is no trouble to raise chickens and there is always a demand for chickens and eggs. Others have made money by engaging in the business, why not you? Put the poultry houses in good shape for the winter. Protect your fowls from the storms, give them proper attention and you will have results.

The farmers of Garrett county are beginning to be large producers and shippers of grain, baled hay and straw, cattle and sheep. This is as it should be. Car load shipments of each of the above are frequent. The demand for Garrett county buckwheat flour is greater than the mills can supply, greater because the millers cannot get the buckwheat to make into flour. It is up to the farmer to increase his crop of buckwheat, both in acreage and in yield. More grain of all kinds, more sheep, more cattle, more of everything raised on the farm means more money, better farmhouses, better barns, better roads, better school houses, and better church buildings. The REPUBLICAN congratulates the farmers on what they have accomplished thus far and wishes them a more prosperous career as the years come and go.

Federal Bird Law in Effect.

President Wilson has just approved the new federal regulations for the protection of migratory, game and insectivorous birds, promulgated by the department of agriculture in conformity with the act of congress passed March 4 last. The regulations become effective immediately. Protection is to be extended to all insectivorous birds throughout the year.

Mr. George Rodeheaver, the local secretary of the Commission, conducted the examination were: Samuel Welch, of Mountain Lake Park; Miss Virginia White, Miss Gertie Shirer. Inskip Sollars, Wade Mason, Robert White, Truman Bittinger, and August Killius, of Oakland. The papers have been forwarded to the Commission at Washington who will do the rating.

Dines Every Pair He Weds.

The Rev. M. H. Lacy of Charleston, W. Va., is convinced it pays to advertise. He advertises a free dinner with every marriage he preforms, and as a result he is preforming the bulk of the marriages in that city, especially those of eloping couples who come to Charleston. He has been averaging five marriages a day, and competing ministers are cudgeling their brains for some inducement that will divert the business to them. The Rev. Lacy makes his home at a hotel, and the dinners are served there.

Miss Anna Lowenstein left Oakland last Thursday afternoon to visit friends at Morgantown and Fairmont.

Mr. Harry Lowenstein, who is now in charge of the city pump station, made a trip to Baltimore on Thursday night, returning to Oakland Sunday morning. He was accompanied by Master Wortman whe had been a guest of the Lowenstine home for the past few months.

MARYLAND NEWS IN SHORT ORDER

The Latest Gleanings From All Over the State.

The passing of tollgates in Montgomery county was accomplished, when the Union Turnpike Company transferred to the State Roads Commission the 16 miles of road from the District of Columbia line to Ashton by way of Wheaton, Norbeck, Olney and Sandy Spring and to the County Commissioners the nine miles from Olney to Brookeville and from Sandy Spring to Ednor. For the section acquired by the commission $20,000 was paid and the County Commissioners paid $5,000 for the other nine miles. Immediately after the transfers were made President Charles F. Kirk, of the turnpike company, notified the tollgate keepers at Sligo, Wheaton, Olney and Sandy Spring to collect no more tolls. The Good Roads Commission, it is announced, will at once begin the work of improving its 16 miles at an estimated cost of about $5,000 a mile, and the County Commissioners are expected to do likewise with the other nine miles, but will probably not start the work until next year.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company has made several changes in agents at stations on the Cambridge and Seaford branch, as follows: J. T. Jump, transferred from Wyoming to Cambridge, to take charge of the freight department; Martin L. Smith, present freight agent, will assume charge of passenger traffic; A. T. Scotten, transferred from East New Market to Wyoming, and Charles Hill, clerk at the Lewes depot, will take Scotten's place at East New Market. I. E. Christopher has been made general agent at Hurlock in place of Laban Harper. Roland T. Anderson was transferred from Federalsburg to Dover and William Wheatley sent to Federalsburg from Blacks.

Marylanders fared well in Postmaster-General Burleson's announcement of increases in salaries in the Postoffice Department: Robert H Shepherd, of Maryland, had his pay increased from $660 to $720; Charles Abert, from $1,000 to $1,200; Charles F Creager, from $1,600 to $1,500; George T. Sinclair, from $720 to $900; Richard E. Murdock, from $720 to $900, and Paul W. Stauffer, from $720 to $1,000. The lucky Marylanders are clerks in the department.

Treasurer Jacob Tyson and Howard Magruder, of the Board of Charities and Corrections, have recommended to the County Commissioners to remove all insane patients from Montevue Hospital to the State institution, where they will be cared for at $100 a year. The cost of maintenance at the Frederick asylum has been about $212 a year. The Frederick farm, including the buildings, represents an outlay of $200,000.

The Belair Minstrel Club has been organized with Norman L. Kisling president and manager and Charles O. Lee secretary and treasurer. The members of the club are: William G. Hopkins, Stanley Walter, Emory Mc Comas, Oscar DeCourse, Wilton Mc Abee, Frank Webb, Leltoy Coale, Joseph Shanahan, Richard Bode, Walter B. Young, Simon Getts, Paul Grafton Chinton Rechord and Dr. David I Getts.

At a meeting of the vestry of St Anne's Protestant Episcopal Church Annapolis, the following were elected vestrymen: Rear Admiral Scheuler of the navy; Rudolph Kalsey and Frank A. Munroe. Mr. Munroe was formerly senior warden and W. Mead Holladay was elected to that position while Dr. William N. Berkeley was elected junior warden, vice Mr. Holladay.

Mrs. Minnie B. Trice, of Hurlock agent for her sons, Ralph A. McCarter, of Norristown, Pa., and J. Elwood McCarter, of Dallas, Texas, has sold the McCarter farm, near town, to John W. Schnick. The farm contains 95 acres and was the home of the late Col. J. E. McCarter. The price paid was $9,500.

The State road being built through St. Mary's county is fast nearing completion. An average of 160 yards of road per day is being built. The road is being made of concrete. It is 15 feet wide and when completed will extend from Hughesville to Mechanicsville, a distance of eight miles.

The large stable of A. T. Kingsberry, near Savage, including a lot of corn, hay, harness and farming implements, was destroyed by fire. A bucket brigade saved the dwelling after it had caught fire several times. A horse, badly burned, was taken from the stable. The loss is about $1,260.

During the month of October, Clerk of the Circuit Court of Elkton, Cecil Kirk issued 194 marriage licenses, which is the record month in the history of the office. Since May 1 nearly 800 marriage licenses have been issued.

A lodge of Odd Fellows has been instituted at Galestown with 35 members. A. W. Wheatley was elected noble grand; Luther Wheatley, treasurer; Cook Wheatley, financial secretary, and John T. Collins, recording secretary.

William, young son of Harry Snyder, near Downsville, spilled a kettle of boiling water over himself and was shockingly scalded.

Red Men's Hall, at Fredericksburg, is being enlarged to occupy the entire second floor over the postoffice.

Mrs. Maria Walmsley, aged 89 years, of near Earlville, was found dead in bed from cerebral hemorrhage.

AT ANNAPOLIS

TO ACT ON AMENDMENTS.

Most Of Those Passed Now Depend On Legislature.

Legislative action will be necessary to put in force most of the amendments to the State Constitution adopted at last week's election. This is true of the condemnation, printing, anti-bribery and Attorney General's department amendments.

Those providing for an additional judge in the Third judicial circuit, composed of Harford and Baltimore counties, and for increasing the salaries of the State's Attorney for Baltimore city and his deputy and assistants operate automatically.

The condemnation amendment provides that the Legislature may authorize the courts to appoint appraisers, upon whose valuation property in Baltimore city may be taken for public purposes by the city or the State, subject to adjustment to such valuation as may be made by a jury in case the jury allows a higher price. This amendment cannot become effective until the authority has been given the courts to appoint appraisers.

The printing amendment, providing that the Legislature may print bills instead of engrossing them by hand, will be carried out by the rules adopted by the Legislature; the anti-bribery amendment provides that the penalty for election bribery may be put upon the vote-buyer alone and the Legislature will have to pass laws to that effect to give it force; and, of course, the amendment providing for assistants to the Attorney-General who will advise the various State departments will depend upon action of the Legislature in fixing the number and salaries of the assistants.

Under the provisions of the amendment for the additional judge, his selection is to take place at the first election following the adoption of the amendment. That will be the Congressional election next year.

There has been a general idea that the new judge would come from Baltimore county because the great bulk of the court business in the Third district arises there. This may not happen, however, because the point is made that of the three judges now in the district, Baltimore county has two Judge Burke and Judge Duncan and is not entitled to a third, while Harford county has only one member of the bench, Judge William H. Harlan.

Nevertheless, Baltimore countians already are talking about their judicial timber. Z. Howard Isaac has been mentioned and former State's Attorney Robert H. Bussey is said to be a candidate. Elmer J. Cook has also been mentioned. All are Democrats.

The amendment increasing the salaries in the State's Attorney's office will become effective when proclaimed by the Governor. This will probably be done in a short while. The increases are $5,400 for the State's Attorney instead of $4,500; $4,000 for the Deputy State's Attorney instead of $3,500, and not more than $2,500 for the assistants.

MAN AND WOMAN IN DUEL.

Mrs. Hutton and Thomas J. Garrett Engage In Pistol Battle.

Rockville.—A fusillade of shots coming from the home of William P. Hutton, at Linden, Montgomery county, disturbed the usual quiet of that little village and the announcement a few minutes later that a double shooting had occurred at the Hutton home created intense excitement. The participants of the shooting were Mrs. Hutton, who is at her home, suffering from four pistol shot wounds, and Thomas J. Garrett, of Linden, who is in a Washington hospital with a pistol shot wound of the abdomen, for which he holds Mrs. Hutton responsible. Mrs. Hutton says Garrett shot her. It is not thought that the wounds of either will prove fatal. According to a statement made by Mrs. Hutton to States Attorney W. O. Spates and Sheriff Clifford L. Howard, she and her husband separated several weeks ago. Recently, Mrs. Hutton says, Garrett has been calling on her frequently without any encouragement from her.

Mrs. Hutton says, Garrett called at her home and was under the influence of liquor. Upon entering the house, she says, he drew a revolver and informed her that he was going to kill her and then himself, at the same time pressing the weapon to her side. He did not carry out his threat, however, but told Mrs Hutton to go upstairs and that when she reached there to holler and he would blow out his brains. Mrs. Hutton told the authorities that she went upstairs and got a revolver from a bureau drawer, and that Garrett followed, calling to her that he had changed his mind and that she would have to die with him. As Garrett approached her, Mrs. Hutton says she turned and the firing began. Mrs. Hutton did not know whether she or Garrett fired the first shot, but thinks Garrett did, because she felt a burning sensation in her right thigh, where one of Garrett's bullets entered, before she pulled the trigger.

A new lodge of Odd Fellows has been instituted at Galestown, with 35 members.

J. E. England has purchased the Charles England farm, in Kent county, for $5,050.

THE THIRTEENTH AT WHITE HOUSE

TWELVE OTHER WEDDINGS.

Great Interest Taken By the American People In the Event—The Other Weddings That Have Taken Place There.

Washington.—In two weeks one of the most interesting events scheduled for this season will take place, and that is the wedding of the second daughter of the President of the United States. Miss Jessie Wilson will when she becomes the bride of Mr. Frances Bowen Sayre make the thirteenth bride to have been married in the White House. From now on speculation will be rife as to the gifts, the trousseau, the list of wedding guests, and the thousand and one things that concern the young woman, who follows bravely in her father's footsteps and says, "Well, thirteen always was my lucky number."

Mr. Sayre, who is to share with Miss Wilson all the agreeable publicity of a White House wedding, probably cares as little as she that the wedding will be the thirteenth to be celebrated in the romantic old colonial mansion, dear to all Americans, and known to all familiarly, as the White House, instead of the more stately and perhaps dignified name of the Executive Mansion. In itself it is a romantic old mansion, it even has a ghost or several, according to the old time colored folk, who claim to have seen the "haunts" under the big front portico. But if there is a spook, it must be a beneficient old soul, for from this house of dreams the way to happiness has led for at least 12 other couples.

A White House wedding is an event to stir one's blood in Washington. When Miss Alice Roosevelt became the bride of Representative Nicholas Longworth in 1906 pages and pages were written concerning the event for days and even weeks before. It seemed to be almost the only topic of news of interest to the people. And why should it not be, the White House being the house of the people, and its occupants put there by the people?

An Historic List.

The wedding of Miss Wilson and Mr. Sayre, will be the last up to date of a long list of historic weddings which have since 1811 taken place in the White House. The first was that of Lucy Payne Washington, sister of Mrs. James Madison, the wife of the then President Madison, who was married to D. Judge Todd, of Kentucky. The others who have pledged their troth in the famous old mansion are:

In 1826, John Adams, son of President Adams, married his cousin, Helen Jackson.

From 1829 to 1837, during the Jackson administration, there were three weddings. Della Lewis, a friend of President Jackson's, was married to Alphonse Joseph Yver Pageot, an attache of the French Legation. Mary Easton, niece of President Jackson, was married to Lucien B. Polk, and Emily Martin, a connection of the Jackson family, was married to Lewis Randolph.

In 1878, Emily Pratt, niece of President Hayes, and Gen. Russell Hastings were married.

In 1886, President Cleveland and Frances Folsom were married.

The daughters of Presidents who have married from the White House were Maria Monroe, who married her cousin, Samuel Gouverneur; Elizabeth Tyler, who married William Waller; Nellie Grant, who married Algernon Sartoris, and Alice Roosevelt, who married Nicholas Longsworth. Miss Wilson will be the fifth daughter of a president to be married in the White House.

EGGS 75 CENTS A DOZEN.

New York Dealers Expect Price To Go Still Higher.

New York.—Eggs are so scarce in New York that dealers have put the retail prices up to 75 cents a dozen for the best quality, and prospects are that they will go from 3 to 5 cents a dozen higher. The present wholesale price is 62 cents a dozen, although certain brands of Western eggs may be obtained for 43 cents a dozen. Failure of hens to lay this year and a shortage in the cold storage supply are given by dealers as reasons for the scarcity.

COST OF PANAMA CANAL.

Will Be Well Within the Appropriation Of $375,200,900.

Washington.—Colonel Goethals, in charge of Panama Canal construction, expects to finish his work well within the allotted appropriation of $375,200,900. This means that the cost of completion of the big ditch must be within $36,394,038.32, the amount remaining. Plans for furnishing the needed money have been made by the House Appropriations Committee and will be rushed through the House immediately upon the return of the committee from its inspection of the project.

COTTON CROP REPORT.

Ginning Conditions For Fall Of 1913 Nearly Same As Last Season.

Washington.—A crop report just issued by the Census Bureau estimates the number of bales of cotton ginned from the growth of 1913 to November 1 to have been 8,835,913 bales, counting round as half bales. Last year the total was 8,869,222. Round bales included this year are 61,820, compared with 54,539 in 1912. Sea Island included for 1913 was 142,769, against 28,887 for 1912.

A HARD PROBLEM

GIRL BINDS AND GAGS HERSELF

Saturates Clothing With Kerosene and Starts a Fire.

FAKES STORY OF ASSAULT.

Believed That So Much Thought Of Danger Of Attacks Became a Mania With the Woman.

Chicago.—Fernwood, a residence suburb, was thrown into great excitement when Gertrude Hanson, aged 17, a pretty domestic in the employ of Mrs. Otto V. Johns, was found unconscious in the basement, her feet and hands tied, a gag in her mouth, her clothing saturated with kerosene and the basement room blazing with burning paper.

The rumor quickly spread that the girl had been assaulted and then stricken down with a hammer and the house set on fire to conceal the crime. Detectives rushed to the district and began rounding up all suspicious characters.

After a long cross-examination, the girl confessed to the police that she tied her feet, gagged herself, soaked her clothing with kerosene, set fire to a lot of waste paper in the basement and then tied a handkerchief over her eyes and slipped her hands into a noose previously prepared. The dense fumes from the burning paper rendered her unconscious and she would have perished had not Mrs. Johns smelled the smoke and rushed into the basement. She dragged the unconscious girl outside and a chemical engine company made short work of the fire.

The girl is unable to explain her queer actions or give any motive. She says she has been in constant alarm because of attacks upon women in the suburbs. The case bears many aspects of the notorious Ella Gingles affair. In that case a girl told of being dragged into a bathroom in a hotel and assaulted, after being tortured for a long time. It resulted in a trial that attracted international interest and at its close the girl was sent back to Ireland, where she afterward married.

The Hanson girl is unusually pretty and a mere child. The police believe she gave so much thought to the danger of attacks upon women and girls that it became a mania with her, and she probably bound and gagged herself in the manner she feared she would be bound and gagged if she should find a man hiding in the basement.

JEROME WINS IN THAW CASE.

Governor Of New Hampshire Honors New York Requisition.

Concord, N. H.—Governor Felker honored the requisition of the State of New York for the extradition of Harry K. Thaw. The case is now transferred automatically to the Federal courts, where a writ of habeas corpus on behalf of Thaw is pending.

The Governor based his decision on the indictment returned against Thaw in New York county, which charged him with conspiracy to escape from the insane asylum at Matteawan, N. Y., to which he was committed after his second trial for the killing of Stanford White. At a conference of counsel following the decision it was agreed that the status quo should continue for a week, Thaw remaining here in his present custody, during which time his counsel will prepare the papers for the procedure in the United States Court.

FREAK INCOME TAX QUERY.

Can It Stop Income Of Grafters and Burglars At the Source?

Washington.—"Does the new income tax have any regulation whereby you can stop entirely at its source the income of burglars and grafters?" This was the freak inquiry which added to the manifold tribulations already besetting administrators of the new law at the Treasury Department.

PARCEL POST PROFITABLE.

Earnings During Year 1913 Will Be About $30,000,000.

Washington.—The profits to the government from the operation of the new parcel post system during the calendar year 1913 will be about $30,000,000. The new system became effective on January 1 last. It was estimated that the profits for the first year would be about $15,000,000, but the actual figures now in possession of postal officials convince them that the profit will be $30,000,000 for the first year.

OLTIMATUM ON CURRENCY BILL

Fundamentals Must Be Restored or Caucus Will Be Called.

DEMOCRATIC LEADERS AGREE

Telegrams Sent To Absentee Senators Directing Them To Return. Measure Is Greatly Changed.

Washington.—Democratic leaders in the Senate have decided that unless the Senate, Banking and Currency Committee promptly voted back into the Administration Currency bill some of the fundamentals that it had eliminated, a party conference or caucus would be called to consider the subject. Telegrams were sent to absent Democrats urging them to return to Washington at once.

The Senate committee had continued to make changes in the House bill to which supporters of the Administration took exception and a number of Democratic Senators at the White House told President Wilson that no progress would be made by permitting the House bill to be buffeted about in a committee wherein a coalition of Republicans and "insurgent" Democrats would alter the entire theory of the measure. It is not known what position the President took. Newspaper men who asked the President whether a caucus would be called were told by him that it was a subject for the Senate to decide.

STEAMERS FOR PANAMA CANAL

Hamburg-American Company Increases Capital Stock.

Hamburg.—The Hamburg-American Steamship Company adopted a resolution at a meeting here to increase its capital from $37,500,000 to $45,000,000. The additional capital, it was explained, was required to build a larger fleet of freight steamers in view of the opening of the Panama Canal and the establishment of a new line to the Orient.

BLOWN FROM CANNON'S MOUTH.

Nine Plotters Against Ameer Of Afghanistan Executed.

Allahabad, British India.—Nine ring leaders of an abortive plot recently discovered against the reigning Ameer of Afghanistan, Habibullah Khan, were executed at Kabul, the Afghanistan capital. The conspirators were blown from the mouths of cannon.

SUIT AGAINST NEW HAVEN.

Alleges Engineer Was Allowed To Work Too Long

Providence, R. I.—Alleging that an engineer on the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad was allowed to work more than 16 hours out of 24, United States District Attorney Walter R. Stines brought suit against the company here. The suit is the first of the kind ever brought in this jurisdiction.

SECRET DIVORCES ABOLISHED.

Proceedings In Washington Will Be Heard In Open Court.

Washington.—Secret divorce proceedings have been abolished in the capital's courts by a revision of rules which will provide that all divorce cases and proceedings for annulments of marriages shall be heard in open court and that witness shall be examined publicly.

CALLS FRANCHISE "A BURDEN."

Rhode Island "Antis" Say Women Don't Want To Vote.

Providence, R. I.—At the annual meeting of the State Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage, the president, Mrs. Rowland G. Hazard, said a canvass of the women in Rhode Island had proved that they regarded votes for women as "an unnecessary burden."

BRYAN AT FOOD SHOW.

Gets Armful Of Samples and Sees Many Women With Auburn Locks.

Washington.—Secretary of State William Jennings Bryan, who carries his lunch to work and does his own marketing, figured on some new menus as a result of his visit to the National Food Show, where he sampled grape juice, gathered in an armful of food samples and was dazzled by the presence of 1,500 titian haired women invited for "red haired ladies' night."

HISTORIC FBIGATE BURNED FOR JUNK

Santee's Final Voyage Was From Baltimore Harbor.

HAD SUNK AT ANNAPOLIS.

Vessel a Practice Ship At Naval Academy After Usefulness As Fighter Was Over—Saw Years Of Service As Prison.

Boston, Mass.—On the beach of Governors Island was burned for junk the historic wooden frigate, Santee, remnant of the early days of the navy, one-time practice ship of the midshipmen at Annapolis and known to practically every officer in the service through the fact that for years she was used as a prison for disobedient middies. The Santee, which was in Admiral Farragut's fleet at Mobile, burned fiercely, her timbers, dried by many years, making fine fuel. The blaze was visible for miles at sea. The old warship had been bought by a junk concern for her brass fittings.

The selling of the historic vessel was not considered by the government until after she had sprung a leak and sunk at her dock at Annapolis.

After the sunken vessel had been sold for junk, the firm which bought the historic craft had her towed to Baltimore, where she was drydocked and made sufficiently seaworthy to stand the trip to Boston for dismantling.

The Santee was built just before the Civil War, but because of a mistake in her design she was never used for any important service. Tradition has it that the error was pointed out to the designer by his young son, and the designer shot himself on the deck of the vessel. The mistake was that the portholes were built directly opposite each other, thus affording an open line of fire to an opposing vessel.

GERMANY FOR IT

Combination Of Powers In Support Of American Policy.

Berlin.—At the German Foreign Office it was said that a combination of the powers in support of the United States would be considered by Germany and other European powers in case the United States expressed a wish in that direction. If, however, such a suggestion came from Provisional President Huerta, it would not be considered by Germany unless the United States desired it.

PLAGUE MENACES PANAMA.

Increase Of Yellow Fever In South America Alarms Officials.

Washington.—The presence of bubonic plague and yellow fever on the great trade routes from the south converging upon the Panama Canal is giving grave concern to American health officials. Consul Baker reported to the State Department that during the month of October there were 112 cases of plague in Guayaquil and that yellow fever was on the increase there.

EDITOR'S SKULL FRACTURED.

Has Fight With Defeated Candidate In Boston.

Boston.—Pre-election hostilities in Boston between Representative Thos. J. Giblin and James E. Maguire, a newspaper editor, were resumed when the two men met on the street. When the argument was ended Maguire was taken to a hospital to be treated for a fractured skull, and the police began a search for Giblin, who was defeated for re-election in the recent election.

30 MONTHS FOR "POISONED PEN."

Woman Who Confessed Writing Letters Also Fined.

Freeport, Ill.—Mrs. Antone Enzler, who confessed writing improper letters to Alta Rosenstiel, was sentenced by Judge Landis to 30 months' imprisonment at Leavenworth, Kan., and to pay a fine of $10. Mrs. Enzler's confession was the sensation of the recent trial of Dr. B. A. Arnold, of this city, who had been accused of writing the letters.

THEY FOUND OUT.

Two Young Men In Dying Condition Because Of Curiosity.

Newburgh, N. Y.—Finding a vial of small round tablets on the street, Edward Grant, aged 27, and William Delchanty, 28, swallowed some of the contents and are now in a hospital here in a dying condition. Both were found semi-conscious on the river front. "We knew the tablets were poisonous," said Grant, "but we wanted to learn what they tasted like."

PROMOTED FOR RESCUE.

First Officer Of Grosser Kurfuerst Is Made a Captain.

New York.—Maurice Spangenberg, first officer of the steamer Grosser Kurfuerst, was promoted to a captaincy in recognition of the rescue by himself and his men of 105 passengers of the steamer Volturno, which burned at sea. Spangenberg was in command of the Grosser Kurfuerst when she aided the burning liner.

TREATING CONVICTS KINDLY.

Stripes Abolished At the San Quentin Penitentiary.

San Quentin, Cal.—At San Quentin Penitentiary there are but six striped suits worn. These are used by the men in solitary confinement. Around the bonfire which destroyed the striped uniforms stood nearly 2,000 convicts in gray casket suits. Music of the prison band mustered out the historic convict markers. Hereafter there will be marks for the different classes.

COMMERCIAL

Weekly Review of Trade and Market Reports.

Bradstreet's says:

"Trade reports are of a twofold character. On the one hand, distributive trade continues to expand, holiday business is growing and the tendency is to increase estimates of yields of Cotton and Corn, but against these factors must be cited the further slowing down of wholesale trade and increased quietude in Iron and Steel.

"Some lines that might be active prefer to wait for tariff readjustments, an example being furnished by worsted mills, which deem it good policy to hold back for free wool. However, it is plainly patent that the daily wants of a large population are sufficient to keep things moving along at a satisfactory rate, and even in sections where there is a tendency to pessimism it is conceded that business is equal to that of last year, when activity reigned.

"Business failures for the week were 241, which compares with 209 in 1912."

SYNOPSIS.

Scarlett, an American soldier of fortune in the employ of the French Imperial Police at the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian war, is ordered to arrest John Buckhurst, a leader of the Communists and suspected of having stolen the French crown jewels. While searching for Buckhurst, Scarlett is ordered to arrest Countess de Vassart and her group of socialists and escort them to the Belgian border. Scarlett finds Sylvia Elven of the Odeon disguised as a peasant and carries her to La Trappe, where the countess and her friends are assembled. All are arrested. The countess says Scarlett from a fatal fall from the roof of the house. He denounces Buckhurst as the leader of the Reds and the countess conducts him to where Buckhurst is secreted. German Uhlans descend on the place and Buckhurst escapes during the melee. Scarlett is wounded. He recovers consciousness in the countess' house at Morsbronn, where he is cared for by the countess. A fierce battle is fought in the streets between French and Prussian soldiers. Buckhurst professes repentence and returns the crown jewels to Scarlett. He declares he will give himself up to the authorities. Scarlett doubts his sincerity. Buckhurst urges the countess to go to Paradise.

CHAPTER VII.

A Struggle Foreshadowed.

I took my breakfast by the window, watching the German soldiery cleaning up Morsbronn.

A soldier came in and started the fire in my fireplace. When he went out I drew my code-book from my breeches pocket and tossed it into the fire. After it followed my commission, my memoranda, and every scrap of writing. The diamonds I placed in the bosom of my flannel shirt.

A German ambulance surgeon arrived to see me in the afternoon.

After a brief examination he sat down and resumed a very bad cigar, which had been smouldering between his carefully kept fingers.

"Do you know," he said admiringly "that I have never before seen just such a wound. The spinal column is not even grazed. As far as I can see the blow from the bullet temporarily paralyzed the spinal cord. There is no fracture, no depression. I do not see why you should not walk if you desire to."

"When? Now?"

"Try it," he said, briefly.

I tried. Apart from a certain muscular weakness and a great fatigue, I found it quite possible to stand even to move a few steps. Then I sat down again, and was glad to do so.

The doctor was looking at my legs rather grimly, and it suddenly flashed on me that I had dropped my blanket and he had noticed my hussar's trousers.

"So," he said, "you are a military prisoner? I understood from the provost marshal that you were a civilian."

As he spoke Buckhurst appeared at the door, and then cautioned in, quietly greeting the surgeon, who looked around at the sound of his footsteps on the stone floor. There was no longer a vestige of doubt in my mind that Buckhurst was a German agent, or at least that the Germans believed him to be in their pay. And doubtless he was in their pay, but to whom he was faithful nobody could know with any certainty.

"How is our patient, doctor?" he asked. "Can he travel today?"

"Before he travels," said the officer, "it might be well to find out why he wears part of a hussar uniform."

"I've explained that to the provost," observed Buckhurst, examining his well-kept finger-nails. "And I have a pass for him also if he is in a fit condition to travel."

The officer gave him a glance full of frank dislike, adjusted his saber, pulled on his white gloves, and, bowing very slightly to me, marched straight out of the room and down the stairs without taking any notice of Buckhurst. The latter looked after the officer, then his indifferent eyes returned to me. Presently he sat down and produced a small slip of paper, which he very carefully twisted into a cocked hat.

"I suppose you doubt my loyalty to France," he said.

Then, logically continuing my role of the morning, I began to upbraid him for a traitor and swear that I would not owe my salvation to him.

"You are unjust and a trifle stupid," he said. "I am paid by Prussia for information which I never give. But I have the entre of their lines. I do it for the sake of the Internationale. The Internationale has a few people in its service. . . . And it pays them well."

He looked squarely at me as he said this. I almost trembled with delight: the man undervalued me, he had taken me at my own figure, and now, holding me in absolute contempt, he was going to begin on me.

"Scarlett," he said, in English, "let us come to the point. I am a mercenary American; you are an American mercenary, paid by the French government. You care nothing for that government or for the country; you would drop both today if your pay ceased. You and I are outsiders; we are in the world to watch our chances. And our chance is here.

"The time is coming when the richest city in Europe will be put to the sack. You don't believe it? Yet you shall live to see Paris besieged, and you shall live to see Paris surrender, and you shall live to see the Internationale rise up from nowhere, seize the government by the throat, and choke it to death under the red flag of universal ahem! . . . license"—the faintest sneer came into his pallid face—"and every city of France shall be a commune, and we shall pass from city to city, leisurely, under the law—our laws, which we will make—and I pity the man among us who cannot place his millions in the banks of England and America!"

He leaned forward in his chair, idly twisting his crumpled bit of paper in one hand.

"I am not fool enough to believe that our reign will last," he said. "It may last a month, two months, perhaps three. Then we leaders will be at one another's throats—and the game is up! It's always so—mob rule can't last—it never has lasted and never will. But the prudent man will make hay before the brief sunshine is ended; I expect to economize a little, and set aside enough—well, enough to make it pay, you see."

"He's bound to get to Paradise. Why?" I wondered, and said, aloud.

"What do you want of me?"

"I want immunity from the secret police, Mr. Scarlett."

"There is one thing I want to ask you," said I. "Why do you desire to go to Paradise?"

"Well," he said, slowly, "I shall not tell you."

"Why not?" I demanded.

"—But I'll say this," he continued. "I want you to come to Paradise with me and that fool of a woman. I want you to report to your government that you are watching the house in Paradise, and that you are hoping to catch me there."

"You refuse to tell me why you wish to stay at the house in Paradise?"

"Yes. . . . I refuse. And, by the-way, the Countess is to think that I have presented myself in Paris and that the government has pardoned me."

He rose and walked to the window; at the same moment I heard the sound of wheels below.

"I believe that is our carriage," he said. "Are you ready to start, Mr. Scarlett?"

"Is the Countess de Vassart to go with us?" I asked, trying to find a reason for these events which were succeeding one another too quickly to suit me.

He gave me an absent-minded nod, a moment later the Countess entered. Buckhurst aided me to rise, the Countess threw my hussar jacket over my shoulders and buttoned it. "I congratulate you on your convalescence," she said, in a low voice. "Lean on me, monsieur."

My head swam; hips and knees were without strength; she aided me down the stairway and out into the pale sunshine, where stood the same mud-splashed, rusty vehicle which had brought us hither from La Trappe.

As I stood beside the carriage, wondering how I was going to get in, I felt an arm slip under my neck and another slide gently under my knees and Buckhurst lifted me.

The Countess stepped into the carriage and took her place beside me; Buckhurst followed, seating himself opposite us, and the Alsatian driver mounted to the box.

"Your safe-conduct carries you to the French outposts at Saverne," said the provost dryly. "If there are no longer French outposts at Saverne, you may demand a vise for your pass and continue south to Strasbourg."

Buckhurst half turned towards the driver. "Allez," he said, quietly, and the two gaunt horses moved on.

"Is there a railroad at Saverne?" I asked.

"You will take a train at Strasbourg," replied Buckhurst.

"And then? Are we going direct to Paris?"

"Madame de Vassart desires to go there," he said, glancing at her with a sort of sneaking deference which he now assumed in her presence.

"It is true," said the Countess, turning to me. "I wish to rest for a little while before I go to Point Paradise. I am curiously tired of poverty, Monsieur Scarlett," she added, and held out her shabby gloves with a gesture of despair; "I am reduced to very little—I have scarcely anything left, . . . and I am weak enough to long for the scent of the winter violets on the boulevards."

* * * * * * * *

It was late in the afternoon when the last Prussian outpost hailed us. I had been asleep for hours, but was awakened by the clatter of horses, and I opened my eyes to see a dozen Uhlans come cantering up and surround our carriage. One of the troopers tied a white handkerchief to his lance-tip, wheeled his wiry horse, and, followed by a trumpeter, trotted off ahead of us.

Presently, very far away on the gray-green hillside, I saw a bit of white move. One minute, two, three, ten passed. Then, distant galloping sounded along the road, nearer, nearer; three horsemen suddenly wheeled into view ahead—French dragoons, advancing at a solid gallop. The Uhlan with the flag spurred forward to meet them, saluted, wheeled his horse and came back.

And now the brief ceremony was over and our rusty vehicle moved off down the hill, while the Uhlans turned bridle and clattered off, scattering showers of muddy gravel in the rising wind.

I dozed towards sunset, waking when the Countess stepped back into the carriage and seated herself by my side. Then, after a little, I slept again. And it was nearly dark when I was awakened by the startling whistle of a locomotive. In the dark southern sky a luminous haze hung.

"The lights of Strasbourg," whispered the Countess, as I sat up, rubbing my hot eyes.

I looked for Buckhurst; his place was empty.

"Yes! He boarded a train loaded with wounded. . . . He had business to transact in Colmar before he presented himself to the authorities in Paris. . . . And we are to go by way of Avricourt."

"I Suppose You Doubt My Loyalty to France."

So Buckhurst had already begun to execute his programme. But the abrupt, infernal precision of the man jarred me unpleasantly.

In the dark I felt cautiously for my diamonds; they were safe in my hip-pocket.

Presently our carriage stopped before a tremendous mass of masonry pierced by an iron, arched gate, through which double files of farm wagons were rolling, escorted by customs guards and marines, and we entered Strasbourg in the midst of a crush of vehicles. The Countess and our Alsatian driver helped me to the platform. I looked around with dread at the throng, being too weak to battle for a foothold; but the brave Alsatian elbowed a path for me, and the Countess waded off the plunging human cattle, and at length I found myself beside the cars where line-soldiers stood guard at every ten paces and gendarmes stalked about, shoving the frantic people into double files.

I caught the sleeve of a captain of gendarmerie who was running to enter a first-class compartment.

"Eh—what do you want, monsieur?" he snapped in surprise.

"Try to make room for this lady in your compartment," I said.

"Willingly, monsieur. Hasten, madame; the train is already moving!" I am curiously tired of poverty, Monsieur Scarlett," she added, and held out her shabby gloves with a gesture of despair; "I am reduced to very little—I have scarcely anything left, . . . and I am weak enough to long for the scent of the winter violets on the boulevards."

I am curiously tired of poverty, Monsieur Scarlett," she added, and held out her shabby gloves with a gesture of despair; "I am reduced to very little—I have scarcely anything left, . . . and I am weak enough to long for the scent of the winter violets on the boulevards."

The train was gliding along the asphalt platform; I bobbled beside the locked compartment, where she stood at the window.

The cars were rolling a little faster than I could move along.

"A safe journey, madame," I stammered, catching at the hand she held out and brushing the shabby gloved fingers with my lips.

"I shall never forgive this wanton self-sacrifice," she said, unsteadily. Then the car rolled silently past me, swifter, swifter, and her white face faded from my sight.

The station-master passed, a haggard gentleman in rumpled uniform and gilt cap; and as he left the office by the outer door the heavy explosion of a rampart cannon shook the station.

"Can you get me to Paris?" I asked.

"Quick, then," he muttered; "this way—lean on me, monsieur! I am trying to send another train out—but Heaven alone knows! Quick, this way!"

A car doors swinging wide, glided past me; I caught the rail and fell forward into a compartment.

CHAPTER VIII.

A Man to Let.

The train which bore me out of the arc of the Prussian fire at Strasbourg passed in between the fortifications of Paris the next morning about eleven o'clock. Ten minutes later I was in a closed cab on my way to the headquarters of the Imperial Military Police, temporarily housed in the Luxembourg palace.

I did not enter my door or even glance at it; I continued straight on, down the corridor to a door, on the ground-glass panes of which was printed in red lettering:

"HEADQUARTERS IMPERIAL MILITARY POLICE SAFE DEPOSIT."

I entered, passed rapidly along the face of the steel cage behind which some officers sat on high stools, writing, and presented myself at the guichet marked, "Foreign Division."

A very elegant officer strolled up to the guichet as I laid my bag of diamonds on the glass shelf, languidly unlocked the steel window-gate, and picked up the bag of jewels.

The officer was Mornac, the Emperor's alter ego, or ame damnee, who had taken over the entire department the very day I left Paris for the frontier.

"Name and number?" inquired Mornac, indolently. I gave both.

"You desire to declare?"

I enumerated the diamonds, and designated them as those lately stolen from the crucifix of Louis XI.

Mornac handed me a printed certificate of deposit, opened a compartment in the safe, and tossed in the bag without sealing it.

I limped off past the glittering steel cage, thankful that the jewels were safe, turned into the corridor, and hastened back to my own rooms.

To tear off my toga, bathe, shave, and dress in a light suit of civilian clothes took me longer than usual, for I was a trifle lame.

Pondering, I slowly retraced my steps through the bedroom and dressing-room and out into the tiled hallway, where, at the end of the dim corridor, the door of Colonel Jarras' bureau stood partly open.

As I sat down I glanced around and saw my old comrade, Speed, sitting in a dark corner, chewing a cigarette and watching me in alert silence.

"You are present to report?" suggested Colonel Jarras, heavily.

I began my report, but was immediately stopped by Jarras with a peevish gesture: "All right, all right; keep all that for the Chief of Department. Your report doesn't concern me."

"Doesn't concern you!" I repeated; "are you not chief of this bureau, Colonel Jarras?"

"No," snapped Jarras; "and there's no bureau now—at least no bureau for the Foreign Division."

Speed leaned forward and said: "Scarlett, my friend, the Foreign Division of the Imperial Military Police has been abolished."

"Who the devil did that?" I asked savagely.

"Mornac."

Mornac! The Emperor's shadow! Then truly enough it was all up with the Foreign Division. But the shame of it!—the disgrace of as faithful a body of police, mercenaries though they were, as ever worked for any cause, good or bad.

As we sat there in silence, a soldier came to summon Colonel Jarras, and he went away, leaning on his ivory-headed cane, head bowed over the string of medals on his breast.

When he had gone, Speed came over and shut the door, then shook hands with me.

"He's gone to see Mornac; it will be our turn next. Look out for Mornac, or he'll catch you tripping in your report."

"Look here," I said, angrily, "how can Mornac catch me tripping? I'm not under his orders."

"You are until you're discharged. You see, they've taken it into their heads, since the crucifix robbery, to suspect everybody and anybody short of the Emperor. Mornac came smelling around here the day you left. He's at the bottom of all this—a nice business to cast suspicion on our division because we're foreigners. Gad, he looks like a pickpocket himself—he's got the oblique trick of the eyes and the restless finger movement."

"Perhaps he is," I said.

Speed looked at me sharply.

"If I were in the service now I'd arrest Mornac—if I dared."

Then a soldier appeared to summon us both, and we followed to the temporary bureau.

At a careless nod from Mornac I muttered the formal "I have to report, sir—" and began mumbling a perfunctory account of my movements since leaving Paris.

I told the truth as far as I went, which brought me to my capture by l'Hlans and the natural escape of my prisoner, Buckhurst. I merely added that I had secured the diamonds and had managed to reach Paris via Strasbourg.

He listened very quietly while I told of my encounter with Buckhurst in Morsbronn, of our journey to Saverne, to Strasbourg, and finally by own arrival in Paris.

"Where is Buckhurst?" he asked.

"I do not know," I replied, doggedly.

"That is to say that you had him in your power within the French lines yet did not secure him?"

"Yes. There was something more important to do than to arrest Buckhurst. I had every reason to believe that an important conspiracy was being ripened somewhere near Paradise. I had every reason to believe that the robbery of the crown jewels might furnish funds for the plotters.

"The arrest of one man could not break up the conspiracy; I desired to trap the leaders; and to that end I deliberately liberated this man Buckhurst as a stool-pigeon. If my judgment has been at fault, I accept the blame."

Mornac examined his carefully kept finger-tips in detail.

"You say he bribed you?"

"I said he attempted to do so," I replied, sharply.

"With the diamonds?"

"Yes."

"You have them?"

"I deposited them as usual."

"Bring them."

Angry as I was, I saluted, wheeled and hastened off to the safe deposit. The jewel-bag was delivered when I presented my printed slip; I picked it up and marched back, savagely biting my mustache and striving to control my increasing exasperation. Never before had I endured insolence from a superior officer.

Mornac was questioning Speed as I entered, and he lolled in his chair with an absent-minded expression like the expression of a cat who pretends to forget the mouse between her paws.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

How is it that a woman will often call her husband a brute, and yet attend a reception with him and be a little bare herself?

Prevailing Styles in the New Shoes.

EVERY season finds women more expecting in the matter of footwear. Shoes and stockings must be faultless for the well dressed and up-to-date member of modern society, whether she be a devotee of fashion, or engaged in business or simply devoting her time to the business of being a woman.

The styles now prevailing and those just preceding them have brought the fact into prominence. It is not the fashion to conceal them, but to clothe them daintily and set the flimsiest of draperies about them. Lace and chiffon petticoat, slashed skirts and inhanging draperies all bespeak attention to fine footwear.

For general wear a neat looking, inconspicuous shoe all of leather, or of leather and cloth, should be chosen. Perfect fit and neat finish are the matters of importance for shoes to be worn for shopping, traveling and general utility. Two pairs are more economical than one, if such shoes are worn every day, and one should alternate them. They are easily kept in commission in this way. One pair dressed and on the shoe tree stands always in readiness. Properly cleaned and aired and polished, they will pay for the attention with long service.

For dressier wear In the winter there is the shoe with patent calf vamp and brocaded silk top in black. This is an elegant shoe with any visiting or dinner gown except the most brilliant of opera or ball gowns. The same vamp with plain black cloth top puts the shoe in another class where it is appropriate for the demi-toilet or the tailor-made.

Elegant and more showy shoes are shown with patent vamp and gray buckskin top, and others with patent vamp and tops in shepherd check or in cloth or suede leather matching a gown in color. These made-to-match shoes are effective, but not essential to a proper shoe outfitting for the average woman.

For evening dress there is a variety in slippers to choose from. Black satin with a French heel is a great favorite. The range of ornamentation for the toes of evening slippers is quite wide also.

In black or bronze there is the strapped slipper with bead embroidery. It is a graceful shoe and a fine choice for those who need only one pair of slippers with which to look the season's full dress occasions in the face. It is dressy enough for any wear.

The price of good shoes has advanced because the materials of which they are made cost more than they have heretofore. There is no economy in buying cheap shoes. The expenditure at the end of a year will be greater if one keeps the feet respectably clothed, if cheap shoes are bought than if the better grades are worn. If one must economize let it be in some other direction and not in the matter of footwear. Quality cannot be sacrificed here without of a certainty involving both economy and comfort in the end.

JULIA BOTTOMLEY.

COIFFURE AND HAIR ORNAMENT MOST EFFECTIVE

THE very attractive and becoming coiffure pictured here belongs to the class described as the "Casque" coiffure. All the hair is waved and combed to the nape of the neck and the crown of the head at the back. There is the shallowest of parts at the front with the hair at each side brought down over the ears, wholly concealing them.

To make this hairdress the hair must be parted off all around the crown of the head, and waved. That which is left on the crown is to be laid in a flat coil at the back and pinned down securely. All the remainder (except the lock left at the middle of the forehead) is to be drawn loosely back to the coil and over it. The hair at the nape of the neck is first brought up and the ends tucked under the coil or pinned around it. The ends of the front and side hair are then disposed of in the same way.

Then the lock at the middle of the forehead is parted and brought down at each side over the ears to the nape of the neck. The ends (the lock being light) are tucked under the waved hair covering the coil and pinned into place with invisible pins.

A light fringe of hair curled in flat, short ringlets, is cut across the forehead in a line more or less curved or straight, as best becomes the wearer. These ringlets must be flattened to the head to preserve the correct lines in this coiffure. This may be done by tying them down with a light veil for a few minutes.

The coiffure is finished with an ornamented band and single, curling spray of Paradise. The band in this costume is made of flat jade beads matching those worn with the costume about the neck. But there are innumerable bands, those of black gauze or velvet and rhinestones being among the most effective.

The costume worn by the handsome brunette is of black velvet and silver embroidered net, with a skirt which appears to wrap about the figure, terminating in a high waist line. The rather scanty bodice is made of white chiffon. With a drapery of gossamer lace it would be much prettier and more in keeping with American ideas of modesty, which criticism is made without apologies to the great designer, who, with such wonderful fabrics to work with, yet missed the final finishing touch by placing a glorious skirt with an insignificant waist on so splendid a model.

The coiffure suits the style of the wearer and her costume. It is one of those that almost any one will find becoming, except women with very thin faces and necks. For them there are other designs which soften or conceal their defects.

JULIA BOTTOMLEY.

Slashed Petticoat.

We have had the "tango" gown; now has descended upon us the "tango" petticoat. This latest addition to the wardrobe of the fashionable woman is made of but two pieces, with seams in the side, which, needless to say, are open to a point just above the knee. The front and back breadths of the petticoat are scalloped, sloping gradually up to the joining of the seams at the knee. The garment in this instance is edged with a plaited ruffle of the silk of which the skirt is made, but lace of almost any kind would be nearly as effective. To regulate the height of the skirt slashes on each side of the openings there have been sewn crocheted rings, through which a lacing of ribbon is passed.

Worth Trying.

The recipe of a doctor for those who have suffered from blotchy complexions and fatigue is worth trying. For two months, he advises, eat nothing whatever for breakfast but fruit.

Do not eat again until luncheon, when you return to your ordinary fare. No tea, coffee or cocoa is permitted.

For heavy and obese women the latest idea is that they should eat very little of ordinary food, but subsist only on boiled fish, cold meat and toast and of that sparingly, but of lettuce as often and as much as they like. If they can bear it, their breakfast and supper should be of lettuce and lettuce alone.

All Shades of Gray.

Gray in all possible shades is one of the colors of the season. Pearl gray is being most successfully combined with white velvet and ermine for really rich tea gowns; and a deep shade of smoke gray is being very much used for mantles in conjunction with bands of smoke gray fox. All shades of rich blue are in demand in such materials as velours de laine and liberty cashmere. Costumes in these materials are trimmed with bands of sable or of black fox, and the craze of the moment seems to be for Chinese embroideries of the finest description.

To Clean Silver.

Put a quarter of a pound of sal soda into a gallon of water. Place on stove and let it come to a boil. While it is boiling put in piece of silverware one by one. Take out quickly and wash in soap suds. Dry with a soft clean cloth. This will remove all discoloration and the silverware will look as if it were new, it will be so bright. It takes about a quarter of the time used in polishing with silver polish.

THRIFT IN NEW SOUTH WALES

Remarkable Showing Made by Sydney Bank Has Been the Cause of Much Comment.

Since 1907 the history of the Moore Street bank (Sydney, New South Wales), has been almost as marvelous for its expansion as has the postal savings system of the United States. When it was placed under the management of commissioners, six years ago, the amount of the credit of the 283,401 depositors was $45,309,401. Three years later there were 368,306 depositors, who had a total balance of $73,827,380, while on November 30, 1912, there were 458,711 depositors with balances of $95,057,858.

Immediately upon their appointment the commissioners adopted a policy of decentralization by the establishment of district branches, giving all the facilities offered by the head office. There are now 114 branches—51 in the city and suburbs and 63 in the country.

There are also numerous agencies, constantly increasing in numbers, under the control of state officials, while the real branches are managed by the commissioners' staff officers.

The loan department also shows expansion. On December 31, 1906, there was due big farmers and settlers $1,952,461, respresenting 4,005. In November, 1912, the number of loans was 4,057, and the outstanding principal was $6,545,681.

During 13 years 9,952 loans have been made to settlers and farmers to the amount of $9,471,581, besides which, in 1911, mortgage loans upon city and suburban property were made to the extent of $3,007,757.

Northern Lights Make Noise.

German scientists are greatly interested in a discussion regarding new phenomena revealed by the aurora borealis, according to recent Norwegian and German observers. People living in the northern part of Norway maintained that they often hear sounds accompanying the northern lights. These sounds are described by some as similar to the crackling of flames. Accordingly German and Norwegian scientists started out to investigate the phenomena, and one of them, Olav Aubakken, has spent a long time at the Halide observatory in Finmarken. Aubakken thinks that it is very unlikely that any sound is to be heard from the northern lights. He maintains that the human senses are not to be relied on, especially regarding the phenomena of sight. He says that the idea of sound connected with the northern lights may result from the fact that these lights look like flames, and as people are accustomed to associate the crackling sound with flames the rather uncritical observer of the blazing movements of the aurora borealis is apt to think that he really hears the sound of those flames.

Not What He Was Looking For.

"I never robbed a man but once," said the honest tramp, "and then I was starving. He would not give me a penny, and I couldn't stand the gnawings in my stomach any longer. So I knocked him down and went through his pockets. What kind of a haul did I make? Just one little bottle, which read on the label: 'Pepsin—for that lull feeling after eating.'"

FOUND MOTIVE FOR SUICIDE

Manner of Dog's Death Has Led Many to Believe It Was Sought With Deliberation.

The question as to whether animals commit suicide was settled to the satisfaction of a number of visitors at the Central park menagerie when a yellow-haired bulldog jumped into the open air hippopotamus tank, relates the New York Sun. The tank is divided into two compartments, one of which is occupied by Miss Murphy and the other by her son, Caliph II.

A large crowd of visitors lined the outer railing when the dog trotted into the inclosure and headed for that part of the tank where Caliph was splashing about. He went down the sloping stone platform to the water and plunged in. Caliph snorted and thrashed about. The dog went under and did not come up again. After a time the hippo was seen tossing the body about in the water. Keeper George Sichert drew off the water and took out the dead animal and said the motive for suicide was apparent.

A cataract made the dog's right eye blind. Its emaciated condition showed that it was homeless and friendless. There was no name on the collar plate.

Trousers and Skirt, Too.

Something decidedly new in feminine apparel has been donned by Mrs. K. Faracias, employed in the shipping department of a wholesale grocery in Stockton, Cal., in the form of a combination trouser and skirt suit.

"I have worked for the company for many years," says Mrs. Faracias. "In that time I have become convinced that the business woman should adopt a mode of dress as severely plain as that of man. I have worked alongside men for so long that I do not think I am far off the track in this idea of mine."

During working hours Mrs. Faracias wears the trousers and a soft shirt. When she is on the street a straight two piece skirt is worn buttoned on to the waistband of the trousers and fastened by tailored straps at the side, allowing access, however, to all trouser pockets.—New York World.

TEMPERANCE NOTES

TWELVE DOLLARS A MINUTE

That Sum in Good American Coin is Paid into the Coffers of Uncle Sam by Peoria Distilleries.

As we are seeking to promote temperance and the banishment of liquor from our midst, and are doing so (as far as adding "anti-saloon" territary is concerned) it might be of interest to look over some figures given by a secular paper, in regard to the revenue derived by the government from this traffic the past year, and from, where it came, writes S. H. McMillan of Effingham, Ill., in the United Presbyterian. We quote from the article at the beginning. "The four leading distilleries of Peoria, according to a rough estimate, pay into the coffers of Uncle Sam every minute of the day and night, the year round, the sum of $12, in good, hard, American coin; according to figures made public by the commissioner of internal revenue. Illinois and Peoria still continue to lead the list of states and cities in the matter of internal revenue collections, the nearest competitor to it being New York, but is nine millions behind it. There is no other revenue district in the world except New York that anywhere nearly approaches Peoria on import duties. The total collections for the United States for the year ending June 30, 1911, was $322,526,269, as against approximately $290,000,000 for the preceding year. This is the greatest year in the history of the government since the internal revenue law was passed. The previous "high-water" mark being in 1866, when $310,000,000 was collected, but this was in time of extraordinary needs, and resulted from extraordinary legislation.

By states the leaders stand as follows: Illinois, $553,000,000; New York, $444,000,000; Indiana, $331,000, Terre Haute being the center of the distilling business in Indiana. There are four internal revenue districts in Illinois, and the revenue offices give the standing as follows: Peoria $29,998,092; Chicago, $12,642,006, Pekin, $10,048,068, and the district comprising the balance of the state, $628,619. The detailed figures by collection districts is as follows: First Illinois, $12,642,005; Fifth Illinois, $29,998,092; Eighth Illinois, $10,255,600; Thirteenth Illinois, $628,619, Sixth Indiana, $11,048,068; Seventh Indiana, $20,085,315; Third Iowa, $573,919, Fourth Iowa, $683,973; First Michigan, $6,033,491; Fourth Michigan, $974,094 ,First Missouri, $10,524,712; Sixth Missouri, $1,945.96; First Wisconsin, $8,383,128; Second Wisconsin, $1,199,825. These states adjoining Illinois reported the following sums. Indiana, $21,133,328.24; Iowa, $1,267,893.29; Michigan, $7,007,585.96; Missouri, $12,470,680.53; Nebraska, $2,773,306.66; Wisconsin, $9,582,454.31.

These figures from the government reports tell their own story and from them you may draw your own conclusions. The devil's business seems to prosper, notwithstanding the persecution and the prosecutions that have been brought against it.

Physical Condition of Drunkards.

As a rule male drunkards live longer than female. Seventy-five per cent of all chronic "alcoholics" have fatty degeneration of the liver. Many have brown atrophy of the heart. The kidneys are never normal. Fifty per cent of the drunkards have gastritis. By the coating of the tongue and the character of the tremor or length of a spree can be accurately determined. The drunkard often "sees things," but rarely has his sense of smell impaired. Patients who drink absinthe are particularly liable to convulsions, according to the report of Dr. Lambert, of Bellevue hospital, New York, who has made a special study of thousands of drunkards during his connection with that famous institution.

"In All Thy Ways."

"In all thy ways acknowledge him." In all thy ways. In thy worship. In thy study of his word. In thy intercourse with his people. In thy traffic with the world. In thy business and in thy recreation. At thy meals. In thy correspondence. In thy reading. In thy dress. What! in these petty matters? Yes; in all thy ways. Thinkest thou that God will have no word for thee on such topics? Be undeceived. Thou shalt find a revelation of the will of God for every one of thy paths. There is no need for thee ever to let go his hand. Not a single hair of thy head receives its ailment without him. Why, then, should a single step be taken without him?—Rev. George Bowen.

Children baptized, 5.
Value of church, $6,000.
Value of parsonage, $2,000.
Salary paid pastor, $1590.
Paid on expense account, $438.

"THE MINER WHO HAS MADE GOOD"—DAVID J. LEWIS.

The first December number of the Popular Magazine, under the caption, "The Miner Who Made Good," prints the following:

Parcel post is working. Little by little, it will be made better, by being made cheaper, more far-reaching, simpler. For its installation and improvement the nation owes thanks and a blessing to a modest citizen of Maryland, David J. Lewis. We are not forgetting the valiant service of such men as Hitchcock, Jonathan Bourne, Berleson, John Koons and Senator Bristow in initiating and extending the system. But these men, who have done so much for us, are hearty in proclaimmg the nation's debt to the clear-thinking, simple-hearted congressman from Maryland. The changes recently put through by the post master are in the line of tendency urged by Lewis. The post-office department, as it has worked out the grueling details in the installation of the new giant, has been in constant debt to him.

Few men in the country have made so close and long-continued a study of transportation as Lewis. For over 20 years he has aimed his life at the mastery of that one subject—the movement of persons and things from one point to another. Lewis has done it all—the slow rise to power and wisdom—lonehanded, unaided. He was a "poor boy," and then a worker in the mines. Whenever he could shake loose a quarter of an hour of time he drove away at his books. It was his one desire to master the subject, to be thorough in a great matter.

He is thoretical, say those who would put the brakes on his speed—he is too theoretical, too scholarly. Think of it—the miner too scholarly. Surely this man has "arrived." The long climb has brought a summit. To think your way into the daily life of 90,000,000 persons is fulfillment for a plain American. To make life a little better for his countrymen, the poor boy has come far.

Like most men who have wrestled for patient years with truth, he talks in short words, through which his meaning is as clear as an October day. He is a thinker in the vernacular, clothing those ripe views of his in homespun English. And not only does he talk simply. He lives simply, and acts simply, stuffing wad after wad of tobacco in his old clay pipe. He meets men as equals.

In the clatter of great reputations, self-advertised, we must not omit to pay homage to the quiet, self-contained producers of result. Homage is due David J. Lewis.

AT THE MARYLAND THEATRE

Wiegel's All Star Vaudeville Co., will be at the Maryland for one week commencing Monday, Nov. 17. This company are now playing at the Southern, in Wheeling and are making the hit of the season. Mr. Wiegel played in this town about nine years ago and many still remember the funny Dutchman. We have arranged to make the prices ten cents to all and no one should consider that to much for a good hearty laugh.

TO

FARMERS!

If you are in need of a good Oscilating Bob Sled made of good White Oak Wood, don't forget to call and see James W. Walters' Sleds. Every piece hand made. Complete with brakes. Remember the solid white oak sled will outlast a sled made of beech or maple two to one. That is the kind most factory sleds are made of.

¶ Call and see for yourself if you do it is sure to be a deal.

WINNING CHRIST, LOSING ALL ELSE

The Prize of All Eternity God Is Now Offering.

What Winning Christ Means—It Signifies More Than a Reformation of Life and a Pursuit of Righteousness. More Than Merely Believing In Jesus as Our Savior—It Is Preceded by a Devotion or Consecration of Our All to God—And God's Acceptance of Our Consecration—Then the Race Begins—Its Outcome Will Determine Whether or Not We Win Christ—St. Paul an Exemplar—Saints From Every Nation and Denomination Winners—Their Matchless Reward.

Brooklyn, N. Y., November 9.—Pastor Russell gave two addresses here today. We report one, from the text, "Yet, doubtless, I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord, * * * that I may win Christ." —Philippians 3:8.

The Pastor said that even saintly Christians seem but imperfectly to grasp the New Testament teachings respecting membership in the Body of Christ. Some assume that it is to be had on a basis of favoritism, and trust to be of the Elect. Others vaguely hope that they belong to the right Church and will attain whatever the others get. Errors of the Dark Ages absorbed in childhood have been responsible for these vagaries and for our general neglect of proper Bible study.

Conversion Not Winning Christ.

What is ordinarily termed conversion is not what St. Paul refers to as "winning Christ." Conversion signifies "a turning about." It implies a change from a wrong course to the right one. The wrong course is the sinful one which brings injury and injustice on others. Conversion is merely the operation of a sane mind in turning about from things recognized to be injurious.

Many are converted without real knowledge of Christ's Gospel. They merely knew that they were going in the wrong direction, and turned about to take the proper course. Only strong characters can successfully pursue a right course, and these are in the minority. But whether strong or weak characters, great aid will be experienced from a knowledge of Christ's work and teachings.

"Present Your Bodies"—Sacrifices.

The Pastor then showed how one might reform his life, have knowledge of the future life secured by Jesus' death, and of the fact that we reap what we sow, and yet not be a Christian, in the Bible sense. Reformatory steps are necessary, however, before anything further can be attained.

Next the speaker discussed Christianity from the Bible standpoint. The Scriptures assure us that a Christian is a New Creature not merely a civilized person. To such, "old things have passed away; all things have become new." Old ambitions and prospects, however honorable and good, give place to new ones. This is what the Apostle had in mind in our text.

What Winning Christ Means.

The Pastor then briefly outlined the Gospel, an appreciation of which is necessary to the understanding of our text. The Divine Plan for human recovery from sin and death God first declared to Abraham: "In thy Seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed."—Galatians 3:8.

Later on, God revealed the fact that Abraham's Seed would constitute a Kingdom class to rule all nations for their uplift. When Israel, by failing to keep the Law, failed to prove itself the holy nation, God declared that He would send a special Messenger of the Covenant, through whom the holy nation would be established.

At His First Advent, our Lord laid the foundation for this work by dying for the sin of the whole world. Then He began to select the Kingdom class. This election has been the work of the entire Gospel Age, everything else being secondary. Soon the work will be finished, and the overcomers will share in the First Resurrection.—Rev. 20:6.

"Abraham's Seed, and Heirs."

Next the Pastor demonstrated that this Kingdom class will be the foretold Seed of Abraham. Jesus was of Abrahamic stock through His miraculous birth. After His resurrection He became Abraham's Seed on the spirit plane—a New Creature. His Church are to be on the same plane.

To Abraham's earthly seed belong certain earthly promises; but these cannot go into effect until the Spiritual Seed have been perfected in the First Resurrection. St. Paul tells us that this Seed of Abraham, Jesus and the Church, are unitedly The Christ. Using the human body as an illustration, he points out that Jesus is the Head and the Church the Body of Christ. Thus we see that St. Paul was anxious to win membership in the Body of Christ, not the probationary one of the present, but the actual Body of the future.

No wonder St. Paul counted all he had sacrificed as unworthy of mention when contrasted with the blessings which had come to the Gospel Church.

TRAMPED ON TAIL OF A PANTHER

Exciting Experience of a Garrett County Man a Few Years Ago.

George Shockey's encounter with a panther while crossing Great Savage mountain, recently, has revived stories about a panther, probably the same animal, being seen at various times during the last decade or two in adjacent portions of Somerset county, Pa.

N. B. Hechler of Sippleville, who returned from a tour through the wilds of Garrett county last week, states that the story about Mr. Shockey and the panther has been read with much interest by the natives of that section, as it recalled to them the adventure of one of their number, Oscar Broadwater, with one of the big mountain cats.

Mr. Broadwater, who lives near Sutton, Md., so the story goes, and another man were driving through the woods in a buggy six or seven years ago, when a big panther darted across the road in front of them and disappeared with a howl in the brush. Being curious so see where the anamal went, Mr. Broadwater turned the lines over to his companion and started on a reconnoisance through the woods.

He had walked for some distance without seeing any signs of the panther, and was about to turn back when he tramped on something alive and behold it was the panther's tail which protruded from a thicket in which the beast was lying.

The animal seemed as much surprised and frightened as was Mr. Broadwater at this unexpected encounter. It gave a mighty yell as it jumped to its feet and removed its tail from the proximity of Mr. Broadwater's pedal extremities at a rapid rate. Broadwater made tracks in the opposite direction as fast as he could go. He did not want any closer acquaintance with a panther that allowed its tail to be tramped upon. Meyersdale Republican.

Free Cane Sugar Knocks Out The Beet Sugar Industry.

The annual meeting of beet sugar manufacturers was held in Chicago and new officers elected for 1914. Next year's crop will be the last to be marketed, it was said, as beet sugar will be unable to compete with free cane sugar after 1916. One hundred million dollars invested in beet sugar factories, according to one delegate, will be forced to find new employment within a year.

Factories in Michigan, Minnesota, Iowa, Illinois, Wisconsin, Kansas, Colorado, Montana, Nevada, Utah, California and Arizona were represented.

GARRETT COONTY TO FURNISH MUNICIPAL TREE

For the Monumental City Which Was Ordered Yesterday Through Dr. Henry McComas

To Dr. Henry W. McComas, of Oakland, has been delegated the work of securing and shipping to Baltimore a sixty-foot white pine tree to be used by the different societies of that city as a municipal Christmas tree, which is to be set up in one of the principal streets of the city 'and kept standing throughout holiday week.

The order came to Dr. McComas from Mrs. T. Harrison Garrett to secure the great mass of pine and to have it shipped without delay. Two flat cars will be required to transport the forest monarch from the pine woods to Baltimore.

Shift Stars on U. S. Flag.

A new arrangement of stars in the American flag has been accepted by the War Department. The design is somewhat on the order of the Union Jack, and is so placed as to give more room on the blue field for the additional States which come into the Union. In the centre is a huge five-pointed star composed of 13 stars, representing the 13 original States. About this design is a circle of stars representing the other 35 States.

A miniature flag with the new star arrangement has been presented to President Wilson by Wayne Whipple, of Washington, for his approval.

Texas Tightens on Saloon.

Austin, Texas, Nov. 16—Two new liquor statutes with so-called "blue law" clauses, become effective at midnight Monday, curtailing the already restricted sale of intoxicants in Texas.

One new enactment prohibiting State shipments of liquor into "dry" territory makes the apparent attempt to put grape juice in competition with intoxicants by providing specifically for its transportation. Liquor dealers are forbidden to solicit business by letter, circular or in any other manner in option communities. Some lawyers construe this to mean that newspaper advertising of liquor may be stopped.

The other law requires the closing at 9.30 p. m. of saloons and of any other business run in the same or adjacent rooms with the bar.

Growth of United States.

The growth of the United States is told in a pamphlet, "Satistical Record of the Progress of the United States, 1800-1913," issued today by the Department of Commerce.

The area of the country in 1800 was about 900,000 square miles, while today it is more than 3,000,000.

The 5,000,000 population has grown to 97,000,000, exlusive of people of the island possessions.

In wealth the proportion of advance has more than been maintained, while trade with the world, agriculture, mining and manufactures, have kept pace.

Urging the increase of forest patrolmen as a means of checking forest fires and condeming the Cahfornia "light-burning" method, the forest fires committee reported an annual toll of 70 lives and $25,000,000 from forest fires.

Will anybody ever have another chance for salvation beyond the grave? If so, would it be worth while to live righteously in this life? Pastor Yates thinks he knows. Hear him without money and without price at the Empire at 7:45 tonight. Advertisement

GRANTSVILLE BRIDGE DEFYING TIME AND ELEMENTS

Stately Arch That Spans The Casselman Nearly a Century Old.

BY SARAH ROBERTA GETLY.

That the stately old bridge which spans the beautiful Casselmen river near Grantsville should have won a prize in a recent photographic contest in the "Better Roads" magazine reflects credit upon the photographer, I. E. Gilbert of Frostburg, and is a source of congratulation to the people of Grantsville, even while occasioning no surprise, as the picture of this beautiful landmark has graced not only the pages of all the county papers at different times, but also several of the leading magazines as well. There is no more imposing structure along the old National Pike than this historic old stone bridge, which has been the delight of both tourist and native tor nearly a century.

The bridge was begun in 1812 and completed in 1818, with an immense expenditure of time and labor. The beautiful arch, semi-circle in shape, with a radius of 38 feet was built of stone upon a frame work of wood which when complete, could be torn down merely by the removal of a key in the frame work.

So little faith had the people of that day in this gigantic undertaking that the impression prevailed that when the woodwork was taken away the collapse of the structure would be inevitable. History tells us that these oft-repeated suspicions so preyed upon the mind of David Shriver, the young superintendent, that his anxiety became unendurable and he and his men secretly, in the dead of night, turned the key and unlocked the frame work to ascertain beyond a doubt whether or not the massive arch was safe. Their fears, or rather those of the natives, were groundless however, and as it stood the test then, so, bravely, it has stood while the storms and tempests of nearly a hundred years has beaten upon its walls yet the work of the master's hand that builded it remains undistnrbed by the elements.

Occasionally though, a vandal hand would deface the beautiful structure by destroying parts of the side walls on top of the bridge, which acted as a protection to the travelers, and as the years went by small trees and shrubs sprung up at the base and summit and in the crevices along the walls, greatly marring the beauty and splendor of the massive arch.

In 1911, the late Govenor Crothers became so interested in the matter through the solicitations of the townsmen of Grantsville and others, that he used his influence in securing the appropriation of a sum of money for the purpose of repairing the bridge, and one of the first steps in the Good Roads movement was to restore it to its original beauty. The side walls were restored, a new cement coping was laid on top of the walls, stones were replaced here and there, and after months of labor the bridge stood completely restored and even more imposing-looking than in the days when it first towered proudly above the classic Casselman.

The old bridge is of great historical interest being built within a few yards of the spot where Gen. Braddock and George Washington, then a youth of twenty but colonel of a regiment forded the river on their ill-fated journey toward Fort Duquense in 1755. In the early days when the stage coach was the only means of progress many distinguished personages passed over this famous bridge. Jackson, Harrison, Polk, Taylor, all crossed here on their way to Washington to take the oath of President of the United States, and many other famous statesmen passed over it long before the little village of Grantsville came into existence.

No less beautiful than the bridge is the Casselmen river which flows so peacefully beneath it. The surrounding scenery is a picture that would delight any artist and is much frequented by both tourist and native. In warm summer days picnic luncheons are held on the river bank where the rippling waters sparkling in the sunlight, rest and delight the eye of the pleasure seeker. Enthusiastic anglers sit for hours casting their lines in its placid depth waiting for a bite from the elusive bass and suckers or the tempting speckled trout. Barefoot children wade in its cooling waters or disport themselves in the "old swimmin' hole" near by.

Lovers find the seclusion of the old arch an ideal trysting place. Weary business men and tired housewives stroll down in the summer evenings and find in this peaceful spot a rest from the day's anxieties and cares. In the cold winter days the river's broad expanse of ice is crowded with merry skaters, and the air is filled with the laughter of happy youth.

For nearly a century the bridge has stood, an object of interest to all who come to see. To all old Grantsville people it has fond and tender associations. Both young and old carry in their hearts a picture of this beautiful, stately structure.

Dear, dear old bridge! how often we have sought
The shelter of thy broadstone arch, in quest.
Of quiet. Here thy solitude has brought Relief from cares, contentment, peace and rest! —Meyersdale Republican.

EGG SUPPLY INCREASES

Government Officials Blame The Cold Storage For Higher Prices.

Production of eggs in the United States has increased steadily during the past 14 years. The price of eggs also has moved steadily upward. Department of Agriculture officials declare that cold storage is responsible for the high price.

Figures issued by the Census Bureau show that in 1899 American hens laid 1,293,662,000 dozen eggs, which was 17 dozen for every man, woman and child in the counrty. Ten years later, in 1909, they produced 17.3 dozens per capita, while this year it is estimated they will produce 17.7 dozens per capita. As to prices, the statistics show that in 1899 "average best fresh" eggs sold at wholesale in New York, highest price, at 36 cents; in 1904 at 47 cents; in 1908 at 55 cents; in November, 1912, at 60 cents. Last month they were 75 cents.

Department officials today expressed the opinion that there should be a national law limiting the time which eggs may be kept in cold storage, six months probably being the limit. This they said, would put eggs on the market more uniformly and prevent them from being held for exorbitant prices. Further, it was declared that shipment of eggs from one State to another except to retail dealers should be prohibited so as to prevent evasions of the proposed storage limit law.

Wreck Sunday Afternoon.

Eastbound pickup train on the B. & O. Sunday afternoon was wrecked at the Shaffer crossing, a mile west of town, when a car loaded with pipe overturned and went into the river. The track was torn up for considerable distance which required the labors of the trackmen until nearly midnight to repair.

Mr. George Jeffrey, of this county, will open an up-to-date country produce store in Lonaconing next week. Mr. Jeffrey also conducts a store on Savage mountain in this county. Products of the farm will be handled and delivered to the citizens of Lonaconing in good condition.

STRUCK BY THAIN IN CUMBERLAND

Mr. D. R Smith of Hoyes, Was Seriously Injured Last Night.

Mr. D. R. (Ren) Smith, of Hoyes, brother of Mr. W. A. Smith, was struck by a train on the Baltimore street crossing in Cumberland last night and seriously injured, two ribs being broken and he was otherwise hurt.

The injured man was taken to the Western Maryland Hospital in Cumberland where he is being given attention.

Rabbits Shipped By Parcel Post.

Few people have an idea of the value of the parcel post to the country merchants and farmers. As an illustration, W. Lee Judd, the Rattleburg merchant has recently shipped 160 pounds of rabbits by parcel post to Baltimore. He puts them in packages of 20 pounds, which is the limit of weight in the first zone and mailed them from his store, at a cost of 24 cents to each package. One man sent from Luray to Baltimore 18 pounds of eggs packed in a cheese box, which is equivalent to saying that ten or twelve dozen eggs were shipped to Baltimore for 22 cents. A Luray man has been shipping two dozen eggs in regular egg packers to Washington for 14 cents the package. Fresh sausage and pudding have been sent to city friends by Page county people who are fortunate enough to have pigs of their own to butcher. By paying 5 cents extra, packages that are properly wrapped can be insured against loss to the maximum amount of $25.

Mr. P. T. Lipscomb, of Loch Lynn, was a business visitor at this office yesterday afternoon.

Following a business meeting of the Hagerstown Automobile Club a banquet was held, attended by 50 members. It was arranged by Ray Danzer, secretary of the club, and August F. Rothstein, secretary of the Board of Trade.

ANNAPOLIS NEWS

INCREASE IN STATE TAX RATE.

Financiers Look To Larger Expenditures.

State treasury officials and outside financiers, who have made a study of the needs of the State and who are aware of the improvements necessary to keep Maryland in the vanguard of States, see a large increase in the State tax rate by the next legislature. Not until the bulk of the appropriations shall have been agreed upon and until the expenses of the State government shall have been known can the exact amount of increase be estimated. It is believed at this time, however, that the jump will be in excess of the present rate, making the total State tax rate about 36 cents on each $100. With the city tax rate added the total rate will be in the neighborhood of $2.27 on each $100, or 2¼ per cent.

Considerable relief from this prospective high rate will be forthcoming if the General Assembly will promptly pass the bill to be drafted and recommended by the State Tax Commission. This bill will not provide for a reduction in taxes on any commodity or other source.

The bill will, however, make provision for a more equitable distribution of tax burdens and for increases in taxes at once, instead of waiting for a new assessment by the State, on property whose marketable value has increased by leaps and bounds because of State roads improvement and for other causes.

To illustrate the value of the methods, to be operative immediately, as proposed by the commission: Suppose the value of real estate in one county is increased $1,000,000 by improved State roads and through other reasons. Under the present system the increased revenue on this additional million would not be available until the next general reassessment of property by the State. This reassessment, which is expensive and which is impaired because of local and frequent political favoritism, may be delayed two years. Hence for that period the additional million will yield no additional revenue to the State. It is proposed by the new method to be introduced to have the tax on the increased valuation begin at once instead of being delayed ten years. If the State tax rate be 30 cents on the $100, the State would be the loser under the present system to the extent of $300,000 in ten years. There is probably an average annual increase in property valuations, outside of Baltimore, where reassessment of property is constantly amounting approximately to $10,000,000. The State, by adhering to the present system of reassessments at long intervals, is losing annually $300,000.

F. E. COX PRESENTED.

Grand Jury Acts On Charges Against Former Game Warden.

A presentment, charging false pretenses to State Comptroller Harrington, in connection with a $20 expense account, was returned by the Anne Arundel grand jury against Franklin E. Cox, former State game warden, who was last summer removed from office by Governor Goldsborough. Cox will be tried in the local Circuit Court under the provisions of the State code which requires all State officials to answer for their official acts in the county containing the State capital. The action of the jury in presenting Cox did not occasion any surprise, as it has been known for several weeks that the jury was investigating the circumstances immediately preceding his removal from office by the Governor. Indeed, at the time the Governor removed him from office it was intimated that the facts in the case would be laid before the local grand jury for investigation.

MAKES PLEA FOR PRIDE IN ARMY

Secretary Garrison Deplores General Attitude of Public.

FUNCTION MISUNDERSTOOD.

People Fail To Discriminate Between Hatred Of Bloodshed and War, and Position Of Army In Respect Thereto.

New York.—Secretary of War Garrison declared at a dinner given in his honor at the Lotos Club that the people of the United States as a whole did not regard the army in the proper attitude and did not feel toward it as they should. The secretary made his statement during the course of an enthusiastic discussion of the effectiveness of the army, even in time of peace.

"For one thing," said he, "I think the people fail to discriminate between their absolute hatred of bloodshed and war and the function of the army in respect thereto. For the fireman, the physician, the engineer and for the clergyman, none of us has words other than of praise and encouragement. And yet for the soldier, whose very presence is a protection against others attempting to use force and whose efforts in our behalf, when force is used against us, are essential to our defense, the people have either a negligent attitude or very often one of disapproval. I cannot on any reasonable ground account for this.

"If it were true that the officers and men of the army were swaggering bullies seeking to engage in war for war's sake, or undesirable citizens who brought disgrace upon the uniform and the country there would be reason for this public attitude.

Have Wrong Idea.

"But exactly the contrary is the case. The army, both officers and men, never was of higher tone than today, nor as high, in my opinion. No sane man possibly can think that a nation situated as is the United States with respect to the world could go without an army. All stable government rests upon the possibility of using force to secure obedience to its decrees. And so it must be with nations until another day has dawned and many of the attributes of men which now guide their conduct have been changed for other and different ones."

Not Only War Force.

Secretary Garrison cited as most convincing proofs of the highly efficient character of the Army the numerous instances in which it has been effectively used in time of peace—tasks entirely disconnected with the Army's character as a fighting force. The relief work at San Francisco, Omaha, during floods in the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys, in California forest fires; the administration of executive functions in the Philippines and Cuba, Porto Rico and Santo Domingo, the building of the Panama Canal, he pointed out as such instances and also called attention to the work of the Army Medical Corps in subduing yellow fever, beri beri, typhoid fever and tropical anaemia.

"In view of all this," Mr. Garrison concluded, "I am sure I will not be accused of lack of modesty in repeating that I am whole heartedly proud of the Army of the United States and of what it has done and what it is capable of doing. I am sure I am not asking anything that you should not be enthusiastic to grant, in the suggestion in that you likewise should be equally proud. * * * Strong as the Army is, willing as it is, efficient as it is, you citizens have the power to add many fold to its usefulness if you will but give it its due need of appreciation and of praise. I feel that you will do so."

TWO CHILDREN GARROTED.

Their Mother Attempts To Hang Herself, But Is Cut Down and Sent To Jail.

Johnstown, Pa.—Charged with having garroted her two children, boys, aged two and three years, respectively, and then attempting to hang herself, Mrs. Amelia Seabolt Banko, aged 26, of Portage, was lodged in the county jail at Ebensburg, accused of murder. An investigation disclosed Mrs. Banko, with a man's belt drawn tightly around her neck, suspended from a nail in the wall. She was cut down before she had been seriously affected. In the bed in the room were the bodies of the two little boys with pieces of clothesline tightly knotted around their necks. The children had been dead for some time when discovered. An examination by a physician showed that the necks of both boys had been broken.

ANTI-SLAVERY LAW PASSED.

Philippine Assembly Reaffirms Old Spanish Statute.

Manila.—An anti-slavery law was passed by the Philippine National Assembly after a heated debate. The measure, which was framed by William H. Phipps, the insular auditor, reaffirms the old Spanish statutes against slavery and incorporates the American laws. The vote in opposition to the enactment of the measure was small in spite of the warmth of the discussion.

FOR CARNEGIE PEACE PALACE.

Endowment Buys Washington Site For Headquarters.

Washington.—For a price said to be approximately $100,000 the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace has purchased property at Pennsylvania avenue and Jackson Place on which a headquarters building will be erected. The site faces Lafayette Square on the east and the State, War and Navy Department Building on the south, and is a stone's throw only from the White House grounds.

DELUGE OF GIFTS FOR MISS WILSON

Costly Tributes Pouring in for White House Bride.

WHAT THE DIPLOMATS SENT

The Room Set Apart In the White House For the Reception Of Gifts Is Already Crowded and Many More Are Yet To Come.

Washington.—Miss Jessie Wilson will have to arrange for her presents elsewhere than in the White House if they continue to pour in upon her in the last days before her wedding as they have the past week.

The room set aside for the gifts is already well filled, and yet nearly half of the givers must await the engraving of the jewelers. The vase to be presented by the French Ambassador and Mme. Jusserand took the grand prize at the Paris Exposition and cost about $1,400. A dinner set of more than a hundred pieces and costing $8,000 is on exhibition at a local jeweler's and will later grace the table of the White House bride. It is in Georgian style with heavy festoons of flowers and richly engraved.

One of the gifts is a vase of 14 karat gold, bear[illegible] A terrapin set has [illegible] finish of silver and seven[illegible] necessary to preparing [illegible] and all stand upon a heavy [illegible]ray. The top of the chafing d[illegible]orna mented with a terrapin, and the same toothsome creature, beautifully carved in ivory, forms the handle. The tea set which the senators will probably decide upon at once, has five pieces—a teapot, hotwater pot, waste bowl, sugar bowl and cream pitcher—the entire service being on a large silver tray.

Ambassadorial Gifts.

Among the ambassadors who have sent gifts are the French, the German, the Italian, who sent four heavy candlesticks, and the Russian Ambassador and Madame Bakhmeteff, who sent an amber umbrella handle, richly jeweled. A tortoise shell and silver jewel case has been sent by the Minister of Uruguay and Senora DePena.

The Misses DePena, who are invited, will send separate gifts, and Senora Don Algara, charge d'affaires for Mexico, will follow the decision made by the bachelors of the corps who have been honored with an invitation and will send a large basket of flowers. The Bolivian Minister and Senora De Calderon will send flowers, and most of the other South and Central American diplomats will do likewise. A small gift which makes but little show among the glistening array of large and beautiful things, but which has found a snug place in the heart of Miss Jessie Wilson is a little knitted bead purse sent to her by her little cousin, Elizabeth Wilson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Wilson. Elizabeth is about four years old, and has labored steadily at her task that she might have the beads strung and the purse made before the day of the wedding, at which she will be a happy witness.

It is also said that a loving tribute has been sent by the mountain women of the Carolinas and other Southern States and that their weaving will form the furnishings for one of the rooms in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Sayre, as they do in one of the chambers at the White House.

NEAR MILITANCY HERE.

Suffragists Advertise Capital Meeting With Chalk.

Washington.—Suffragette sympathizers swooped down on Historic Lafayette Park and the vicinity of the White House and State, War and Navy offices, armed with quantities of chalk and covered sidewalks and street pavements with "votes for women." One immense legend extending over a good portion of the flagging in front of the White House said: "Come to Sunday's meeting—Inez Milholland, speaker." It was the nearest approach to militancy the National Capital has seen in the suffrage campaign.

MISS MARY L. McKEE MARRIED.

President Harrison's Granddaughter Weds Kurt Reisinger.

New York.—Miss Mary Lodge McKee, who was the "baby" McKee of the White House when her grandfather, Benjamin Harrison, was President of the United States and who was christened in the Executive Mansion, was married to Kurt Reisinger, son of Mr. and Mrs. Hugo Reisinger and grandson of the late Adolphus Busch. The wedding took place in the Central Presbyterian Church here.

STORM'S TOLL NOW 256 LIVES

Property Loss on Great Lakes Put at $5,000,000.

20 VESSELS ARE WRECKED.

Overturned Boat On Lake Huron Is Still Unidentified—Federal Authorities Are Censured.

Port Huron, Mich.—For the first time since Sunday a day passed without revealing more lives lost in the storm which overwhelmed the Great Lakes the early part of the week. Only one additional boat disaster was reported and that was the wrecking of the steamer Major, off Whitefish Point, in Lake Superior. She was abandoned by her crew after a futile effort had been made to weather the second storm of the week. The crew was picked up by a passing steamer.

The life loss among sailors is estimated at approximately 256 and the property loss is figured at more than $5,000,000. The property loss includes the score or more of vessels driven on the rocks or shore and partially or totally destroyed.

Captain May Describes Storm.

Capt. A. C. May, master of the H. B. Hawgood, which was released from Wees Beach, on the Canadian shore of Lake Huron, saw the ill-fated Regina, Charles S. Price and Isaac M. Scott as they sailed forward into the storm Sunday afternoon. The Price was met just north of Sand Beach at noon Sunday.

"She was heading into it, and making bad weather," said Captain May. "It was beginning to blow so hard that I had turned the Hawgood and was heading for the river. The Regina was passed 15 miles south of Sand Beach. She was making very bad weather and was burying herself in the seas.

"The wind and the sea kept increasing and the snow got thicker. We couldn't tell how hard it was blowing, but I should judge it was about 75 miles an hour from the north-north east. After a while it got so thick we couldn't see the smoke stacks.

"To show how hard it was blowing, three times I crawled over the top to get from one side to the other. There was no other way. If you got out where the wind would strike you fair, if you weren't blown overboard, your brains would have been smashed out on a stanchion. My worry was for fear some of the crew would be washed overboard. The seas went over the pilot house.

"Our anchors didn't hold and we went on the beach so hard I almost went through the pilot house. I have been master of boats for 21 years, but this was the worst storm I ever encountered."

$34,000,000 TO MOVE CROPS.

District Of Columbia Took Nearly As Much As Texas.

Washington.—Almost two-thirds of the $50,000,000 the Treasury Department put at the disposal of the banks of the country to aid in the movement of crops has been taken, according to an announcement issued by Secretary McAdoo. The exact figures are $34,311,000, and probably a few more millions will be taken in the West before the end of the year. None of the money will be asked for by the Treasury until December.

KNOX TO ENTER RACE.

Ex-Senator Will Seek Nomination For "Pennsy" Governor.

Philadelphia.—Philander C. Knox, ex-Secretary of State and ex-United States Senator, according to an announcement here, will allow his name to be entered in the State-wide primary next May as a candidate for Governor. Mr. Knox is reported by his intimate associates as most eager to head the State government, a position he sought four years ago and to obtain which he would have resigned as Secretary of State.

WILL READ HIS MESSAGE.

The President Again To Personally Address Congress.

Washington.—President Wilson announced that he would read in person his first annual message to Congress. The President thus far has read three brief addresses on tariff, currency and the Mexican affairs, but it was not definitely known whether his first communication to the regular session of Congress would be in accordance with the century-old precedent which he revived last March.

TWELVE KILLED IN TRAIN WRECK

ON WAY TO EUFALA FAIR.

Jefferson D. Clayton, Brother Of Alabama Congressman, Injured With Other Prominent Persons.

Eufaula, Ala.—Twelve persons were killed and more than a hundred injured, some of them fatally, when three coaches of a Central of Georgia passenger train left the rails at a point 17 miles south of here and plunged down a steep embankment. The train, which consisted of five cars crowded with excursionists, was en route from Ozark, Ala., to Eufaula, where a fair is being held.

Among those who escaped with minor injuries was Jefferson D. Clayton, a wealthy Alabamian and brother of Congressman Henry D. Clayton, of this State.

A broken rail is said to have caused the accident. As the crowded excursion train rounded a curve the three cars at the rear, literally packed with passengers, suddenly left the track and, breaking away from the others, rolled down the steep embankment. The coaches practically were demolished. Shrieks and groans of the injured rose above the rending crash of splintering timbers.

STARS IN OLD GLORY.

New Flag Arrangement Accepted By War Department.

Washington.—A new arrangement of stars in the American flag has been accepted by the War Department. The design is something on the order of the Union Jack, and is so placed as to give more room on the blue field for the additional States which come into the Union. In the center is a huge five-pointed star, composed of 13 stars, representing the 13 original States. About this design is a circle of stars, representing the remaining 25 States. A miniature flag with the new star arrangement has been presented to President Wilson by Wayne Whipple, of Washington, for his approval.

DOES NOT EVEN KNOW HIM.

Miss Margaret Wilson's Reported Engagement Denied.

Washington.—In order to set at rest various rumors that have recently been printed to the effect that Dr. Gilbert Horrax, of Baltimore, a former classmate of Mr. Sayre, who is to marry Miss Jessie Wilson, at which wedding Dr. Horax will be one of the ushers, the White House authorized the following statement. "The reported engagement of Miss Margaret Wilson and Dr. Gilbert Horrax is positively denied. Miss Wilson has never even seen or met Dr. Horrax."

MAMMOTH MAN'S BONES FOUND.

One Tooth Measures 12 Inches Long And 8 Inches Wide.

Seattle, Wash.—The skeleton of a man was uncovered by workmen sluicing the excavation for the Municipal Stadium at West Seattle. The bones were found 150 feet below the top of the hill imbedded in a clay bank. One inches wide at the base, 6 inches wide at the top and 3 inches thick. teeth measured 12 inches long, 8

EATS 132 REAL EGGS.

Charles W. Glidden, Champion Food Destroyer, Issues Challenge

Lawrence, Mass.—Economists seeking the reason for the high cost of living have only to drop into town and see Charles W. Glidden, champion food destroyer of the world. "Charley" has just eaten 132 real, hen-laid eggs and has issued a challenge to all comers to beat his record.

ARMY AVIATOR IS KILLED.

Lieutenant C. Perry Rich, Of Philippine Scouts, Drops Into Bay.

Manila.—A spectacular fall into Manila Bay with a hydroaeroplane killed Second Lieutenant C. Perry Rich, a military aviator. He was attached to the Philippine scouts. He was flying around the Asiatic squadron, at anchor, when he fell. Many naval officers and sailors saw the accident.

SHOT FROM HER APPENDIX.

Two Grains Fired Into Rabbit By Woman's Husband.

Harrisburg, Pa.—Surgeons of the Harrisburg Hospital removed from the appendix of Mrs. Reuben Ulrich, of Selins Grove, Pa., two grains of the shot with which her husband killed a rabbit last week. Mrs. Ulrich ate a part of the rabbit containing the shot.

SUPREME COURT GIFT.

Question Of What To Give White House Bride Is Believed Decided.

Washington.—A silver centerpiece in the form of a boat was understood to be the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the puzzling case of "What shall be our gift to the White House bride?"

NEW REVENUE DISTRICT MADE.

Western Maryland, West Virginia and Part Of Virginia Grouped.

Washington.—United States Commissioner of Internal Revenue Osborn announced the creation of a new revenue agent's district, which is composed of the western part of Maryland, West Virginia and the southwestern part of Virginia. Its headquarters will be at Roanoke. R. B. Sams, for years in charge of the Asheville revenue agent district, will be placed in charge of the new district.

COMMERCIAL

Weekly Review of Trade and Market Reports.

Bradstreet's says:

"Current trade reports, winter wheat crop advices and consumption of steel products indicate good present conditions, but future buying is slow, conservatism is in evidence, finished steel is weaker as the result of increased competition for orders and industry is running at a slower gait, though the quieting down is not general and it is significant that numerous industries are being pushed to make deliveries.

"Conservatism displayed is largely due to uncertainty over tariff readjustments, which it is thought may force lower prices. Another factor that exerts a strong deterring influence is the absence of a free market for loans. But in many quarters considerable improvement work is planned for the spring of 1914, and optimism still prevails.

"Business failures for the week were 305, which compares with 260 in 1912."

It has been estimated that the number of recruits available for the French Army was reduced from 228,500 in 1906 to 215,000 in 1911, owing to the diminution of the birth rate in France.

The title admiral derives its origin from an Arabic word, emir-al-bahr, meaning "lord of the sea."

Tools in 1912 exported phosphates valued at $9,216,703.

SYNOPSIS.

Scarlett, an American soldier of fortune in the employ of the French Imperial Police at the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian war, is ordered to arrest John Buckhurst, a leader of the Communists and suspected of having stolen the French crown jewels. While searching for Buckhurst, Scarlett is ordered to arrest Countess de Vassart and her group of socialists and escort them to the Belgian border. Scarlett finds Sylvia Elven of the Odeon disguised as a peasant and carries her to La Trappe where the countess and her friends are assembled. All are arrested. The countess saves Scarlett from a fatal fall from the roof of the house. He denounces Buckhurst as the leader of the Reds and the countess conducts him to where Buckhurst is secreted. German Uhlans descend on the place and Buckhurst escapes during the melee. Scarlett is wounded. He recovers consciousness in the countess' house at Morsbronn, where he is cared for by the countess. A fierce battle is fought in the streets between French and Prussian soldiers. Buckhurst professes repentence and returns the crown jewels to Scarlett. He declares he will give himself up to the authorities. Scarlett doubts his sincerity. Buckhurst urges the countess to go to Paradise. Buckhurst admits that he receives pay from the Prussians for information which he does not give. He secures passports to the French lines for Scarlett, the countess and himself. Scarlett reports to the secret service in Paris and finds Napoleon, shadow of the emperor in charge. He deposits the crown jewels.

The shock came almost immediately, for, without a word, he suddenly emptied the jewel bag on the desk before him. The bag contained little pebbles wrapped in tissue-paper.

"Suppose you explain this farce?" Mornac suggested, unmoved.

"Suppose you explain it!" I stammered.

He raised his delicately arched eyebrows. "What do you mean?"

"I mean that an hour ago that bag contained the diamonds from the crucifix of Louis XI.! I mean that I handed them over to you on my arrival at this bureau!"

"Doubtless you can prove what you say," he observed. "It seems to me that it is high time we abolished the Foreign Division, Imperial Military Police."

"I refuse to be discharged!" I said, hoarsely. "It is your word against mine; I demand an investigation!"

"Certainly," he replied, almost wearily, and touched a bell. "Bring that witness," he added to the soldier who appeared in answer to the silvery summons.

Somebody entered the room behind me, passed me; there was an odor of violets in the air, a faint rustle of silk, and I saw Mornac rise and bow to his guest and conduct her to a chair.

His guest was the young Countess de Vassart.

Mornac turned directly on me. "Madame, do you know this officer?"

"Yes," said the countess, smiling.

"Did you see him receive a small sack of diamonds in Morsbronn?"

The countess gave me a quick glance of surprise. "Yes," she said, wonderingly.

"Thank you, madame; that is sufficient," he replied; and before I could understand what he was about he had conducted the countess to the next room and had closed the door behind him.

"Quick!" muttered Speed at my elbow; "let's back out of this trap.

"I Refuse to Be Discharged!"

There's no use; he's one of them, and he means to ruin you."

"But he's got those diamonds! Do you think I can stand that?"

"I think you've got to," muttered Speed, savagely. "Do you want to rot in Cayenne? If you do, stay here and bawl for a court-martial."

He seized me with a growl of "Idiot! come on!" and fairly shoved me through the colonnades of the institute, along the quay, down the riverwall, to a dock where presently a swift river boat swung in for passengers. And when the bateau mouche shot out again into mid-stream, Speed and I stood silently on deck, watching the silver-gray facades of Paris fly past above us under the blue sky.

We sat far forward, quite alone, and separated from the few passengers by the pilothouse and joined funnel.

I waited; Speed chewed his cigar grimly.

"Look here, Scarlett," he said. "Do you kuow what has become of the crown jewels of France?"

"No," I said.

"Well, I'll tell you. You know, of course, that the government is anxious. But you don't know what a pitiable fright the authorities are in. The crown jewels, the bars of gold of the reserve, the great pictures from the Louvre, the antiques of value, including the Venus of Milo, have been packed in cases and loaded on trains under heavy guard.

"Twelve of these trains have already left Paris for the par-port of Lorient. The others are to follow, one every twenty-four hours at midnight. A swift cruiser—the Fer-de-Lance—is lying off Paradise with steam up night and day, ready to receive the treasures of the government at the first alarm and run for the French possessions in Cochin-China.

"And now, perhaps, you may guess why Buckhurst is so anxious to hang around Paradise."

Of course I was startled. Speed's muttered information gave me the keys to many doors. And behind each door were millions and millions and millions of francs' worth of plunder.

Our eyes met in mute interrogation; Speed smiled.

"Do you remember an application for license from the manager of a traveling American show—a Yankee circus?"

"Byram's Imperial American circus?" I said.

"That's it. They went through Normandy last summer. Well, Byram's agent is going to meet us at Saint-Cloud. We're engaged; I'm to do ballooning—you know I worked one of the military balloons before Petersburg. You are to do sensational riding. You were riding-master in the Spahis were you not?"

"I tamed three lions for my regiment at Constantinople," I said.

"Good lad! Then you can play with Byram's lions, too. Oh, what the devil!" he cried, recklessly; "it's all in a lifetime."

PART SECOND.

CHAPTER IX.

The Road to Paradise.

On the 3rd of November Byram's American circus, traveling slowly overland toward the Spanish frontier, drew up for an hour's rest at Quimperle. I, however, as usual, prepared to ride forward to select a proper place for our encampment, and to procure the necessary license.

We were in seedy circumstances; an endless chain of bad luck had followed us from Chartres.

The fortune that Byram had made in the previous year was already gone; we no longer traveled by rail; we no longer slept at inns; we could barely pay for the food for our animals.

"Got enough cash for the license?" asked Byram, uneasily.

"Plenty, governor; don't worry," I replied, and set my horse at a gallop over the old stone bridge.

I passed a stone house, another, then the white road curved under the trees and I rode straight into the heart of Paradise, my horse's hoofs awaking echoes in the silent, stone-paved square.

A young girl with a face like the Madonna stole across the square in her felt shoes.

"Can you tell me where the mayor lives?" I asked, looking down at her from my horse.

"Filo! ia; oui, monsieur, s'il faut bien. The mayor is at breakfast in his kitchen yonder."

"Thank you, my child."

I turned my horse across the shady square to a stone house banked up with bed on bed of scarlet geraniums. The windows were open; a fat man with very small eyes sat inside eating an omelet.

I told him that I wanted a license for a circus to camp for one night; that I also desired permission to pitch camp somewhere in the vicinity. He made out the license, stamped it, handed it to me, and I paid him the usual fee.

"How much will it cost to have your town-crier announce the coming of the circus?" I inquired.

"That will cost ten sous if he drums and reads the announcement from here to the chateau."

I gave the mayor ten copper pennies.

The mayor glanced at me.

"Paris still holds out?" he asked, with a yawn.

"Oh yes," I replied.

"And the war—is it still going badly for us?"

"There is always hope," I answered.

"Hope," he grumbled; "oh yes, we know what hope is—we of the coast live on it when there is no bread; but hope never yet filled my belly for me. Why, not a keel has passed out of the port since August. Where is the fishing fleet? Where are the sardine sloops that ought to have sailed from Algiers? Where are the Icelanders?"

"Have the German cruisers frightened all your craft from the sea?" I asked, astonished.

"Yes, partly. Then there's an ugly French cruiser lying off Groix, yonder, and her black stacks are dribbling smoke all day and all night. We have orders to keep off and use Lorient when we want a port."

"I'll Cry Your Edicts and I'll Drum for You, Too!"

"You believe the cruiser out at sea yonder is going to bring you evil?"

"She has brought it. But it's all the same to me. I am mayor, and exempt, and I have cider and tobacco and boudin for a few months yet."

At that moment we both caught sight of a peasant running and waving a packet of blue papers in the air. "Monsieur the mayor! Monsieur the mayor!" he called, while still far away.

"Cre cochon de malheur!" muttered the mayor, turning pale. "He's got a telegram!"

He turned to me, almost bursting with suppressed prophecy.

"It has come—the evil that the black cruiser brings us! You laughed! Tenez, monsieur; there's your bad luck in these blue morsels of paper!"

And he snatched the telegram from the breathless messenger, reading it with dilating eyes.

When at length the magistrate had mastered the contents of his telegram, he looked up with a stupid stare.

"I want my drummer. Where's the town-crier?" he demanded, as though dazed.

"He has gone to Lorient, m'sieu the mayor," ventured the messenger.

"To get drunk, I remember. Imbecile! Why did he go today? Are there not six other days in this cursed week? Who is there to drum? Nobody. Nobody knows how in Paradise. Seigneur, Dieu! the ignorance of this town!"

"M'sieu the mayor," ventured the messenger, "there's Jacqueline."

"Ho! Vral. The Lizard's young one! She can drum, they say."

"The little witch can drum them awake in Kerlis," muttered the messenger.

The mayor rose, looked around the square, frowned. Then he raised his voice in a bellow: "Jacqueline! Jacqueline! Thou Jacqueline!"

A far voice answered, faintly breaking across the square from the bridge: "She is on the rocks with her searake!"

The mayor thrust the blue telegram into his pocket and waddled out of his garden, across the square, and up the path to the cliffs.

Uninvited, I went with him.

CHAPTER X.

The Town-Crier.

The bell in the unseen chapel ceased ringing as we came out on the cliffs of Paradise, where, on the horizon, the sun hung low, belted with a single ribbon of violet cloud.

Below the cliffs, on a crescent of flat sand, from which sluggish, rosy rivulets crawled seaward, a man stood looking out across the water. And the mayor stopped and called down to him: "Ohe, the Lizard! I want somebody to drum and read a proclamation. Where's Jacqueline?"

At this instant a young girl, a mere child, appeared on the beach, dragging a sea-rake over the ground behind her. She was a lithe creature, bare-limbed and ragged, with the sea-tan on throat and knee. The girl caught sight of the mayor and gave him a laughing greeting which he returned with a shrug.

"If you want a town-crier," she called up, in a deliciously fresh voice, scarcely tinged with the accent, "I'll cry your edicts and I'll drum for you, too!"

The girl threw her rake into a boat and leaped upon the rocks at the base of the cliff.

"Jacqueline! Don't come up that way!" bawled the mayor, horrified. "Hey! Robert! Ohe!! Lizard! Stop her or she'll break her neck"

Breathless, hot, and laughing, the girl pulled herself up over the edge of the cliff. I held out my hand to aid her, but she pushed it away, crying, "Thank you all the same, but here I am."

The mayor looked at her angrily, but, probably remembering he was at her mercy, suppressed his wrath and held out the telegram. "Can you read that, my child?"

"Yes, I can read it. Why not? Can't you?"

"Read? I the mayor of Paradise!" repeated the outraged magistrate. "What do you mean, of lizards! gorse cat!"

"Now if you" she said, "say such things I won't dr[illegible]" interrupted the child, glancing at [illegible] of her sea-blue eyes and giving [illegible] shake to her elf-locks.

I gave her a hand [illegible] at the first glance her eyes sparkled, the color deepened under her coat of amber tan; she caught her breath and read rapidly to the end.

"Oh, how beautiful," she said, softly. "Am I to read this in the square?"

"I will give you a franc to read it, Jacqueline."

"No, no—only—oh, do let me come in and see the heavenly wonders! Would you, monsieur? I—I cannot pay—but would—could you let me come in? I will read your notice, anyway," she added, with a quaver in her voice.

"Come whenever you like, Jacqueline," I said. "Ask for me at the gate."

"And who are you, monsieur?"

"My name is Scarlett."

Scarlett," she whispered, as though naming a sacred thing.

The mayor, who had toddled some distance ahead of us, now halted in the square, looking back at us through the red evening light.

"Jacqueline, the drum is in my house. I'll lend you a pair of sabots, too. Come, hasten little idler!"

We entered the mayor's garden, where the flowers were glowing in the luster of the setting sun. The mayor soon reappeared with drum and drumsticks in one hand and a pair of sabots in the other. "Go, my child," he said, and Jacqueline marched through the garden out into the square by the fountain, drum-sticks clutched in one tanned fist, the scrolls of paper in the other.

In the center of the square she stood a moment, looking around, then raised the drum-sticks; there came a click, a flash of metal, and the quiet square echoed with a startling outcrash. Already a knot of people had gathered around her; others came swiftly to windows and doorsteps; the loungers left their stone benches by the river, the maids of Paradise flocked from the bridge. The drum-roll ceased.

"Attention! Men of Finistere! By order of the governor of Lorient, all men between the ages of twenty and forty, otherwise not exempt, are ordered to report at the navy yard barracks, war-port of Lorient, on the 5th of November of the present year, to join the army of the Loire.

"Bretons! France calls! Answer with your ancient battle cry, 'Sainte-Anne! Sainte-Anne!' The eyes of the world are on Armorica! To arms!"

The girl's voice ceased; a dead silence reigned in the square. The men looked at one another stupidly; a woman began to whimper.

"The curse is on Paradise!" cried a hoarse voice.

The drummer was already drawing another paper from her ragged pocket, and again in the same clear, emotionless voice, but slightly drawling her words, she read:

"To the people of Paradise! The manager of the famous American traveling circus, lately returned from a tour of the northern provinces, with camels, elephants, lions and a magnificent company of artists, announces a stupendous exhibition to be held in Lorient at greatly reduced prices, thus enabling the intelligent and appreciative people of Paradise to honor the Republican circus, recently known as the Imperial circus, with their benevolent and discerning patronage! Long live France! Long live the republic! Long live the circus!"

A resounding roll of the drum ended the announcements; the girl slung the drum over her shoulder, turned to the right, and passed over the stone bridge, sabots clicking.

The maids of Paradise were weeping now by the fountain; the men gathered near, and their slow, hushed voices scarcely rose above the ripple of the stream where Robert the Lizard fished in silence.

I walked across to the Quimperle road and met Jacqueline, dancing along with her drum. We stood in the middle of the high road looking through the dust haze, she doubtless dreaming of the splendors to come, I very, very tired.

Suddenly, straight out of the flaming [illegible] of the sunset, the miracle was wrought. Breathless, she shrank back among the weeds, one hand pressed to her throbbing throat. Then she caught sight of something through the dust that filled her with a delicious terror, and she cried out. For there, uptowering in the haze, came trudging a great, gray creature, a fearsome, swaying thing in crimson trappings, flapping huge ears. It shuffled past, swinging a dusty trunk; the sparkling horsemen cantered by, tin armor blazing in the fading glory; the chariots dragged after, and the closed dens of beasts rolled behind in single file, followed by the band-wagon, where heaven-inspired musicians played frantically and a white-faced clown balanced his hat on a stick and shrieked.

So the circus passed into Paradise; and I turned and followed in the wake

"Long Live the Republic! Long Live the Circus!"

of dust, stale odors, and clamorous discord, sick at heart of wandering over a world I had not found too kind.

And at my heels stole Jacqueline.

Would Be Worth Seeing.

A young woman from the east was conversing with a Kentuckian about tobacco and tobacco raising. She was very pretty and a good conversationalist, and the young man from Kentucky was vastly interested in her until she gave him a sudden shock by announcing:

"I should love to see a tobacco field, especially when it is just plugging out."—National Food Magazine.

Pretty Costume for Club Meeting

FOR the club woman, or one who attends any informal afternoon function, here is a simple and smart costume. It is designed on very conservative lines, but provided with the most popular of the present style touches to make it acceptable to the most up-to-date wearer.

It is a model especially well adapted to a stout figure. The small coat hangs closer than the majority of those equally smart. Its cut sets the material close to the arm and narrows the shoulders. The sleeves are easy, in straight lines and three-quarter length. There is a deep and rather narrow "V" at the throat, and the basque is long, sloping down toward the back. It is unfinished except for the sewing at the bottom. Thus the long line of the figure is not broken by the separate coat. It is noticeable that all the lines of the coat tend to preserve length of line in the figure.

The skirt is fuller than the average, with the effect of being a double skirt at the front. It is cut wide enough to allow it to be caught up in plaits at the left knee under a soft rosette of chiffon. A piece is let in at the front, but the split or overlapping breadth is absent and there is worn enough for a comfortable step. At the long "V" at the front a little soft white chiffon is let in and a strand of the ever-present white beads finishes the neck dress.

The jacket laps at the front with fastening concealed by an inverted "V" shaped piece of the material. There is a plaiting of lace about the throat and small ribbon decoration at the right side by way of garniture, a short satin girdle of plaited ribbon fastens with hooks and eyes at the left side under extremely small made ornaments.

The hat is of hatter's plush, with facing of velvet in black. The paradise wreath in shaded flame color gives brilliance and distinction to the entire toilette.

It will be noticed that the long gloves are glace kid in black. They make the arms look very slender and reduce the apparent size of all hands remarkably. Very thin women should not wear them. High surfaced black is not for them. The sleeves are finished with a band of satin.

To study this costume is more convincing than describing it to show that it has been carefully thought out as adapted to the full figure.

The narrow drooping brim of the hat makes the most of the length of the neck, since it does not conceal it. The feather swirl is light, following the brim line almost exactly. The shape is extremely graceful.

It is by such careful thinking out and management of line that grace is arrived at. Developed in black or grey or mauve or taupe, this is a good model, but for the purpose of reducing the apparent size of the figure black is the best choice.

JULIA BOTTOMLEY.

PARISIAN WOMEN OCCUPIED WITH TWO NEW "FADS"

AT the present moment there are two very prominent fashions governing Paris. One of these is white hair. The other is red fox.

Early last spring there was noticed the growing fashion of wearing powdered hair. All through the summer season one saw the most wonderful, and often very beautiful, heads of silver hair at the opera, and at the Theater des Champs Elysees, on Russian Ballet nights.

Model of White Souple Satin. Three Tier Tunic of White Lace With Black Maline Bow at Waist.

The Parisiennes started this fashion. Then, almost immediately, it was taken up by women of other nations, especially by American beauties.

Now it is the fashion to wear powdered hair in the day time as well as by night. This does not mean pure white hair, such hair as one sees at a fancy dress ball. The powdered hair now so fashionable in Paris is, as a rule, quite dark in parts. It is obviously powdered at the sides and in front.

The great drawback to this fashion is this: Powdered hair makes considerable demands upon one's toilet, and upon one's personality, generally. It seems to silently call for a special style of dress. It cannot be worn, successfully, with "just anything."

In the evening these difficulties disappear entirely, for modern evening gowns are so ornate and elaborate that they seem to harmonize, naturally, with powder.

As to the second "fad," what can be said? Red fox skins have become ubiquitous in Paris. All through last summer, and autumn, the most exclusive Parisian beauties were making sensational successes in white linen and satin sea-side costumes, accompanied by a brilliant red fox skin, in the shape of a flat tie.

Skins or the ordinary red fox looked all right when adopted as an eccentric "fad," by ultra smart women, and in conjunction with fragile summer dresses; they look hopelessly common when adopted as a regular winter fur and worn with handsome tailored suits of cloth and velvet. Nevertheless, the red-fox rage is apparently in a healthy condition. It seems likely to last all through the winter. And the pity of it is that already the shop windows are filled with imitation red-fox skins, worthless furs which have no meaning and which would make any costume look ordinary. This was, of course, inevitable, but it is nevertheless deplorable.

The newest combs are large and flat, and the correct thing is to wear them at the back of the head, low down, in Greek style. Some of these combs are of rare beauty. The artistic jewelers of Paris are past masters at work of this kind, and the most wonderful things are done with carved jade, inset with precious stones, and with transparent horn incrusted with diamonds and traced over with gold.

Sometimes these beautiful combs are accompanied by an elaborate clasp which is worn at the breast or is used to fasten the wide sash, at one side.

Philately and History.

An interesting chapter in philatelic history, and in the history of Europe, is closed by the decision to suppress the foreign postal agencies in Crete as the result of the union of that island with Greece. Austria, Great Britain, France, Russia, and Italy have all maintained post offices in Crete, as in Turkey, and there is at the moment much speculation in philatelic circles as to whether the Levantine post offices maintained by the powers, among which Germany is also included, will not be closed as well.

NOT THE SHOCK EXPECTED

Seemingly, Debutante Would Have Been Willing if It Had Been Otherwise.

After the Spanish melon, while awaiting the cold consomme, a young Japanese diplomat took the fan from the white hand of a debutante, and opened it—from the right to left delicately.

"You noticed how I opened it?" he said. "From right to left?"

"Yes," she returned indifferently. "But everybody opens fans from right to left."

He sipped his amber-colored chablis and resumed:

"Fans originated in Japan, and from time immemorial the Japanese fan-makers, whose morality is not like western morality, have constructed fans in such a manner that, opened from right to left, they reveal innocent and lovely things—flowers and temples and tea gardens—while, opened from left to right, they reveal scenes of an indecency and obscenity passing belief.

"Of course, all Japanese fans are not of a double entendre such as this, but many are, and hence Japan has taught the world to open its fans in only one way—the safe way."

The young lady opened her fan, very cautiously, the unsafe way. Then she said:

"Pshaw, my fan is all right."

Japanese Greeting.

Nothing is more amusing than to watch two acquaintances saluting in the streets of a Japanese town. As they come in sight of each other they slacken their pace and approach with downcast eyes and averted face, as if neither was worthy of beholding the other; then they bow so as to bring the face on a level with the knees, on which the palms of the hands are pressed.

A succession of hissing sounds is next heard, made by drawing the breath between the closed teeth, interspersed with complimentary phrases uttered with great volubility, each trying to outdo the other.

At last the climax is reached and each endeavors to give precedence to the other. For perhaps a full minute the polite contest continues; then the ceremony abrutly ends, as if the difficulty were capable of none but a brusque solution, and the two pass on hurriedly, with a look of extreme relief.

The Japanese gentleman who has many acquaintances must require an hour to walk the length of a block on a city street.

United States' Superiority.

According to a report issued by the American bureau of foreign and domestic commerce, based upon a study of seventeen industries in the United States and Great Britain, it requires 18 per cent more power and two and one-half times more labor to do the same work in the industries examined, in Great Britain than it does in the United States.

DISCONTENT NOT ALL GOOD

True That It Has Its Uses, but There Are Other Things to Be Considered.

It is perhaps true that some writers and teachers have over emphasized the gospel of contentment with our lot. It is not always well to be contented with our lot. Avancement in every line has been made by people who were discontented with their present opportunities and broke through to something higher. But, even allowing this, it is undeniably true that there is a vast amount of unholy and wasteful discontent. We are apt to think pretty constantly how much more and how much better we would do if circumstances were different. While history presents many cases of people who broke away from humble task to force their way to something higher, it is fuller of instances in which a man or woman, by doing with patient faithfulness an insignificant task, has been called to greater things.

The answer to the problem is the old rule of living by the minute. It is almost never right to leave a task unfinished. This day, this hour, this minute, puts a task into our hands.

"Because of the nail the shoe was lost, because of the shoe the horse was lost; because of the horse the rider was lost; because of the rider the battle was lost." So it was the blacksmith, after all, who lost the battle. If he had done his work well, the cause might have triumphed.—Christian Herald.

Character Told by Laughter.

A French paper has discovered that a person's character is expressed in his manner of laughing. If you laugh in "Ha ha" fashion, you are frank, a man and inconstant and incapable of keeping a secret if a woman. If you laugh "Heh, heh," you are neurasthenic, melancholy and skeptical. If you adopt a deeper tone and laugh in "Ho, ho's," you are generous, easy going and good-natured. The proper pitch for the fair sex to laugh in is "He, he," while people who laugh with a "Hoo, hoo" effect should be avoided as hypocritical, scandal-mongering and miserly.

THE REPUBLICAN

THE REPUBLICAN,
Oakland, Md.

THURSDAY. NOVEMBER 20. 1913.

ALTHOUGH the election of a governor in Maryland will not occur for two years, four democrats have announced their willingness to make the race for the office.

MINING in the United States is a gigantic industry, second only to agriculture, employing directly more than 1,500,000 men and having a yearly output of $2,000,000,000

YESTERRAY, Nov. 19, was the fiftieth anniversary of the delivery of President Lincoln's Gettysburg address. One of the most remarkable addresses ever delivered in this country.

ON advice of Attorney General Poe, Governor Goldsborough will issue no commission or certificates in the election of November 4 until those candidates file statements of their campaign expenses in his office.

LAST Saturday Henry G. Davis, formerly United States Senator from West Virginia, nominee for Vice President of the United States on the Democratic ticket, years back an active Garrett county business man, celebrated his 90th birthday.

THE Christmas of 1913 ought to be a happy one for the children of the United States. Statistics show that twenty million dollars have been invested in toys. Surely it is not such a cold hearted world as some people are inclined to make it.

CONGRESS will convene Monday, Dec. 1st. Unless President Wilson's special session of Congress can close up its business in ten days the poor Senators and Congressmen will not get a vacation for a single day, but they will draw their mileage just the same and be on the job.

THE national debts of the world now aggregate forty-two billion dollars. The United States stands ninth in the list. The largest national debt is that of France, then follows in order Russia, England, Italy, Spain, British India, and the German Empire.

HON. THOMAS J. PARRAN, Republican candidate for United States Senator at the recent election, has filed with the Secretary of the Senate, Washington, D. C., his statement of expenses. His total receipts were $15 and his expenditures $110. Now let us have Mr. Lee's expense account.

THE Secretary of State, William Jennings Bryan, is planning to go to his winter home at Miama, Fla., shortly, we suppose to secure a much needed rest from the severe duties of his office and the fatigue of his Chautauqua lecture course. It must be comforting to have in bank the Chautauqua fund to help out his meagre salary.

THE attention of the friends of Garrett county public schools is called to the Educational rally to be held at Friendsville tomorow. It will be an interesting occasion, and means much for the public scoools of Garrett county. Every public school official, from the Board of School Commisioners down to the trustees of the county, the teachers and every friend of education should attend this rally. It is expected that State Superintendent Dr. M. Bates Stephens will be present. The REPUBLICAN hopes that this will be one of the largest educational conventions ever held in Garrett county.

ARE not the Oakland merchants making a mistake by delaying the displaying and advertising of Christmas goods? The city merchants are doing so. So are merchants of near by towns. In looking over the exchanges coming to this office we notice the advertisements of holiday goods. The large retail houses are urging their patrons to shop early. Circulars are being mailed to citizens of this county, urging them to send in their orders at once. Every merchant should get out his Christmas stock because the people are making their selections earlier than in former times. If they do not see what they want at home, they will order it from the city stores. The purchasing public has more money today than they will have a month from now.

THE receipts of the B. & O. Railroad Company for the year ending June 30, 1913, has just been made public. The report shows receipts from all sources $103,329,992, an increase of $9,280,388. The total expenses reached $76,427,810, leaving as profits $26,902,182. These figures certainly do not indicate that the railroad has been having such a hard time to make both ends meet. The company operates 4,456.43 miles of road. During the year the road carried 22,989,-239 passengers an increase of 700,914 over 1912. The company received from the express traffic $1,909,551.96 and for carrying the U. S. mails $1,205,158.95.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

"Ham" Says Mr. Barton's Views May Be Comforting To Some.

MR. EDITOR: Mr. Barton's views on the resurrection may be comforting to him, but that does not prove that they are in accord with scripture. We presume they are in accord with Russellism, which he represents. If so, his views are unscriptural. All Bible christians believe that the body of the believer will be raised up like the body of Jesus, a literal glorious resurrection of the body that will be recognized – not a spirit body, for there is no such thing but a spiritual body. Mr. Barton's issue teaches that we do not know what became of the body of Jesus, it may have become dissolved into gas, that is the annihilation of the body, and, of course, there can be no resurrection of that which is annihilated. It is a contradiction of terms, it is contrary to reason, it is a clear denial of an obvious fact to talk of resurrecting what has been annihilated.

How the cult which he represents loves to harp on the word hell, as meaning Hades the place of the dead and not future punishment. All scholars know and knew it long before Barton saw the light of earth, that the word translated hell, in our Bible, means the grave or the place of the dead, and every church recognizes the existence of a place called hell, as the place of future and eternal punishment, for sometimes the word hell means the abode of the lost, the place of punishment, where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched. This is "gehiema" the word used to express the place of punishment. See Matt. 5: 29, 30; Matt. 10: 29; Matt. 19: 9; Matt. 23: 15, 33; Mark: 43, 45, 47; Luke 12: 5; James 3: 6.

He professes to believe everything in the Bible about hell and may be he thinks he does, but he evidently does not. Jesus taught the existence of a hell of everlasting punishment, yet Barton teaches that the punishment of the "few incorrigibles" who who will be lost is annihilation.

The Apostles also taught that hell does refer to a place where the lost suffer unending misery. In proof of this he says good people went to hell at death as the bad and Jesus also went to hell according to Acts 2nd chapter. He went to the abode of the dead, though this corrupting ism teaches that the body of Jesus was and so the dead are annihilated. Hell is a place, as truly as heaven is a place.

It is a place prepared for the devil and his angels, the final abode of Satan and the impenitent. At death the spirits of the wicked depart into that portion of hades reserved for the wicked dead, where they exist in conscious torment. (Luke 16: 29-31.) Then at the great White Throne judgment they shall be assigned to their final condition of torment. Rev. 20: 11-15 and 21:18. Then they enter into their final and fullest suffering, for they shall be clothed upon with a body, a perfect counterpart of the lost spirits that inhabit it and partake with it of all its misery.

But Mr. Barton says, "When properly understood the Bible teaches the annihilation of the wicked," and quotes II Peter 2: 12.

Peter means that the false teachers whom he is describing, who act as irrational animals. This is not annihilation. You cannot annihilate the being of those who die without having accepted Christ. That the future destiny of the wicked is a condition of unresting, unending conscious torment and anguish is the clear teaching of the Bible: Jesus teaches it in Matt. 25: 41, 46. "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels. These SHALL go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal." Read Rev. 19: 20; 20: 10. Rev. 21: 8 reads, "But the fearful and unbelieving and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death." So the tortures of hell constitute the second death and not annihilation which would be infinitely preferable to the impenitent.

The expression "forever and forever" used of the lake of fire prepared for the devil and his angels, to which the persistently wicked also go, is used twelve times in Revelation.

Three times it refers to the duration of the torment of the devil, the beast, the false prophet and the persistently wicked. II Tim. 1: 7-9 shows the everlasting punishment of the wicked from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of His power. But what does "destruction" mean? In Rev. 17: 8, 11 we are told that the beast goeth into "perdition," which is derived from the same verb as "destruction." If we can find out what the beast goeth into, we shall know what "destruction" means. In Rev. 19: 20 we find that the beast was cast alive into the lake of fire with brimstone. Rev. 20: 10, we find that at the end of a thousand years after the beast was cast into the lake burning * * where the beast and the false prophet still are, and that they shall be tormented day and night "for ever and ever." This, then, is what destruction means in the Bible– a portion in the "lake of fire." Take it literally or figurately as you please, it means a condition of being in a place of conscious and unending torment. If you can get people to believe in the soul destroying, hell-filling doctrine of annihiation, they will give loose views to their passions and appetite, to their lusts and desires without fear of the agony of hell. If there is a heaven then there is a hell and we are in danger of it, therefore do not allow yourselves to be deceived by the fair speech of deceivers and false teachers, who would lull you into the awful sleep of indifference and carnal security.

Who teaches that progress ceases at death or that the christians "enters an eternity of idleness and harp playing?" Does he mean to say there will be no music in heaven or is he putting up a man of straw to knock him down for the entertainment of his followers? No church in christendom teaches such doctrine. Come, man, be true and honest, be sincere. The kind of converts you get by misrepresentation will not be a credit to you. Inform yourself before you presume to instruct others

There will be progress in holiness, though music will doubtless be one of the occupations of the blessed. They will sing the "Song of Moses and the Lamb," the song of the redeemed.

To bolster up his hotch-potch theology, he resorts to some outlandish exegesis, that would be laughable were it not for the seriousness of the subject. For example in the Story of the Rich Man and Lazarus, he says, the rich man represents the nations of Israel. His torment referred to the persecutions experienced by the Jews after their national death. He might have told us that according to the marvelous exegesis of his cult's teacher, that Lazarus stands for the Gentiles, &c. In Vol. 1, No. 4, of Peoples' Pulpit, page 2, we find these words, by the leader of the cult, "Only recently we had an exhibition of how this rich man (Israel), dead as a nation, but alive as a people, has appealed to Father Abraham (who stands for God) to have Lazarus cool his tongue with a drop of water." Of course, the thought would not be that a spirit finger should take a literal drop of water to cool a literal tongue. The interpretation must be looked for along the lines of a parable. The fulfillment came when the Jews of this country, m a general petition, requested the President of the United States to co-operate with other christian nations and intercede in behalf of their members in Russia, that they might have more liberty and less persecution, that their torments might be cooled." Really, I don't think there is much harm in the devotees of this 'ism giving homage to this interpretation, for there is nothing like it in the heavens above, in the earth beneath, or the waters under the earth. Such farciful interpretations have no foundation, in fact, reason or common sense, but are convenient as affording the means of proving any vagrancy in the vivid imagination of an ambitious but incompetent teacher may invent.

Look for a moment at the story, a fixed gulf. Death fixed the place and the doom. As death leaves us so will eternity find us, and eternity will keep us in the state in which death leaves us. If one dies in Christ he is in Him forever. If he dies out of Christ he is out of Him forever. There is the fixed gulf. No second chance, but a second death. Not a cessation of being but a conscious ill-being, i.e. existence forever in evil, or ill-being, away from the presence of Christ. One means life, eternal life the other, eternal spiritual death conscious, active, a living death, with no ray of hope of a second chance. Now is the accepted time. Now is the day of salvation.

Mr. B. claims it is very unjust to consign any one, no matter how wicked, to ages of suffering for the sins of a few years. But who is this self-styled pastor and teacher of the Word of God that he should presume to pass judgment on the acts of the Lord or to call in question His wisdom? Does he not know that the duration of punishment of sin can never be determined by the time it takes to correct sin?

In a moment's time a man may murder another, but a just penalty would be a life-long imprisonment. Sin means separation from God, and that is torment. The torment must continue as long as the separation from God exists, and the separation from God must continue until sin is repented of and the Savior accepted. But the time comes when repentance and the acceptance of the Saviour becomes impossible, then one becomes eternally confined in his separation from God, and eternal punishment must of necessity follow.

But it is not a few years of sin that brings the eternity of punishment. A man may continue for many years in sin yet escape punishment by repentance and acceptance of Christ. It is the rejection of Jesus, as our Saviour, that brings eternal torment. Nothing but such a doctrine as eternal punishment for our rejection of Christ will satisfy our moral intuitions, when we see sin in its enormity, the holiness of God in its perfection and the glory of Christ in its infinity.

"The fact we dread suffering more than we hate sin and more than we love the glory of Jesus—this, and this alone, makes us repudiate the thought that beings who eternally chose sin should eternally suffer, or that man who despises God's mercy and spurns His Son should be given over to eternal anguish." My friend, you can't afford to take any risks here. Where will you spend eternity? Your character must determine that. But you are making your character. Let it be like Christ's. It must be if you hope to spend eternity with Him. Sharing with Him His glory. "As thy faith is so shall it be unto thee." Resurrection in the likeness of Christ is soul inspiring, and heaven is our goal, while hell is to be shunned.

Yours truly, HAM.

Mr. Barton's Lecture.

To the Editor of the Republican:

Beyond the Grave was the title of a very interesting lecture delivered at the Maryland theatre, Oakland, Thursday, Nov. 6th, the speaker being Pastor B. H. Barton, of Philadelphia.

In a very original manner the subject of the resurrection was set forth, and even those who could not agree with all the conclusions of the Pastor must have had their faith in the future life strengthened by the forcible way in which things beyond the grave were treated.

The certainty of the Bible evidence that we will know our loved ones there, was emphacized; among other things he said: "If we do not know each other there we will have to loose all memory of the associations of the present life, and this would mean that we would not be ourselves, as personality includes memory. But this doesn't mean that we will recognize each other by outward appearance, for there are other and even better ways of knowing our loved ones than their outward looks."

Pastor Barton is among those who believe there is an interval between death and the resurrection. He quoted a number of passages of Scripture along the line of John 14: 2, to prove that the resurrection would take place when Jesus comes the second time, rather than at the moment of death.

In this part of his discourse he said: "The existence of this interval explains why the Bible so often refers to the dead as asleep. It also accounts for the interminable discussions in which theologians have engaged over the subject of an intermediate state.

"There are many who discern the existence of this interval between death and the beginning of the next life, and have speculated freely on where the interval is spent. But we see clearly that there is no intermediate state, that is no conscious state, but this interval is one long period of restful sleep, waiting for the Lord's return.

"However, since the dead are unconscious, the raising of the dead will appear to them the same as if they were raised the moment of death. They will have no knowledge that there was such an interval until thus informed.

"But when the dead come forth what indescribable joy will be theirs. The Bible encourages us to believe that the resurrection life will be filled with surprises far beyond the power of the mind to grasp. Several scriptures even warrant us in expecting that millions of mothers who lost little ones here will finish raising them to perfect manhood in the life beyond."

It was suggested that "very few will be lost in comparison with what we once supposed, only such being finally lost as have hearts so thoroughly out of harmony with God and righteousness that nothing could ever make them fit for eternal life.

"But even those who are lost will be punished in accordance with the highest justice, and no one could be bad enough to deserve a million years of torture for his sins; then how much less could any justly deserve an eternity of misery?

"This idea that everlasting pain and torture await the wicked is out of harmony with the teachings of the Word of God. The Apostle tells us in II Peter 2: 12, that the wicked shall utterly perish like brute beasts, while in Obadiah 16 we are told of some who will be destroyed so completely that they shall be as though they had not been.

"All such passages indicate the ultimate destruction of the wicked rather than their everlasting preservation in agony and woe.

"The word hell is probably the most misunderstood word in the English language. It does not mean a place of torment, but simply the death state. The Bible speaks of good people going to hell as well as the wicked." W.

Educational.

To the Editor of the Republican:

Compulsory school attendance may work well in cities and towns, but we doubt the wisdom of extending it to all sections of the country.

Our odious vaccination law should be amended by our new legislature. Proper health authorities should see that vaccination is done when and where there is actual necessity for it.

It's a debatable question whether our rural schools are better than they formerly were, notwithstanding the increased cost of maintaining them.

About one-third of our teachers each year are new ones, many of whom are new "birds." "Book-learning, strict examination, supervision not all of these can make good teachers out of a lot of immature kids."

"Experience is the best teacher," therefore those having experience in this profession should receive necessary encouragement so that they would make it a life work, and in no case should one be turned down who has been successful in this high calling.

Much of our institute instruction has but little practical value to teachers. Neither can the course of study provided be literally carried out in country schools; but teachers should use every means to increase their proficiency.

About nine-tenths of our boys and girls fail to go beyond the fifth grade, therefore they should be thoroughly taught the essential things they so much need to know. These are reading, writing, spelling and arithmetic. Some history and geography, and good morals and good manners should be supplemented.

When the country school teacher gives due attention to the above, his time will have been exhausted.

Believing that our school management will welcome suggestions having for their object the betterment of our public schools, we have contributed these imperfect thoughts. HOOSIER.

Letter From South DaKota.

EDITOR REPUBLICAN: Thinking that some of your readers would like to hear from a former Garrett countian, I will give you some news from the 'Kiote" state. I am located 2 miles from Lane, a town of 600 population. I am trying to farm and raise stock. Land is worth $60 to $100 per acre. It is good, black sandy soil and would be a good place for farmers of Garrett county who want more land to locate. You can buy 160 or 920 acre tracts.

Garrett county is all right, but I would rather farm in Dakota. I have just finished cribbing 3,000 bushels of corn. The man I bought of did not raise as much corn as I wanted. I have two silos which hold about 400 tons. With it and the corn I will feed the cattle winter and summer.

I was told before I came here that the wind was so strong that it would hold a sheep up against a barn for 24 hours. I haven't seen any sheep up in the air, except in price. Cattle are high here. I have 27 in the shed that cost me $75 a piece, as feeders. Also have 50 head to keep over, mostly cows and heifers. I am not saying this to boast, but to show you that farming out here pays.

We do not raise much fruit here, but have good crops of jack rabbits and prarie chickens. We can sell our wheat and stock and fruit. We do not need to use fertilizer, ony use what naturally goes with stock raising. There are lots of automobiles here, but I do not own one. I have six mules. I have also two boys and two girls to call me "Pa," and feel at home. Regards to my Garrett county friends. W F. KITZMILLER.

BITTINGER.

While hunting near his home, last Saturday morning, Harvey Stark shot and killed a large blue crane. The bird is said to have measured five feet from the end of its beak to the tip of the tail, and six feet from tip to tip of its wings.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Bukle are rejoicing over the arrival of a young daughter in their home.

For three days last week, people were enjoying sled rides, but now it is mud, mud, every where.

Mrs. Ed. Brenneman returned last week from Connellsville, Pa., where she had her eyes successfully treated.

During the recent snow many rabbits and pheasants were killed and the local hunters had much enjoyment.

Lloyd Brenneman made a business trip to Springs, Pa., last Sunday.

Columbus Broadwater and family, of New Germany, visited relatives near here on Sunday.

The attendance at the Bible Conference, held in the Glades Menonite church near here, was not so well attended, on account of bad weather.

HOYES.

Albert Enlow, teacher of our school is getting along very nicely, and although the average is small all are making rapid progress.

Miss Laura Coddington, who has been living at Connellsville, Pa., for the past year, visited her parents last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Speerline were made very happy last Sunday morning when a fine baby boy came to live with them.

Mrs. Chase is leaving Hoyes this week, for a few weeks visit at Connellsville, from which point she will go to Akron, Ohio, to spend the winter with her niece, Mrs. Frazee.

Marcellis Smith recently moved from our town. We are losing a number of our residents this fall.

Ralph Brenneman, of Akron, Ohio, but formerly of this community, was calling on a number of his friends and relatives last week, at this place and McHenry. He returned to his home last Friday. He speaks very flatteringly of Akron as a home.

Wesley Callis attended church services several evenings last week at Flatwoods.

Willie Mattingly recently shipped from here a number of carloads of cattle and sheep to the Eastern markets.

Sampson Custer came up from Connellsville Wednesday and remained until Friday with relatives at this place.

FIRST CORN UNDER NEW LAW

Cargo From Buenos Aires arrives At Galveston.

A letter to the Daily New York Sun, from Galveston Texas, says:

The French steamship Carol I arrived here yesterday bringing 192,000 bushels of corn from Buenos Aires, South America, consigned to an elevator company located at Wichita Falls.

This is the first corn imported into the United States under the new tariff and is the forerunner of heavy shipments. A second cargo is due here November 23 from the same port. Officers of the Carol I state that several vessels have been chartered to bring grain from Argentina to the United States.

Religion and Business Will Mix.

That religion and business will mix and neither suffer thereby is shown by the success that crowned the work of Mr. Richard Chaffey at Dobbin, W. Va., while engaged in the saw mill business and whose operations are now located at Albright, W. Va., concerning which the Kingwood Argus corespondent at Albright wrote this paper the other day:

Our town is still forging ahead. Every available man is employed and working every day.

The Ruthbell Lumber Co., are employing all the men who come here seeking work and they are now preparing to build a bridge over Cheat river to connect with the spur which will give them a direct connection with the M. & K. and thus be able to market their finished product.

The officers of this lumber company are all first class gentlemen and a help to this community, just as they would be to any other. They take an active part in church and Sunday school work and have religious services in the large hall over their store. They have an excellent store and carry a good line of groceries which they sell at right prices. They have the largest and best saw mill that ever located in this part of Preston. They will employ a large number of men and this will make an excellent market for farm products and it would pay our farmers, in the future, to truck more of their land when they will have such a good market at home.

In Memory of Asa M. Durst.

The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away. Asa Milton Durst was born November 2, 1882. The Lord called him November 7, 1913. Stricken down by the dread typhoid in the mellow autumn days, he lingered until the earth, his last resting place, was mantled in white. On the following Sunday afternoon, Rev. Withers performed the last sad rites in the Methodist church at New Germany.

He joined the Methodist Episcopal church early in life, placing his membership with the Mt. Beulah church at New Germany. The church can boast of few more faithful attendants upon divine services than he. His seat in Sunday school was rarely vacant.

No one but those who watched at his side can ever realize how intensely he suffered or how bravely and uncomplainingly he endured it all. Death came not as a conqueror but as a sweet release. The end came quietly and peacefully, a gentle ripple on the tranquil sea of time, a gentle receding wave returning to its source. We still linger on the shore, mutely looking out across the dark waters and wondering who next will take passage across the mystic sea. The silver chord is broken. Our home can never be complete except in a home beyond, in a home not made by hands.

Written in loving tribute by Order of Publication.

John T. Steyer and wife, vs. Branard Coal Company, and Coudersport Trust Company, Trustees.
No. Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree to vacate, annul, rescind and set aside a certain lease executed by the plaintiffs to one H. M. Bateman, his heirs and assigns, and now held by the defendants.

This bill states that on June 24, 1910, the plaintiffs leased to H. M. Bateman, his heirs and assigns, all the coal underlying Military Lot No. 36, and all that part of Military Lot No. 199 not covered or held by the heirs of Israel Thompson, situate in Garrett county, Maryland, and by certain mesne and sundry conveyances and equity proceedings in the Circuit Court for Garrett County, the interest of said Bateman in said coal is now vested in the said Branard Coal company, and in the said Coudersport Trust Company, Trustee, mortgagee, by conveyances duly of record in Garrett county aforesaid, and that by the terms of said lease covenanted to pay cents per ton for each and every ton of coal mined and taken out of said land, settlement and payment therefor to be made January and July 1st in each year during the existence of said lease, and that Branard Coal Company has failed and refused to make said payments according to said lease, and that by the further terms of said lease, the said lessee was to mine and take out the first year after beginning operations on said land the minimum of 5000 tons, and 5000 tons the second year and 5000 tons each succeeding year thereafter during the existence of said lease, and whether said number of tons be taken out or not, said lessee was to pay for said number of tons each year, and that said minimum royalty, amounting to the sum of $ per annum, has not been paid since January 1, 1911, and is now more than two and one half years in arrears, and that said Branard Coal Company refuses to make such payment, and refuses to carry out and perform its covenants, as set forth in said lease, and that the plaintiffs are being deprived of their property and the revenue therefrom to which they are entitled under said lease, and that they are entitled to a decree declaring said lease null and void, and that the same be rescinded and set aside.

The bill they prays for a decree declaring said lease null and void and at an end, and rescinding and setting the same aside, and for general relief, and an order of publication against the defendants, who are non residents of this State, and a subpoena against said Branard Coal Company for service upon its statutory agent residing in the State of Maryland.

It is therefore ordered by the Circuit Court for Garrett County, sitting in Equity, this 4th day of October, 1913, that the plaintiffs, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 8th day of November, 1913, give notice to the said absent defendants of the object and substance of this bill, warning them to appear in this Court in person or by solicitor, on or before the 24th day of November 1913, to show cause if any they have why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

S. V. Com. Gen. Cook Post, G. A. R.

Dear Sir and Commander:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 7th. I am very glad to hear that your boys want to form a camp of Sons of Veterans and will write at once to William A. Keefauver, Division Commander, at Hagerstown, who will doubtless get in touch with them. I am so glad the boys up your way think enough of the service their fathers rendered the country to take steps to form a camp, and in that way prepare the way to take up the work where we lay it down, which in the very nature of things won't be very many more years. I shall be glad to hear how the boys are getting along. Remember me to comrade Sturgiss and give him a word of spmpathy from me.

Sincerely yours in F. C. and L.,
JOHN R. KING.

Our Oakland men are being called elswhere to ply their trade. The last one to leave here was Mr. Joseph Helbig, Jr., paper hanger and painter, who has secured a position with a Grafton W. Va., firm. Mr. and Mrs. Helbig expect to make their home in Grafton.

Messrs. D. E. Offutt & Sons shipped two exhibits of fine corn and one of potatoes to the State Horticultural fair at Baltimore, last Friday. They were raised near Oakland and brought to Offutt's store for shipment. We expect to hear of Garrett county farmers capturing several prizes.

Rev. C. W. Baldwin, of Baltimore, and Mr. John W. Young, of Cumberland, attended a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Mountain Lake Park Association, held at this place Tuesday. We learn that the receipts of the past season met all expenses and reduced the Association indebtedness at least $500.

Messrs. Joseph E. Harned and Julius C. Renninger, representing the local lodge, Knights of Pythias, left here Monday morning for Frederick to attend the dedicatory services of the new Knights of Pythias armony recently erected in Frederick. There were crowds of Knights present from every part of the state and a very enjoyable time was had by the visitors who returned to Oakland yesterday.

Monday Allen Paugh's boys were in the woods, when one of them saw a rabbit. They went to the house and got a shot gun and returned to the woods, but the rabbit had disappeared. The gun was laid across a stump. A little tot got to fooling with it, when suddenly the gun went off and Harry, one of the boys, was shot in the arm, near the elbow. He was brought to Oakland and the wound was dressed by Dr. Henry McComas.

Oakland's model bakery is an up-to-date establishment. Nothing too good or nice for its patrons. The interior of the salesroom is undergoing some splendid improvements. A pressed steel ceiling is being put in, which will add very much to the apperance of the room. The Thanksgiving offerings at Lauer's will meet with popular approval.

It does really look as if the Park was going to pass into other hands. The indications for a change in the management is more favorable today than it has been for a year or more. Rev. Dr. Reed, district superintendent, is at the head of the movement. The Doctor has been working hard to bring about the change. He has had almost unsurmountable difficulties to overcome, but it seems as if he had won out at last.

The autumn session of the Archdeaconry of Cumberland Diocese of Maryland met at Westernport Monday night and continued until yesterday evening. This diocese consists of Alleganv, Garrett, Frederick and Washington counties, contains one-seventh of the population of the State and one-eighth of its area, and there are 13 parishes, eight independent congregations and three missions, with 21 church buildings, 8 chapels and one mission station.

Mr. L. L. Loar and George W. Loar of this city, went to Chicago early this week and have returned with Miss Ethel Loar, who has been undergoing treatment at the hands of one of the most noted specialists at the Mercy Hospital at Chicago for the past five months, and her mother, who has been with her during this time. Miss Ethel was taken on to Oakland where she will spend a few days before returning to her home here. Mrs. Loar stopped off at her home here last night.—Grafton Sentinel.

NORTH GLADE

As we seldom see any news, from this thriving community, in the columns of the Republican we herewith enclose you a few items.

We extend our heart-felt sympathy to J. A. Beckman and family in their continued sickness and sad bereavement.

Newton Merrill is erecting a new house. U. R. Shank is the contractor.

Among other improvements we notice the houses of Theodore Beckman, Albert Baker and G. W. Moon have been much improved by new coats of paint.

Judge C. S. Harvey and J. L. McRobie are two of our banner potato raisers.

Miss Auburn Smith of Hoyes and Miss Artie Harvey of Ryans Glade were recent visitors to this community.

E. S. Gilpin and family have returned from Petersburg to their home.

H. C. Hersman and wife were business callers at Oakland last Saturday.

We note with pleasure three of our successful teachers have charge of schools adjacent to their homes, viz: J. L. Fitzwater, Jr., Albert Baker and Geo. W. Moon. We wish them continued success.

Harold Moon, R. P. C. has been assigned to duty at the terminal office, Washington, D. C. We are informed that Wm. Bishop will also be transfered to the same office in a few days. These are two more of Garrett county young men who are making good.

All will want to hear our new pastor and elocutionist, Rev. McAnnic on Saturday night 22nd inst. Everyone seems well pleased with our new pastor.

The NATION'S GREATEST FEAST DAY

ONCE more the liberal year laughs out
O'er richer stores than gems of gold;
Once more with harvest song and shout
Is Nature's greatest triumphs told.

THE BIRD OF THE DAY

MAKING FOR THANKSGIVING

TO MAKE HAPPY HEARTS AMONG THE POOR

THANKSVIGING DAY! Personally it conjures up visions of roast turkey and plum pudding and pies and all that go to make it an annual occasion of feasting; historically one sees "pilgrims on a rock-bound coast" and, invariably, it is regarded as about the oldest national holiday of the land! As a matter of fact it is the youngest! Practically every yearly observance of a patriotic nature is more ancient than the celebrating of Thanksgiving day as a regular official ceremony.

It is so customary in America for one person to do the pioneering and another to get the credit that it is no surprise to learn that even the Mayflower band were really not entitled to all the praise as original thanksgivers, which they have been receiving ever since 1620. Not that there is anything disparaging to be uttered about those stern moralists who seem to have been adepts in loading a cargo of furniture that would tax an ocean liner into a little sailing ship!

They were brave and they deserve the nation's remembrance. But 12 years before they landed at Plymouth a group of future colonists had stood on American soil and given thanks at their deliverance from the perils of the sea. This was on Sunday, August 9, 1607, at the Island of Monhegan and an English minister and a priest jointly conducted a service of thanksgiving. The twin ships Mary and John, and the fly boat, Gift of God, found their way to the island after a long, terrible voyage of storms and helplessness. They had neither turkey, nor cranberry sauce, but there was never a more genuine Thanksgiving day.

This was along the coast of Maine and yet Massachusetts has, through all the years, been honored among states as the home of the first Thanksgiving service.

Of course the Bay state may be said to have taken the idea and in the words of a capitalist, "developed it and put it on a paying basis." In Massachusetts such a day was set apart for especial services, continued fasting and rigorous giving of thanks almost from the time the Pilgrim Fathers first landed. But, without meaning to be facetious, it is obvious that these common sense folk never believed in giving thanks unless they had something to be thankful for.

Thus, in 1633, 13 years after the landing at Plymouth, the governor of that state officially appointed a day of thanks and another in the year following. But then there was a lump of three years during which the colonists did not celebrate. Why? Certain historians insist it was because they were "lean" years. If so, they must have been followed by three "fat" ones as the day was observed regularly until 1639. Again an interval of fateful 13 years and then, in 1651, the governor once more declared in favor of Thanksgiving. In 1680 the day was set apart as an annual state holiday and has been ever since.

But only New York adopted the practice of having such a day until well into the eighteenth century! As early as 1644 the Dutch governor of New York issued an official proclamation for a day of thanksgiving, but it was not followed each year—varying probably with the governor's ideas or the conditions of the crops. Like the famous pagan feast of autumn, it originally was meant chiefly as a public offering of prayer in gratitude for the bountiful output of grain and fruits which would see the settlers through the winter.

The other states were being more slowly settled and in Maryland and Virginia there was not so much of a strong religious atmosphere noticeable as a debonnaire enthusiasm for whatever of the good things of life could be had.

The day was observed but not officially. And always, in the south it was a day of feasting. From the time slavery entered the land the Maryland or Virginia colonist pictured Thanksgiving dinner as a scene of expectant waiting diners and a round grinning black face to the rear of the huge roast turkey on a platter.

About the time of the struggle of '76 it came into its own as a regular holiday and in 1789 was, for the first time, declared a holiday by congress and so observed. So that, really, it is quite a youthful, immature holiday after all!

Gradually, as the free air and broadminded-ness of this clime began to leaven the witch-burning dogmas of the Pilgrims, the fasting of the day was tempered by moderate feasting. People ceased partaking in solemn silence of a meal just about the same as that served on Sunday—on which day of the week all early Thanksgiving used to be observed—and had a few friends or relations in to help give proper thanks. This necessitated more elaborate preparations and what the college-bred young man of the household today would term "a bigger feed."

It would not be correct to dine in everyday clothes when guests were present, so elaborate costuming came into vogue for the occasion. Many guests came from a long distance—maidens sitting demurely behind men riders on horseback, or else in clumsy old road-coaches. It was not hospitable to suggest that these return the same day. So started the country house party which still flourishes wherever there is a hostess, a house in the country and a fireplace.

For weeks beforehand preparations for the great day went on. Especially at a place like Mount Vernon did Thanksgiving almost outweigh Christmas in culinary importance—which was as it should be since the Lost of Mount Vernon signed the first official proclamation making Thanksgiving a holiday. And always the turkey has been its emblem—just as the eagle is of freedom. Like the Indian it is typically American.

Of course with such tempting menus as turkey, roast pig, home-cured hams and mince and pumpkin pies—to say nothing of imported plum pudding—feasting rapidly took the place of abstinence. And it is remarkable that amid all the changes of this vast country during the past 123 years that menu has remained practically unchanged. Everywhere in America on this Thanksgiving day—save in the homes of the poor and the multi-millionaire—turkey and cranberry sauce will have places of importance and be served from the table. The high cost of living debars the city poor from much turkey and the ultra-rich have long since determined that a few thin un-graviled slices of white meat are sufficient to introduce amid the various cosmopolitan dishes of the meal.

Back in revolutionary days no such thought troubled the mistress of the governor's mansion at Albany, the exclusive hostess of Boston, or the chatelaine of a Virginia estate. There was only one proper place for the huge golden-brown, savory and beautiful turkey—and that was the exact middle of whatever end of the table was designated "head." No courses annoyed the guests and irritated eager juveniles. The dinner services had to be extensive and complete. Dinner was served at midday and began with a soup, taken from an immense tureen placed before the hostess. She ladled it out into soup plates, whose depth would astound a fastidious diner of today. All over the broad expanse of white cloth were various dishes and plates and cruets and receptacles for needed seasonings.

Nor were these of a thickness meant to endure rather than charm the eye. Gazing upon a collection of them now at the National Museum at Washington one marvels what magic of housewifery skill ever prevented their breakage. Where is the bride of yesterday who can point today to an intact after-dinner coffee set—much less that sufficient for a dinner party? Yet these are displayed in all the purity of outline and quaintness of a long gone period, bringing very near to the visitor the era of genuine hospitality.

In those revolutionary Thanksgivings there was no time to hastily wash certain dishes and use them over again. Everything had to be where it was in evidence all the time. And one can vividly picture the powdered hair of the grown-ups, the eager faces of the youngsters, the grinning darkies in the south, or cheery white "help" of the north.

At the museum imagination is stimulated by a sight of the very garments and jewels worn at Thanksgiving dinners just about the time the holiday received its christening as a national event. Dainty and suggestive of the beauty of youth is a pale blue ribbed silk empire gown with short puffed sleeves, a cobwebby white hand embroidered kerchief and a plain fall of wide skirt. Near it are the ridiculously little high-heeled white satin shoes, the gay colored fan, immense tortoise shell combs and gold beads and miniature locket worn by the revolutionary maiden.

And yet, very gay and festive must have appeared a gathering of well-known folk of the late revolutionary period, when Thanksgiving was sufficiently new as a national holiday to be observed with particular enthusiasm.

A complete full dress costume of a man of affairs of Maryland, displayed behind glass at the museum, reveals the dandyism prevailing. The knee breeches are of corded tan silk, with gem encrusted buckles; the coat, of the same material, is on the frock variety—with many plaits at the back, self-covered buttons and a high turnover collar of the Robespierre style. The gloves, silken hose, three-cornered hat and caped great coat are all delicate of texture and in marked contrast to the somber garb now thought appropriate for wear at a Thanksgiving dinner.

But it was not all "beer and skittles" then! Amid the display of old mahogany table, candelabra, cushioned dining chairs and array of costly old china and glass used on Thanksgiving days at Mount Vernon is the camp outfit of George Washington from which he partook of so many frugal meals.

One distressing winter of the struggle he ate his Thanksgiving dinner "in the field" and it is recorded that he had nothing except the regulation soldierly provender.

His little camp chest still contains the numerous pewter forks and spoons and dishes that served him in lieu of silver and porcelain. Over a fire that could be built in the open one pictures bread being toasted for him on the iron toaster which is still intact. There were bottles of seasonings, such as salt and pepper and a few shallow pewter plates.

If ever one needed faith in order to be thankful it was then, and yet he who issued the first national proclamation of Thanksgiving came through it to leave a visible evidence that not all early Thanksgiving dinners were sumptuous feasts.

At least, though, they were events—not merely annual meals—regarded by the very rich of today as a maudlin tribute to the national spirit and by the very poor as a merciful pause in the starvation of winter.

THE AMERICAN HOME

WILLIAM A. RADFORD, EDITOR

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 178 West Jackson boulevard, Chicago, Ill., and only enclose two-cent stamp for reply.

A great many seven and eight room houses are now being built on this plan with a wide gable and roof having a wide projection at the gables and at the eaves.

To be in keeping the loggia or living porch roof is built on the same plan, with the ends of the rafters exposed and a pitch and projection in conformity with the main roof.

A loggia built in this manner makes a very pleasant summer parlor, a splendid addition to the big living room in fine weather. It should be furnished with comfortable rockers and other easy chairs. It should have a good, heavy two story table to hold books and magazines and a hanging swinging seat in the corner farthest from the door.

These hanging seats are all right or all wrong, according to the way they are made, upholstered and hung. In the first place they must be solid, but they may be either cheap or expensive and still look well and comfortable. But the proportions must be right, and there must be cushions and pillows and a lean-back to make them comfortable.

The very best kind of a hanging seat may be made from a suspension woven spring wire mattress such as all furniture dealers seen for single beds. The wire spring is suspended from the ends of a solid hard wood frame. In making the seat the frame is neatly boxed around and on the or side porch, a size sufficient to make a roomy house and still keep it within the limits of a small family.

I find that more houses are needed for families of from three to five persons than any other size. Large families are the exception and families of three or four, or five at most seem to be the rule in this country. But I notice, too, that even small families want a good, large, attractive living spring is placed a thin mattress or cushion which is covered with good wearing material, dyed a good color to match the other furniture. Six feet long and three feet wide is a good, sensible size, big enough for comfort and big enough to look well. Make strong ends about a foot high, connect them with a back piece and hang with four chains from the four corners. Usually furniture fringe of a color to match the cushion is tacked around the box, but this is not absolutely necessary.

Red is perhaps the most substantial and lasting color for outside upholstering and cushions, but this of course must be governed by the individual taste of the housekeeper. I might say, however, that a loggia like this with a bright red rug on the floor and a dash of red somewhere connected with the different articles of furniture seems to brighten up a sun parlor in a very pleasant way.

Sometimes you want to screen a room of this kind either with glass or wire netting, or both, a loggia is much better than a porch or veranda for this purpose, because it is not necessary to pass through it, in fact you can't pass through it because the only entrance is from the living room.

In this house plan you enter at the side, an arrangement that solves the big living room and stairway problem. Where you have both a large living room and a stairway in the front of a medium sized house they interfere with each other, but this plan leaves the living room free to occupy the whole width and you have the loggia besides. Upstairs the floor area is smaller than downstairs, still you get three good bedrooms, a bath room and plenty of closets. Downstairs is helped out by extending the kitchen so it does not come out of the main building. This arrangement in connection with the large pantry makes a house that is easy on the housekeeper. She has store room at hand for the hoards of necessary little things without ruaroom it seems to be the one feature of modern houses that pleases everybody. I have known a living room like this to sell a house when it was deficient in many other ways, which goes to show that the idea is extremely popular.

You can put as much expense on the building as you want to, or you can build it almost as cheap as any other house of the same size by using cheaper materials. Sometimes a house cheaply built and well painted looks better than a more expensive house that has been neglected in the final finish. There are many such things to consider when building.

Posy Rings.

Somewhere back in the sixteenth century the posy and motto rings came into vogue. It is said that the famous ring which Essex sent to Good Queen Bess by the countess of Nottingham, and which the woman did not deliver, was a posy ring.

Lovers as well as friends all over Europe exchanged these rings. Some of the mottoes on the old rings are very quaint indeed. Here are a few:

"In thee, my choice, I do rejoice."
"May God above increase our love."
"Not two, but one 'til life is done."
"My heart and I until I die."
"As gold is pure, so love is sure."
"As long as life your loving wife."
"Love is sure where faith is pure."
"Love is heaven, and heaven is love."
"Not for a day, but, love, for aye."
"When this you see, then think of me."
"In gold I'm cast to bind two fast."
"My heart is thine, true love of mine."

Point of View.

Judge Curtis Dunham, Milwaukee's prohibition leader, said of Tammany Hall the other day:

"Your typical Tammany politician looks at every political movement from the single viewpoint of extortion and graft. Direct primaries, police reform, the social evil—these things mean graft and graft only, to him.

"He's like a tramp to whom a farmer said:

"'Looking for work, my man?'

"'Wot kind of work, boss?' the tramp asked cautiously.

"'Well, my man,' said the farmer, who was very short-minded, 'what can you do with a pick?'

"'I could bridle a pullet on it,' said the tramp, his dull eyes brightening a little."

Penalties of Excessive Snugness.

"These tight styles they're getting out do eternally beat all," grumbled the Old Codger. "Here my nephew has become popeyed from wearin' them tight collars, and my niece has St. Vitus' dance from tripping along in those tight dresses, and their father's so tight he saves burnt matches for kindling!"

BIBLE NAMES DROPPED

LATELY SEEM TO BE OUT OF FAVOR WITH PARENT.

Such Puritanic "Handles" as Ebenezer and Zadok, for Instance, Do Not Seem to Appeal as They Once Did.

A certain set of Christian names taken from the Scriptures have been used so long that we do not think of them as Bible names. Among them are Adam, Moses, Samuel, David, Daniel, Solomon, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. Others taken from the saints, like Peter, John, Stephen and Matthew, originally given to children because they were born on the saint's day, are still so common that we think of them as English names.

These names antedate the use of surnames, as may be inferred from the fact that nearly all of them have given rise to patronymics, like Jacobson, Peterson and Stevenson. In the twelfth century missionaries sent out by the authorities used to baptize whole villages at once, and to save time invested all the men with the name of John or some other saint, and the women usually Mary or Martha. To distinguish the Johns some additional name like Short or Strong of White or Black was given him by the neighbors, and so Christian names and surnames were united.

After the reformation it became the fashion among the Puritans to give children the names of characters like the Old Testament, and odd ones like Melchisidek or Barzillai were preferred. Among these were Abel, Levi, Jesse, Amos, Asa, Isaiah, Ephraim, Gideon, Malachi, Abner, Hosea, Ezekiel, Jeremiah, Zachariah, Asher, Eli, and hundreds of others.

For some reason the use of these names has largely ceased. We can understand why Ebenezer has been dropped, though once one of the most common of names in New England, for it is decidedly unmelodious. No modern girl could fall in love with an Ebenezer. But most of the Puritan Bible names have a strong, manly ring, and have been borne by able men. That they are going out of use is very evident from comparing the early class lists of Yale with later ones. Twenty-five classes in the early eighteenth century, numbering 375 graduates, show 119, with Puritan given names. This is about 30 per cent. Ten classes in the twentieth century, numbering 3,000, show but 25 given names of this class, or less than one per cent. Ebenezer and Barzillai have completely disappeared. Nor is Peletiah or Zadok to be found.

We can only hope that the descendants of these ancient worthies have inherited some of their sterling qualities, though they do not perpetuate the name.

Choose Your Reading Carefully.

Don't trust your reading to something that you can pick up. Have a book of good writing that deals with real topics of knowledge and wisdom. It should be a family law that only the instructive and uplifting things should be read in the home. Reading goes directly into a person's life, making him what it is—empty, frivolous, witless or vain. Of course, one must have some lightness and humor, but these should be the exception. There is nothing that so weakens the mind as this continual joking the everlasting laugh over trivial things. The true rule is to meditate upon what one has read, but what sort of meditation will one get out of a lot of jokes? Reading that doesn't inspire thought of a serious nature would better be omitted. It would be infinitely better if one would lounge about on the grass and the porch and watch the English sparrows than read only what tickles the empty mind.

Women Climb for a Hat.

At the annual reunion of the Welker family, held at the family homestead, near Sharpsburg, Pa., a tree-climbing contest was held among the female descendants of the family.

The prize that spurred the women on to grand efforts was a new fall hat, one of the latest creations in millinery and valued at $25. The winner turned up in Mrs. Meta Welker, who weighs more than 300 pounds.

After several contestants had tried for the dainty piece of millinery, which was placed on an upper limb of a big oak, and failed, Mrs. Welker, who was a great climber at one time, essayed to take a chance.

Carefully working her way up foot by foot, the big woman, who outweighed the other contestants two to one, finally reached the hat and brought it down. She was winded and nearly done up, but she held on to the hat.

Bibulcus Judge.

Justice Darling suggests that the saying, "As sober as a judge," originated from the fact that 100 years or so back judges were the only sober people in the country. North of the Tweed, where the saying is also current, judges were certainly not conspicuous for sobriety. Andrew Lang relates that "a great Scottish judge was once compelled to abstain from alcohol for six weeks. He then discovered that for 30 years of a learned and respected and valuable career he had never been for one hour really sober. He had his 'morning' when he rose, his '12 hours' at noon. On the bench he and the other judges solemnly and dutifully absorbed their bottle (say a bottle and a Scots pint) of port. Then he dined and sat over the claret till he titubated to bed. Then he rose, had no tub, and had his morning glass of whisky or brandy, and so on."

Teaching the People.

Caroline Hedger, M. D., of the Kentucky state board of health, says that with the co-operation of the women's clubs of the state, the board will endeavor to educate the people in a number of matters, among them child hygiene and the medical inspection of schools. She says the Sahara is brimming over with water compared to some homes, where the radiator and furnace use up all the moisture until the doctor is sought to remedy the drought of the body.

REVIVING AN OLD DEVICE

Caves of Refuge Have Been an Institution as Long as There Is Historical Record.

Refuge caves are now being proposed as a means of saving life in coal mines. The idea is to have in each mine one or more caves dug out of the solid coal or rock from one of the main passages of the mine. The entrance to the cave from the main passageway would be a long, narrow tunnel with three or four sets of massive doors, so that the cave would be explosion-proof. In times of danger miners would go to this cave and shut themselves in.

A considerable proportion of deaths in coal mine disasters is due to the after-effects of an explosion itself, and often the miners have lived for hours or even days before they suffocated. The caves would serve under similar conditions.

Air would have to be supplied in the caves, and this could be done either by small bore holes to the surface, such as are not uncommon in coal mines, or by pipe lines built so as to be explosion-proof running through the mine passages. The cave connected with the surface by a bore hole could be supplied with air freely, and kept in touch with the surface by a telephone, and food could be sent down through the hole.

A cave connected by a conduit through the mine could also have a telephonic communication with the surface, but it would be necessary in this case to keep a quantity of concentrated food and some water stored in the chamber. Supplies of medical first-aid materials and a pulmotor for reviving miners overcome by gases could also be kept in the cave to advantage.—Saturday Evening Post.

Some Mover.

Mrs. Howland was of a very quiet, reposeful disposition, while her husband was exactly the opposite; energetic and ambitious.

'Henry,' she said, complainingly, one afternoon, "I wish you would not be so nervous and forever on the move. Will you never take a rest?"

"I never expect to be able to rest till I get in my grave," he replied, "and then it will be just my luck that the next day will be the resurrection."

Please Do!

Although she was suffering from a severe attack of laryngitis, she decided to descend to the parlor and receive Jack, who was making a "sympathy" call.

Sympathy being so closely akin to that other sentiment, matters progressed. Finally he ventured:

"And what would you do, Gladys, if I attempted to kiss you?"

"I'd scream!"

"Then I won't."

"But—hut, Jack—it's all I can do to whisper.'

FAMILY OF FIVE

All Drank Coffee From Infancy.

It is a common thing in this country to see whole families growing up with nervous systems weakened by coffee drinking.

That is because many parents do not realize that coffee contains a drug—caffeine—which causes the trouble. (The same drug is found in tea.)

"There are five children in my family," writes an Iowa mother, "all of whom drank coffee from infancy up to two years ago.

"My husband and I had heart trouble and were advised to quit coffee. We did so and began to use Postum. We now are doing without medicine and are entirely relieved of heart trouble. (Caffeine causes heart trouble when continually used as in coffee drinking.)

"Our eleven-year-old boy had a weak digestion from [illegible] and yet always craved and [illegible] en coffee. When we changed [illegible] um he liked it and we gave him [illegible] he wanted. He has been restored to health by Postum and still likes it."

Postum comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be boiled.

Instant Postum is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. Grocers sell both kinds.

"There's a reason" for Postum.

SPRAYING PRACTICE IN PLUM ORCHARD

While Running Slightly Behind the Normal in Yield on Account of Continuous Rain at Pollenization Season and a Long Spell of Daylight Dry Weather, This Picture Shows a Bounteous Yield of Plums on a Long Island Farm.

(By S. A. BEACH, Iowa Experiment Station.)

Plum Curculio.—This insect makes a puncture in the tender young fruit in which it lays its egg. It then cuts a crescent flap around the puncture, making a characteristic wound. The egg soon hatches into a larva, commonly called "a worm," which feeds upon the fruit and often causes it to drop prematurely. Often the wormy fruit starts to rot before it drops and thus helps to spread the rot fungus to other fruits. Spray with arsenate of lead, using from 3 pounds to 4 pounds to 50 gallons just before the blossoms open and again as soon as they fall. Two weeks later spray with 2 pounds arsenate of lead to 50 gallons. Paris green might hurt the leaves if used.

When the insect is very abundant jarring may also be practiced. A convenient "catcher" is made of cotton sheeting stretched over a frame mounted on low wheels. One side is slit to allow the cart to be pushed directly under the tree. The tree is then jarred and the curculio which are caught upon the sheet are swept into a box hung under the center of the sheet from whence thye are later taken and destroyed. Jarring should begin as soon as the blossoms fall and continue from two to three weeks. Early morning is the best time to do this work.

Plant Lice.—Several kinds of plant lice, or aphides, attack the plum. They work on the under side of the leaf so that it curls and often drops. They multiply very rapidly. On nursery stock they may often be fought quite successfully by cutting off the infested tips promptly and destroying them or dipping in nicotine sulfate, 94, but in the orchard this is hardly practicable and probably the best that can be done is to spray with nicotine sulfate or with whale oil soap, one pound to about seven gallons of water, as soon as the lice appear and before the leaves curl.

Fruit Rot. Sclerotinia Fructigina.—This disease causes much loss to plum growers by rotting the fruit and sometimes also by destroying the blossoms and the tender shoots in spring. It is particularly destructive in Iowa to plums of the domestica or European class, such as Lombard, or Spanish King, German Prune, and Blue Damson, and also to the Japanese plums. It finds easy entrance to the fruit through punctures made by curculio or other insects. It may be partly controlled by fighting the curculio thoroughly and by spraying with lime sulphur.

Leaf Spot. Cylindrosporium Padi, K.—This is often quite injurious to the plum. The same disease attacks the cherry.

FERTILITY VERSUS SINGLE CROPPING

Potato Growers May Well Benefit by Experience of Wheat Raisers of Wisconsin.

(By C. L. FITCH, Colorado Agricultural College.)

When Illinois and Wisconsin, Minnesota and Dakota and other western states were put under the plow, the chief crop was wheat. After fifteen or twenty years of wheat growing in southern Wisconsin the crops diminished seriously, and about war time the yields ran so low because of disease that wheat growing was abandoned as a failure.

After almost a generation of dairying and the exclusive reliance upon corn, oats, barley and clover, wheat was tried again, and the yields are now larger than in the pioneer days. This offers a parallel to the growing of potatoes in southern Maine in the earlier days, their virtually going out and now their larger production again.

After the experience of 1911 and 1912 the potato growers of many regions in the Rocky mountain states will do well to consider if they have not already reached for the time being at least the passing of their crop. Persistence is a good thing, but not always better than wisdom.

PRACTICAL NOTES OF POULTRY YARD

Sunflowers Can Be Started Almost Anywhere and Transplanted—Add Variety.

A badly used hen is an eggless hen.

Stop fooling with poultry. Do business.

Water the hens two or three times a day with as good water as you would like to drink yourself.

How would you like to eat the feed you give your hens? If you beg to be excused, then we tell you that you are not doing the right thing by your birds. They never ought to have feed that is not good enough to set on our own tables.

Rubbing vaseline on the legs of chicks or older chickens, will prevent them having scaley leg and keep the skin smooth and well colored. This is a good treatment for the legs of show birds.

Summer is the time to plan for a variety of food for the hens next winter. A variety of food you know causes the hens to fill the egg case when eggs are high. Grow all the different kinds of food for them that you can.

It is a good plan to raise sunflowers in the poultry yards. They can be started elsewhere and then transplanted into the yard or can be planted in the yards if the hens can be kept out until they get started. Sunflowers make a fine shade for the hens and little chicks during the hot weather; they help to keep the ground dry and pure and then in the fall there is a good supply of sunflower seeds to help add variety to the ration of the laying hens.

Poultry manure is so strong that it will injure tender plants if allowed to lie against them. Remember this when putting the poultry droppings in the garden. Put them close around the plants but not against them and mix with the earth.

Do not think that your flock of hens is too small to bother with saving the droppings. The product from 25 hens for six months is about 375 pounds, from the roosts alone. This is well worth saving to enrich the garden.

BIRD IS FRIEND OF ORCHARDISTS

If All Members of Feathered Tribe Were Killed Land Would Be Overrun With Bugs.

In spite of the annoyance that birds cause by eating fruit, orchardists who have made a close study of the matter say that the birds are the best friends they have. If the birds were to be killed the land would soon be overrun with bugs and worms, and fruit raising would be destroyed. Not all orchardists, however, agree with this statement. An Illinois fruit grower stated at a horticultural society meeting that birds should not be protected any more than snakes. He kills hundreds of orioles, robins and thrushes every year because they destroy some of the fruit. It is stated on reliable authority that if mulberries are put out near cherry trees the birds will eat the berries and not molest the cherries to any considerable extent.

Pumpkins for Hogs and Cows.

It is surprising that more pumpkins are not fed to pigs and cows which have access to the alfalfa pasture in the fall. For a brood sow and shoats, and even for fattening hogs, a ration of pumpkins will give as good results as though they were cooked.

If cooked and some grain sprinkled over them, the hogs will eat more of them, which is the only advantage. In feeding cows the seeds should be removed if fed in considerable quantity, as they will interfere with the digestion and cause a decrease in the milk flow.

Raising Guinea Pigs.

Guinea pigs are easy to raise and taken all in all, are the most desirable pets that there are. Even a baby can play with them without fear of being scratched. The guinea pigs should be kept away from cats who will hunt them as they do rats. Some say, however, that when a kitten is brought up from the very first with guinea pigs she will live peacefully with them.

UNDER THE HEMLOCKS

By LOUIS MERRIFIELD.

Darnton had watched the little thin rising feather of smoke with apprehensive surprise as he rode along the river trail. For the minute he had forgotten all about "Hemlocks," the timber and rock bungalow that had been closed for two years.

"Man come back," he said briefly over one shoulder to his Shoshone guide.

"No man, squaw," answered the Indian. "Girl squaw."

"You have been up there?"

"See team go by."

He knew by the dropping of Lanie Bear's eyelids how useless it was to get any details about girl or team. So he had turned about, sent the guide back to his own place and ridden up toward "Hemlocks" alone.

She was washing when he arrived, washing out dish towels on the table under the hemlocks.

She lifted her head as she heard his pony's tread.

"I'm Darnton, the forest ranger around these parts," he announced. "I saw your fire, and just rode up to be sure. I knew that Mr. Martell was not here."

"Were you worried?" she asked, smiling not exactly in a friendly way, but as if she found this official supervision amusing. And no explanation did she make. He went away without finding out why she had come there, or what connection she had with Martell. He only knew that she was an artist and her name was June Campbell.

That had been two months ago. Hardly a day had passed since that he had not ridden within sight of "Hemlocks."

Bruce Darnton knew before the first month was up that all the happiness of life lay up at "Hemlocks" for him, and just as he was getting acquainted fairly well, and she would ride with him for hours through the forest trails he loved, there had come Tawny Phillips. Tawny had ridden many trails. Darnton knew him as a young California timber broker. Every once in so often Tawny would ride through the country, sizing up general possibilities.

Tawny was wealthy, buoyant, comradely, and most undeniably handsome. He found his way up to "Hemlocks" frequently. June liked him. One day she took Lame Bear to task for the way he had treated Tawny. The Indian had come on an errand for Darnton, and Tawny had told him to hobble his pony for him as he slipped from the saddle. Instead Lame Bear had turned and sauntered away.

"You were rude to my friend, Lame Bear," she said. "Why?"

"No friend," said Lame Bear stolidly. "He cut, burn, kill. He set fires for revenge. Lame Bear know. He want you for squaw. He think my man no good, no get girl for squaw. Het set fires for trouble."

"How do you know?" she asked quickly.

Lame Bear see. You bring black devil box. Take him pictures, yes?"

June saw what he meant. It seemed unspeakable that this man who had come to her for days, frankly wooing her, should really choose so diabolical a means of revenge.

Lame Bear kept his word. The next day he came and told her to [illegible] great rich glow of orange overspread the sky to the west of her. Tawny had made good his threat. She dressed and waited her pony saddled—for the daylight, but when the first streaks of light came, they were clouded over by the mounting pillars of smoke, and Tawny himself came at a dead gallop towards her.

He told her that Darnton was dead, killed by a smashing tree trunk, as he fought the fire. He told her the only way to safety lay in flight with him along the open trails away from the fire, and when she stood her ground, he laughed, and reached for her.

It was Lame Bear's bullet that caught him. Sent by Darnton to protect the girl, and assure her the fire was being checked, he had watched silently his chance, and paid back old scores when Tawny lost his head.

And when, hours later, Bruce rode up, blackened, bruised and lame, he found the Indian in lone vigil beside his prisoner, with June calmly developing the negatives that told who set the forest fires.

"We'll take him down to the sheriff tomorrow," Bruce said. "I'm glad to get the goods on him this time. It was mighty fine of you to take all that trouble to help me, Miss June. I don't see why—" He stopped just there and met her eyes. They looked rather tired and anxious. And an odd thing happened. Without another word, there in the shadowy living room of the old timber lodge, he someway found her in his arms.

"I'm going to stay here, Bruce," she whispered, "and ride the trails with you."

UNABLE TO MAKE IT OUT

Congressman's Diary, Brought Out After Lapse of Years, a Great Disappointment to Him.

Representative Sisson of Mississippi said in his wonted witty way of the currency bill:

"It is a disappointment to me—as much a disappointment as my diary was.

"I came across an old diary the other day.

"'Aha,' I said to myself, 'now I shall relive vividly again my life of eighteen years ago. What delightful things this dear old diary will call to memory!'

"And I opened the book to entry after entry like this:

"'Sun.—Cloudy. To c. Shaw A. Half.

"'Mon.—Settled at last. Ham and cabbage. Joe.

"'Tues.—Called on Joe Accounts. Sunfirles.

"'Wed.—At last. Eve. papers again.

"'Thurs.—Took express. Soup. Saw L. M. Socks.

"'Fri.—Oysters. Remember new idea. Bound to come.

"'Sat.—J.'

"So the diary ran on—page after page of initials and abbreviations and single word sentences that I could make neither head nor tail of.

"My dear old diary, in a word, was Greek to me. What a disappointment!"

BLOTCHES COVERED LIMBS

19 Roach St., Atlanta, Ga.—"A few months ago I had some kind of skin eruption that spread until my limbs and feet were covered with blotches and watery blisters. It looked like eczema. When the trouble reached my neck and face I was almost driven frantic. It itched and stung so intensely that I could not sleep or wear any clothing on the affected parts. After two months I commenced to use Cuticura Soap and Ointment and after two days I noticed improvement and in six days the trouble left. My skin was fair and smooth again and the eruption never returned.

"My cousin was a sufferer from pimples, known as acne, on his face and seemed to grow worse all the time. I recommended Cuticura Soap and Ointment to him and now his face is smooth for the first time in three years and he owes it all to Cuticura Soap and Ointment." (Signed) Walter Battle, Oct. 7, 1912.

Modern Ladies.

Bishop Blougram was laughing in Denver over the servant girl's definition of a lady as one who is dyed and painted and powdered, wears diamonds and smells of Turkish tobacco, champagne and motor oil.

"There must be some truth in that definition, or at least in part of it," he said. "I was walking the other day, when I came upon a little boy smoking a cigarette.

"'Goodness, Willie,' I said, 'what would your mother say if she saw you smoking cigarettes like that?'

"'She'd raise Calu,' Willie answered. 'They're out of her best box.'"

Taking no Chances.

"Popsy, dear, I might win a rich husband if you let me go to the seashore this summer."

"But, my daughter, you have been going to a different place each year remember, a rolling stone gathers no moss."

"I know, popsy; but this time I am going to a place where I will be the only pebble on the beach."—Judge.

State Reasons.

"Kings should never be baldheaded."

"Why kings especially?"

"Because reasons of state make it necessary for them to have heirs apparent."

Then He Pulled Him Out.

Chancellor David Lloyd-George, one of the best known figures in England, tells this story at his own expense:

A man saved some one from drowning and was given a public testimonial. When, after the mayor had sung the man's praises, he was called upon to reply, he said: 'Really, I have done nothing to deserve this reward. I saw the man struggling in the water and as no one else was near by I saw he would be drowned if I didn't save him. So I jumped in, swam to him, turned him over to see that it wasn't Lloyd-George, and then pulled him out.'"

New Phase of Red Cross Activity

The need of instruction in the proper care of children and home nursing of the sick in the smaller towns and rural communities of the country has never been questioned, and although in some cities visiting nurse organizations exist and anti-tuberculosis societies support nurses in their particular line of work, it has remained for the American Red Cross to take up rural nursing as a national proposition. Nurses who enter this service are required by the Red Cross to have special training or experience in public health nursing. In the Red Cross Magazine for October Miss Fannie F. Clement, the superintendent of Rural Nurses, describes the organization, plans and possibilities for good of the rural Nursing branch of Red Cross work.

Tree Earns $3,205.

What is probably the most valuable tree in the world is an alligator pear tree at Whittier, Cal., which netted its owner a profit of $3,205 in one year. This tree was planted in 1905 and began bearing in its fourth year. In 1912 it bore 3,000 pears, which sold for $1,500, while the sale of buds during the same year amounted to $1,705, making the total given above. The tree is a seedling, the seed having been planted with a quantity of other seed which had been imported presumably from Mexico. Another tree which was planted at the same time, and which stands close to this phenomenal bearer, has never borne more than 50 pears in a season. This valuable tree is now protected by a high fence built on an octagonal plan. The pears weigh from eight to twelve ounces each.

Very Big Handkerchief

Mr. Frederick Wile, the author of that much-discussed book, "Men Around the Kaiser," tells some excellent stories about a number of well known Germans.

Dr. Paul Ehrlich, the famous scientist, had a habit in his younger days, says Mr. Wile, of collecting any pieces of old linen he found about the house with which to clean his scientific instruments, his microscopic slides, and so on. Cast-off shirts and old handkerchiefs were his specialties, and he used to stuff them all into his capacious pockets so as to have them handy whenever he required them.

At a public lecture one hot day Dr. Ehrlich perspired freely, and, wanting to mop his brow, he put his hand into the nearest pocket and grasped what he thought to be a handkerchief. He tugged and tugged, and it came out and came out until he had exposed to the full view of his astonished audience a complete nightgown belonging to his wife.—Pearson's Weekly.

Is Your Body Poisoned?

Well kidneys keep the blood free of uric acid, a deadly poison that is constantly forming inside the body.

Sluggish kidneys allow the uric acid to accumulate, causing rheumatic attacks, headache, dizziness, gravel, urinary troubles, weak eyes, dropsy, and heart disease.

Doan's Kidney Pills restore the normal blood-filtering action of the kidneys. This drives out uric acid and ends uric acid poisoning.

A NORTH CAROLINA CASE

"Every Picture Tells a Story."

J. F. Williams, Garden St. Marion, N. C., says: "I was all run down from kidney trouble and doctors held out no hope for me. I had rheumatic pains, didn't sleep well and was nervous. The kidney secretions were in bad shape, too. At last, I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills and they soon cured me. I haven't had the slightest sign of kidney trouble since."

OAK LEAF GATHERING

Packed In Bales And Shipped To European Cities.

In certain sections of New Jersey the gathering of oak,leaves is a late summer and autumn industry. Passing through the section where the industry is carried on, one sees the sides of houses and barns or any other place out of doors where branches can hang to dry filled with rows of branches of oak.

After drying for two or three weeks they are put in bales for shipment. Last year one man gathered more than 300 bunches a day and had more than 12 tons for shipment.

The price is about $50 a ton and there is a brisk demand in European cities for the oak branches thus prepared. There are 100 limbs in a bundle and 100 bundles in a bale. The leaves are free for the taking, mostly. Still some owners of woodland are in the money making game themselves and charge so much per acre for the privilege.

The gather does not have to sow or cultivate—it seems as if the crop were a gift of nature.

The above is worth investigating. If there is such a market as is described, Garrett county can furnish millions of bales. Will some one be interested enough to write to the Dispatch, Camden, N. J., and find out if there is any truth in truth in this story, and publish the answer.

Timber Land For Sale

Our sporosmen are having a good time shooting game, which finds a ready market. Mr. Geo. Geissman has shipped the past three days 450 rabbits and 225 pheasants.

Evasions of the game laws through the agency of the parcels post now is possible for Post Master General Burelson to say replied to the interrogation of indignant officials of several states that Cougress had placed no restriction on the department as to accepting game. This condition, the state game wardens fear, will nulify in great numbers the state game laws framed for the protection of wild life.

Valuable Stamp Collection.

How stamp collecting has become specialized is instanced by the sale in Paris some time ago of a collection of Swiss stamps for about $40,000.

To Keep Ferns Fresh.

Use a soil of about half leaf mold or smooth earth and half fine sand. Give abundant drainage and then plenty of water. About once a month put them in the washtub or bathtub and give a thorough washing, not sparing soap; rinse well, and slightly loosen the soil before returning them to the stand. A bit of fresh beef buried in the soil ocasionally helps.

End of Golden Nugget Day.

Men have found a mass of native copper weighing 420 tons and they have discovered a chunk of pure silver weighing one and one-half tone, but the largest nugget of gold that has yet been seen weighed only 190 pounds. And gold seekers are informed that larger finds in the future are unlikely.

Vegetarian Menu.

The menu of a meal given lately by the London Vegetarian association included walnut cutlets with brown sauce, cauliflower and new potatoes, asparagus on toast, spaghetti on toast, tomato farcie and young carrots.

Not Knocking.

"Beg pardon," said the agent, as Mr. Grouch opened the door, "but I would like to ask if Mr. Dodger, your next door neighbor, is good pay." "How do I know whether he is good pay or not?" exclaimed Mr. Grouch. "All I know about him is that he has four grandchildren and he still owes for his marriage license."

Oakland High School Notes.

Prof. Bender received a letter from the manager of the Friendsville basketball team last week asking for a game to be played on their floor Nov. 21. We realized that something must be dond quickly, for we could not refuse to play them. A meeting was called the same day for all boys interested in basketball. Prof. Bender appointed a committee, which with the assistance of Mr. Brown, began at once to get the floor in shape for practice. Since we had only about eight days remaining in which to select the team and prepare to beat Friendsville again. Only the boys who had played before were allowed to practice. Edw. Chance who was appointed by Prof. Bender acted as temporary coach and manager.

Monday the following team was selected: P. Thayer, Captain, Ed. Chance, Manager, Ed. Lewis, L. Lyon, G. Ashby, B. Kildow, P. Naylor. There may be some changes made in the lineup later, since, on account of the short period of preparation a number have had no opportunity to play.

Mr. and Mrs. John Selders, who formerly resided near Brookside, left Oakland yesterday morning for the state of Delaware, where they expect to make their future home.

3M SHOT OFF BY A GHARGE FROM HIS GUN.

Oscar Ashby, Aged Nineteen Years, Nearly Lost His Life Friday.

Last Friday afternoon Oscar Ashby, aged nineteen years, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Ashby of near Underwood, met with a gunning accident which will main him for life and which came very near resulting in his death through loss of blood and shock.

The young man up to a few weeks ago, had been employed on the Crellin mill where he met with a slight accident which necessitated him laying off for a few days. On Tuesday he returned to work on the mill, but finding that he had not fully recovered his usual strength he decided to go hunting on Friday.

Shouldering his gun he went to the mountain a mile and a-half away to hunt rabbits and pheasants, and after tramping around for some hours he felt fatigued and placing the gun againts a chestnut log he leaned with his arm and shoulder against the muzzle, when the gun slipped down and striking against the side of the log the charge was fired, the entire contents of the gun entering and tearing away the flesh and bone of his upper left arm. In this condition Mr. Ashby walked and ran through the woods and briars toward his home, eventually falling into a creek where he was found by his uncle, Mr. James W. Ashby, who had heard his cries for help.

The injured man was assisted to his home when Drs. Broadwater and Hinebaugh were summoned, who amputated the arm just below this shoulder. He is doing nicely and his family have hopes of a speedy recovery.

Mr. and Mrs. H. H. White, of Terra Alta, W. Va., were in the city Tuesday.

Mr. Jerome Kelley, of near Cranesville, spent Tuesday in Oakland on business.

Mr. Albert Ashby returned to Oakland Sunday afternoon after an absence of a number of weeks which he spent in distressing circumstances in an official capacity at Jamestown, New York, and Washington who invitations.

Miss Davis and little son Marshall left Friday for a visit of some duration to Mrs. Davis' parents, Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Lantz at Blackstone, Va.

THE EXHIBITORS WILL BE QOITE NUMEHOOS

At The Corn Exposition To Be Given By The Second Notional Bank.

Inquries from farmers in the counties of Garrett and Allegany, Maryland, Mineral and Hampshire, W. Va., and Bedford, Pa., who are preparing to compete in the corn exposition to be conducted by the Second National Bank, of Cumberland, are being received with such frequency as to indicate a very large number of exhibitors, and an exposition of which the promoters and the entire commutity may well feel proud,

It should be recalled by those who plan to compete that the entries will be recieved at the Second National Bank during banking hours, December 2-5 inclusive. Twelve ears of corn constitutes an entry and each exhibitor should be prepared to prove by affidavit if necessary that his exhibit was grown in the counties limited to this competition.

A corn expert will be secured to judge the entries so that merit alone shall be rewarded. The prizes exceed one hundred dollars, the first prize being fifty dollars in gold. Racks will be provided to insure a proper display of the corn and each entry will be properly recorded and placed on display immediately upon its receipt.

It is to be hoped that some of our Garrett farmers will make an effort to captures one of these prizes.

Oakland Defeats Terra Alta.

The Oakland basket ball team, by fast playing defeated the Terra Allta team on the latter's floor, Monday night, by a score of 23 to 19. The game at times was rough and fouls were made quite frequently, Terra Alta being the principal offenders. The playing of Boyle and Sincell featured for Oakland and Ressenger for Terra Alta. The score and line up as follows:

Oakland	Terra Alta
Hart, f	H. White, f
Sincell, f	Ressenger, f
M. Boyle, c	Zeller, c
L. Fraley, g	Scott, g
J. Boyle, g	White, g

Summary: Goals from field: Hart, 1; Sincell, 1; M. Boyle, 5; J. Boyle 2. Ressenger, 6; Zeller, 1; J. White, 1.

Fouls: Sincell, 5 out of 6; Scott, 3 out of 5.

Substitutes: N. Fraley for L. Fraley; Naylor for Fraley; Sanner for Hart.

Referee: Dr. Scott.

HOPELESS IN GRIP OF THE CHESTNUT BLIGHT

Only Chance Is To Cut Wood Before Disease Has Ruined Its Value.

BY F. W. BESLEY, STATE FORSTER

The chestnut blight, technically known as Diaporthe Parasitica, appeared in the State about six years ago, having come to us throught Pennsylvania, where it began its destructive work a few years before. This disease apparently started in the vicinity of Long Island and has spread northward and northeastward as far as Massachusetts and southwestward into Maryland.

It is the worst tree disease that has ever been known in this country, and since the chestnut is one of our most valuable species, useful for many purposes, it is a very serious problem. This disease attacks only the chestnut, but is extremely virulent in character, attacking trees of all sizes and all conditions.

Infection comes by means of minute spores which are scattered by the wind, insects, birds and other agencies, and may gain entrance to the tree through any crevices or wounds on the branches or trunk of the tree. From the point of infection the disease works in the inner bark in both directions round the branch or trunk of the tree until it meets on the opposite side, thus completely girdling it, shutting off the flow of sap.

The blight does not injure the wood of the tree, as many suppose, but as it works almost entirely in the bark, the wood is left practically sound and useable, provided it is utilized within two years from the time the tree is killed.

The loss occasioned by this disease in Maryland has been a very severe one amounting to approximately $100,000. The northeastern and northern sections of the State have suffered most, as it was from this direction that the disease entered the State, and this is also the section where chesnut is most abundant. The greatest loss has been in the upper two-thirds of Cecil, Harford and Baltimore counties, where chestnut is more abundant than any other tree species, and also in the upper part of Carroll county.

An investigation was made by the State Forester three years ago to determine the damage and extent of the disease in the State and it was found that in sections of the counties named above the dead or diseased trees amounted to not more than 5 per cent of the total stand of chestnut. An examination made this past summer in Cecil county on a large area that was examined three years ago, at which time only 5 per cent of the trees were dead or diseased, showed that in three years the percentage of infection had increased to 90 per cent., and this represents pretty nearly the condition in the northeastern part of the State. Badly infected sections are in the vicinity of Principo, Cecil county, along the Northern Central railroad from the Pennsylvania line to Baltimore, and in the Green Spring Valley.

The disease has not made as much headway in the western part of the State, although the section around Edgemont has suffered a great deal, and the disease is progressing rapidly southward in Blue Ridge Mountains, where chestnut is very abundant. Up to the present time there has been practically no damage in Garrett and Allegany counties and very little in Western Washington county. There is very little chestnut in the Eastern Shore section, so that this disease will never be an important factor in that part of the State. Likewise in the lower parts of St. Mary's, Calvert and Charles counties, where there is little chestnut, and therefore, there is little damage from this disease posible; but in all other sections the chestnut blight is working unabated and threatens the extermination of this valuable species.

The discouraging feature about the chestnut blight is that there is no known remedy. The State of Pennsylvania, realizing the millions of dollars' loss from this disease, a few years ago appropriated $275,000 for combatting it and after two or three years of energetic efforts has paactically abandoned all hope of checking the disease. Even were it possible to check the disease by spraying or other methods that are useed in combatting disease of fruit trees and shade trees, this is impracticable in dealing with the trees of the forest, not only because they are so large that it would be difficult to reach the top, but because the cost of the cost of treatment would be greater than the value of the tree; but the chestnut blight apparently cannot be killed by sprays or any of the common methods of treating tree fungus diseases and insect pests.

To the man who owns chestnut timber in which the chestnut blight has gotten established the only thing for him to do is to cut and utilize the trees as soon as possible before the timber has a chance to deteriorate. Even with the large amount of chestnut poles, ties and other material that has been thrown upon the market in the last few years because of the chestnut blight the market for these materials remains good and prices obtained are very satisfactory. Therefore, while the blight is forcing the cutting of this material often before it is of proper size, there is no reason why it should be a total loss to the owner. While there is no good ground for predicting abatement of the disease, it has been the usual expetience that some natural enemy will appear sooner or later to relieve a situation of this kind, and there is some hope at least that chestnut may be saved from total extinction.

A CHURCH BUILDING HAS BEEN MOVED 260 MILES

Chapel Taken From Mountains Of Garrett to Baltimore County.

Baltimore, Nov. 25.—It is not often perhaps, that a man builds a church away up among the mountains and then 25 years later move it 260 miles into a big city But that's the job John A. Wolf expects to mark "finished" upon York and Cedarcroft roads sometime about Christmas eve.

He has moved from Corona, in Garrett county, 68 miles west of Cumberland, to Cedarcroft, a little community on the way to Towson by trolley from Baltimore, a church which occupies a lot something over 50 feet wide and 100 feet deep. The church has in it 35,000 feet of lumber, and Mr. Wolf has moved every foot of lumber.

The pieces of ash decorating the ceiling and the ash beams which will run up and down and across the heads of the congregation at morning service and at evening prayer are such pieces of lumber as it is extremely hard to get in these days, says Mr. Wolf, proudly. The church in which Rev. Charles A. Hensel, pastor of the Chapel of the Nativity, will hold services will be put together so that it will be the little chapel of the mountains reborn—with hardly a feature changed.

"Twenty-five years ago," said Mr. Wolf, "there was a big sawmill at Bayard, in West Virginia, which is just across the Maryland line from Corona, in Garrett county. Mrs. McCulloh Brown lived at Bayard and she thought the 200 workmen and their families who worked in the sawmill ought to have a church, so she built this one. I did the building for her.

"The times changed and he timber up in that neighbornood was exhausted. There was no reason why the mill should be there any more, and it shut down and moved away. The men who worked in it and their families followed the mill. Now there's nothing where the sawmill was Mrs. Brown died.

"There was no need for the church. It stood there all alone. McCulloh Brown, Mrs. Brown's son, who has a big farm at Bayard, didn't like the idea of the church being there and doing nobody any good. He started out to find somebody who needed a church. I understand that he got in touch with Mr. Hensel and that Mr. Hensel said he needed one here.

"Then we took the church down piece by piece and packed it on two cars of the Western Maryland Railway and brought it down here. I expect to finish putting it up again about December 25. It'll be exactly like it was up on the mountains except that instead of there being only one arch between the congregation and the chancel there'll be three, two small ones and a large one. Its exterior will be exactly the same."

Linen Shower In Honor of Bride-Elect

Mrs. Ida Haves, of Fair Oaks, this city, entertained Saturday afternoon with a linen shower in honor of Miss Catherine Carscaden, of Cumberland, who became the bride of Mr. Lem. W. Osborn, of Fairmont, W. Va., at the Episcopal church in Oakland yesterday at noon,

The house was beautifully decorated with potted plants and bride roses; cupids and hearts were used in abundance and over the door was a large cupid in a gold wedding ring. Cards were the diversion. Beautiful hand-painted tallies with a cat on one side saying "The cat is out," and on the back of the tally was a tiny envelope containing a card with the names of Miss Carscaden and Mr. Osborn. Prizes and refreshments were in keeping with the bridal scheme.

Those present, besides the guests of honor were: Misses Rena Osborne, of New York; Anna Lee White, of Cumberland; Grace Jones, Cleo Krants, Alice Travers, Mary West, Anna Gonder, Clara Mitchell, Jane Smith, Gertrude Skelton, Mrs. W. W. Shearer, Mrs. Ralph Weber, Mrs. James Willison and Mrs. John A. Grant.

Miss Ethel Loar, of Grafton, who has been here for some days following several months spent in a Chicago hospital, was removed to her home in Grafton Tuesday afternoon, being accompanied from Oakland by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. L. L. Loar.

We hear flattering reports of the big fair held at Baltimore during Maryland week, but have seen no announcements as to prize winners for oats, buckwheat or potatoes. The only announcement of a Garrett county prize winner that has come under our observation is the following: Class B—Yellow corn, Mountain district, first, T. E. Bishoff, of Hoyes.

CAS EXPLOSION NEARLY WRECKS LARCE ENGINE

At The Dixon & Kelso Flouring Mill In Oakland Last Saturday.

By the explosion of accumulated gas in the exhaust pit at the Dixon & Kelso flouring mill, in Oakland, on last Saturday afternoon, the engine room floor of the building was torn up and three men who were working about the engine when the explosion occurred had narrow escapes from serious injury.

The engine, which is operated by natural gas failed to start when the ordinary means were employed and the warehouseman, Samuel Aronhalt, assisted by Charles Caughey and Gus Naylor, attempted to manipulate the machine. After a few revolutions of the engine it took hold but gas had been forced into the exhaust chamber or pit, a conerete covered receptacle beneath the floor of the engine room, and when the engine fired this accumulated gas was exploded. A ton or more of concrete and brick was lifted into the air when the gas let go, throwing all three men off their feet and toward the revolving wheels of the engine. Mr. Aronhalt suffered a severe scalp wound from having been thrown against the side of the building, whilst Messrs. Caughey and Naylor were badly shaken up but not seriously injured.

Following the explosion the gas main feeding the engine was set on fire but this was extinguished as soon as the flow of gas was turned off at the meter within the building. Repairs were made immediately and the mill is again in operation.

Basket Ball Prize.

T. Cecil Miller, of the firm of J. T. Miller & Son, Lonaconing, announces that he will present to the winner of the Western Maryland Basketball League a silver cup. The cup is expected to arrive in Lonaconing next week, it will be placed on exhibition in the Miller display windows. The cup is of attractive design and stands a foot high including the ebony pedestal. The local boys are holding two practices every week and competition for places on the team is keen. This morning the official list of registered players on the different teams of the league were mailed to the individual managers by the secretary. To avoid the possibility of "ringers" being played, each player must be registered with the executive committee of the league fourteen days before he is allowed to play in a game; besides he must be a bona fide resident of the town on whose team he plays, and must be a member in good standing of the club he represents. The visiting team will have the privilege of carrying the referee for each contest, provided the home team is notified three days before each game who will be the referee. The home team will have the choice of umpire. All protested games and other questions arising between the teams will be setteled by the executive committee, a body composed of one representaive from each clud in the league.

ERIENDSVILLE EDOCATIONAL MEETING HELD LAST FRIDAY

A Well Attended And Highly Interesting Gathering.

The educational rally held at Friendsville last Friday was the greatest event in the history of that town. A large crowd of interested and enthusiastic people were present. The parade at 10:30 was one of the most imposing seen in this vicinity. In the parade were State and county public school officials, school children, members of the I. O. O. F., Daughters of Rebecca, and citizens in all kinds of vehicles, automobiles, and on horseback. The parade was led by the Friendsville military band. The chief marshals were Messrs. George D. Browning and James Friend.

Senator Harvey J. Speicher presided at the meeting, which was largely attended. Among the speakers were: President Lewis, of the Western Maryland college, Senator Speicher, Prof. F. E. Rathbun and Assemblyman-elect Savage. In the evening a game of basket ball was played by the Oakland and Friendsville High school teams, the latter winning by a score of 19 to 6. The receipts at the door, for the game, was $40.

Ex-judge of the Orphan's Court, Norman Bernard returned to his home near Mountain Lake Park, from a month's visit in West Virginia.

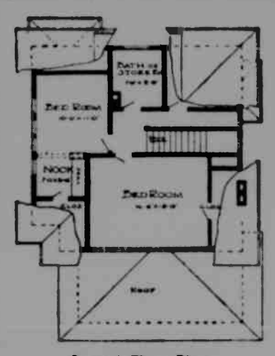
WILLIAM A. RADFORD, EDITOR



Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 178 West Jackson boulevard, Chicago, Ill., and only enclose two-cent stamp for reply.

It is not at all strange that a great many people want to build "something different." They feel that the ordinary square cut house, while all right and good enough for Smith or Jones and entirely comfortable and satisfactory so long as one is renting, is hardly the desirable thing when one comes to build a home for oneself. This feeling is entirely proper. While we would not for one moment want to seem to advocate the extreme and outlandish styles which often pass for originality, still a variety is necessary; and originality, or rather individuality, if properly directed, develops some good ideas in house design.

A well designed house costs no more to build than the plain, ordinary looking affairs that are often put up; in fact, they are apt to cost a good bit less, since the well designed house is built from complete architect's drawings and specifications. Then there are the other kind which are put up by the carpenter who plans as he goes along and is never quite sure just how the house is to look when finished.

For any one who wants something having an individual touch, the accompanying design is offered. There is nothing extreme about it; in fact, it is planned in the best of taste, yet it has certain features which make it entirely different from houses of the same size as they are usually planned.

The living room, 13 feet by 24 feet 6 inches, extends across the entire front of the house, while the dining room, occupying the alcove extending both back and to one side, is separated from the living room by a cased opening set cornerwise, or at an angle of 45 degrees, between the two rooms. This is an arrangement rarely seen, yet it is one which affords a maximum of roominess downstairs, at the same time separating the dining room space to a certain extent from the living room. An open stairway going up along the rear wall of the living room also adds to the apparent space. This arrangement affords wonderful possibilities for attractive interior decorative effects. Such a space is also very easily furnished for comfort.

Another desirable feature of this plan is the bedroom and bath on the first floor. This is a feature very much desired, but in the ordinary house plan of this size it seems to be a difficult matter to arrange.

The kitchen is the proper size and shape for convenience and is well supplied with cases and the sink is well located by a window where the light is good. A small entryway accommodates the ice box.

On the second floor there are two very nice bedrooms, besides one large store room and three closets. One of the bedrooms has a small alcove or dressing room, which is a good feature.

The exterior of this house is very attractive. Narrow siding is used from the water table up to the second-story window sill course. Above this cement plaster is used. It is suggested that both clapboard and plaster work should be painted dark brown, while the trimming should be white. While creosoted shingles make a very good roof for this design, other forms of roofing of a more enduring and fire resisting nature could well be used. In one instance where this design was carried out to very good effect last year, the roof was covered with metal Spanish tile.

The cost of this house runs somewhere between $2,800 and $3,800, depending on the quality of materials used and the fixtures and equipment installed. In the instance just referred to, where this house was built, the entire first floor was finished in oak with hardwood floors in the living and dining rooms and the second floor was finished in yellow pine. The roof was covered with the best quality metal Spanish tile. A hot water heating plant and plumbing system costing $600 and electric lighting and fixtures costing $65 were installed and all the interior walls were frescoed in lead and oil; the entire actual cost was $3,700. This is a striking evidence of what can be accomplished in attractive home building by the use of properly designed building plans.

That Flute by Wireless.

It is an unprecedented phenomenon in wireless telephone and telegraphy which is told by Capt. Schmidt of the German steamship Solfels, who reports while bound from Calcutta and Ceylon to Philadelphia he heard the clear notes of a flute at St. Michaels 395 miles distant from the Solfels. On the night of September 29 Wireless Operator Blitz called Capt. Schmidt's as well as Chief Officer Lampe's attention to the fact that some one was playing on the flute, the notes of which were clear and distinct to both Operator Blitz and Chief Officer Lampe. As the nearest land, the Azore Islands, was approximately 400 miles away, all hands were interested to know where the music came from. The music continued, and a wireless message was sent to St. Michaels, the capital of the Azores. A reply stated that it was a national holiday, and the man at the flute was playing "God Save the King."

As the wireless apparatus on the Solfels was of the Tellenfunken type, which is practically a telephone and wireless telegraphy outfit combined, there was no trouble in detecting the sound, although a long distance away.

Most Civilized Nation.

The question, "Which is the most civilized nation on earth?" is difficult to answer. Civilization is a very elastic term and is understood differently in different times and places. In scientific attainment, education, wealth and all the things that go along with wealth, the United States, Great Britain and Germany would appear to lead the procession, with some other nations following closely. But, taking all things into consideration, eliminating the sole matter of wealth, the most civilized country on earth is probably Norway. In that far northern land the ideal civilization, that is, the civilization that rests on common sense and justice, seems to have matured to a greater extent than it has anywhere else.

GOOD CULTIVATION OF THE BUSH FRUITS

Crate of Royal Purple Raspberries photographed in August. This is two weeks later than Columbian or any other raspberry. This is a good raspberry to plant for late berries.

(By M. M. EASTMAN.)

When the harvest is completed, cultivation of bush fruits should cease.

The sowing of some cover crop with the last cultivation is a most excellent practice.

Oats and peas, either separate or in combination, answer this purpose admirably. The benefits derived from a cover crop are manifold.

The greatest of these benefits, perhaps, comes in the protection afforded by the growth to the surface of the ground.

It is well known among those who have made a study of soil physics that when left unprotected by a growth of some kind there is a loss both in plant food and in the humus content of such soil.

Hence in so far as is practicable the wise husbandman will keep his land covered with a growth of some sort.

It is not practical to keep a cover crop growing among small fruits through spring and early summer, for the best interests of such fruits requires intensive cultivation through this period of their growth, but with the fruiting season over such necessity ceases.

Unless drought conditions are unusually severe there will be a sufficient amount of moisture in the soil of a bush fruit plantation that has received intensive cultivation throughout the spring and summer to start a vigorous growth of oats or peas, and under ordinary conditions of fall precipitation such grains will attain considerable growth.

The protection afforded by such a growth prevents leaching of intrates, that are continually being evolved through denitrification processes constantly in operation among soil agencies.

Such growth also prevents washing of soil by fall, winter and early spring rains, which, in cases of even slightly rolling land, may be the source of considerable loss.

The first spring cultivation will work this vegetative growth now dead and partially decayed into the soil.

Through the processes of decomposition the supply of soil humus is thus replenished, and soil agencies liberate the plant food used in making this growth, when it is at once taken up by the roots of the fruit plants and used in the growth and development of the various parts of such plants which at this season are in an exceedingly high state of activity.

The growth of grain presents a very pleasing picture to the eye throughout the fall season, during which time there is usually not much verdure in evidence.

To the one possessing an aesthetic nature this alone will be ample recompensation for the expense involved.

As soon as the fruiting season is over, it is usually advisable to remove the canes just fruited and burn them.

Where there are fungous diseases to contend with the need of this becomes imperative. After this growth has been removed the young canes should be thoroughly sprayed with the Bordeaux mixture. A month later another application should be made.

When the canes have so far ripened that the leaves begin to drop, the growth of young canes may be reduced by cutting away about one-third of the growth made.

Fall pruning has no advantage over spring pruning, perhaps, except that with most growers work is not so pressing at that season as in the spring.

Then, too, where there is loss caused by breaking of canes from high winds and deep snows fall pruning may lessen injury from this source.

QUEEN BEE AND HOW TO FIND HER

It Is Her Sole Duty to Lay Eggs. Her Nourishment Being Supplied by Workers.

(By F. G. HERMAN.)

In every colony of bees, whether it be located in skep, the hollow of a tree, or in a modern hive, there will be found at some time of the year three kinds of bees—queen, drones and workers. The queen is the most important bee in the hive. She is the egg layer, and as such is the mother of the bees in the hive, whether they are workers, drones or queens. Only one queen is, under ordinary circumstances, found in a hive, but occasionally two—mother and daughter—are for a time living together. The queen's sole duty being to lay eggs she has no other cares to claim her attention, in fact she does not even attend to her own food supply. The nourishment needed to keep up the extraordinary egg-laying power she possesses, is supplied by the worker-bees which are for the first fortnight of their existence what may be termed nurse-bees. If a comb be taken out of a movable hive quietly and without disturbing the bees, the queen may be seen surrounded by a cluster of workers.

The queen is a fair and stately bee, differing from the workers both in shape and color, she is longer than a honey bee by one-third, and somewhat longer than a drone, but not quite so big around. The queen is treated with the greatest respect and affection by the bees. A circle of her offspring often surround her, testifying in various ways their dutiful regard, offering her food from time to time, and all politely backing out of her way, to give her a clear path when she moves over the combs. So strong is the feeling of the worker for the queen, that if for any reason she is removed, the whole colony is filled with consternation and dismay. Her death, when it is too late in the season to raise another queen, means the final extinction of the colony. A good queen will sometimes lay from two to three thousand eggs a day, or nearly the weight of her own body and continue doing so for weeks in succession. At the beginning of the season the queen lays eggs in the workers' cells. She walks over the combs, puts her head into each open cell as she comes to it as though to discover whether it is occupied or is in fit condition to receive an egg. I have looked into an observatory hive for hours and watched how faithfully she goes about her work. The queen only stings other queens, and seeks only to kill her rivals. She may be handled to any extent without fear of being stung. She has also great tenacity of life as well as longevity. She will often continue alive in conditions that have proved fatal to the workers confined with her.

Well-bred queens are good for two full years' work, and the great majority for the third year. A queen hatch in the early part of the season, so that the year of her hatching she does much breeding, is aged and very uncertain her third year. Hatched in mid or late summer she will complete that year, all the next, and make a good colony for the next honey season after that, when she ought to be superseded. Do not expect a queen to do more than two hard summers' service. Many will be good for longer, but not enough to make it profitable to risk keeping longer.

There are no sure rules for finding a queen. It is somewhat a matter of patience and practice. And yet attention to some things will help very much. Go at it as quietly as possible, using very little smoke, as smoke and rough handling will alarm the bees and set them to running, and then you might as well give up the job until another time.

If the bees are Italians, queens can usually be found at least on the third or fourth frame taken out of the hive. A practical beekeeper will first pull out the center frame, and look for freshly layed eggs. Failing to find these he will take out another frame from another portion of the brood-nest. If he finds the eggs, then he has reasonable assurance that the queen is somewhere in this part of the hive. He looks the frames over carefully, and, failing to find her, he takes out the next one, each time following in the wake of the eggs. While it no sure rule that the presence of freshly layed eggs in any portion of the brood-nest is evidence that the queen is in that part of the hive, yet, generally speaking, she will be found near them.

For the Asparagus Bed.

The land for an asparagus bed must be well drained, warm, rich soil and thoroughly worked. For a home patch deep spading may do, but care must be taken to get the manure well mixed with the soil if best results are desired. For larger beds the manure should be turned under with a plow.

Deep plowing is advantageous in most cases. The first plowing should be done late in the fall, the second early in the spring. Good, strong one-year-old roots are the best. A long bed, single row for the home garden, is better and more easily managed than a short bed of a number of rows. The plants should have plenty of space.—American Agriculturalist.

Salt for Cows.

When the cows are salted only once a week, they eat too much at a time, and it causes looseness of the bowels. They will eat a little salt nearly every day if it is kept where they can get at it, especially when the grass is fresh and abundant.

GOOD THINGS FOR THE TABLE.

A delicious filling for cakes which will always be asked for again is Lemon Honey. Grate the rinds of three well-scrubbed lemons, press out and strain the juice; put all together in a double boiler, add a quarter of a cup of butter and a half pound of sugar. When very hot mix two spoonfuls with the well-beaten yolks of six eggs. Then add the eggs to the mixture and stir until smooth and thick. This filling will keep in a cool place for some time.

Sea Foam Popcorn.—Discard all unpopped kernels from four quarts of corn and place in the oven to warm. As soon as a cup of granulated sugar and a quarter of a cup of water boils take from the fire and add a few drops of pistachio coloring, then pour over the corn in a fine stream. Stir briskly and sprinkle with powdered sugar to separate the grains, then turn out on waxed paper.

Steamed Fruit Roll.—Roll good rich biscuit dough half an inch thick, spread with butter and a layer of good jam or marmalade. Roll tight and place in a steamer on a plate and steam for half an hour. Serve with any desired sauce.

Burnt Almond Fudge.—Brown blanched almonds in the oven and chop enough to fill a cup. In a granite pan brown a cupful of granulated sugar well melted; add two-thirds of a cup of milk, and when the sugar is all dissolved, add a tablespoonful of butter and another cup of sugar. Boil for five minutes, then test in cold water; if creamy when stirred, the candy is done. Flavor with a few drops of almond extract, and turn out to cool in a buttered dish.

Gelatine Filling for Cake.—Dissolve two tablespoonfuls of granulated gelatine in a tablespoonful or two of cold water. Boil two cups of granulated sugar and eight tablespoonfuls of water until it threads; pour over the gelatine, flavor, then beat till thick and white. Add a little chopped chrystalized fruit.

Oh, what is life without a friend
To dissipate the gloom?
A path where naught but briars grow,
Where flowers never bloom.
'Tis friends who make this desert world
To blossom as the rose;
Strew flowers o'er our rugged path,
Pour sunshine o'er our woes.

SOME GELATINE DESSERTS.

Gelatine is the foundation for countless jellies and desserts, which may be varied indefinitely.

Prune Jelly.—Wash half a pound of prunes, put them into a small basin, add half a cup of water; put on the cover and steam until they are soft. Remove the stones and place the prunes in wet molds. Put one heaping tablespoonful of powdered gelatine into a saucepan, add one cup of boiling water, one cupful of fruit juice, the strained juice of two oranges and one tablespoonful of lemon juice. Stir over the fire until the sugar is dissolved, after which it should be strained over the prunes. Serve with a spoonful of whipped cream on the top of each.

Few realize the value of dainty serving of food. A dessert may be nicely prepared, be delicious to the taste, but in serving it may be put upon the table in such a massy, untidy, careless way that the value of it is half lost. The eye is the first organ of digestion, let us constantly keep this in mind and have our food tempting to the sight.

Fruit Trifles.—Cut some pieces of cake into small pieces or bits and divide it in sherbet glasses, with two tablespoonfuls of pineapple juice to each glass. Break two eggs into a saucepan, add two tablespoonfuls of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of gelatine, two tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar, a teaspoonful of vanilla. Stir over the fire until the egg is thick; strain over the cake. When cool, put a few bits of fresh fruit over the top, and serve.

Grape Fruit Jelly.—Take three cupfuls of grape juice and pulp, two tablespoonfuls of lemon juice, half a cup of sugar, one and a half cups of water, four tablespoonfuls of gelatine. Put the gelatine into the water for a few minutes to soften, then add the other ingredients and heat slowly over a slow fire until well dissolved, then strain into well chilled grape fruit skins. Sprinkle with preserved ginger, and cover with whipped cream when serving.

Remembrances to bless,
So many little faults we find;
We see them, for not blind
Is love; we see them, but if you and I
Perhaps remember them some by and by
They will not be
Faults then—grace faults—to you and me,
But just odd ways, mistakes, or even less,
Remembrances to bless.

THE GIRL AND THE CHAFING DISH.

For pure enjoyment, give us a chafing dish with a few good materials to prepare, and a good time will surely be the answer. From soups to lobster salad, there is nothing the mind of a woman will not dare. The accompaniments of sandwiches and relishes are, of course, essential.

For the young woman who entertains her girl friends at college or away from home, canned things are the best and easiest to prepare. Many delicious dishes may be prepared from canned chicken, lobster, salmon and peas.

Chicken Wiggle.—Melt a tablespoonful of butter, add two tablespoonfuls of flour, and when smooth add a pint of milk very slowly, and boil. Then add a can of chicken, a can of peas, salt, pepper, and just before serving, a beaten egg. Shrimp Wiggle is prepared the same way, using shrimps instead of chicken.

Salmon Hollandaise.—Melt a tablespoonful of butter, add a tablespoonful of flour, and when smooth add a can of salmon and a can of peas. Stir until hot. Serve with lemon or put lemon juice into the dish before serving. Serve on crackers.

A spread without candy is not to be thought of. One nice candy which is made without cooking is the following: Take a half pint cup, drop into it a white of egg, then pour in cold water to half fill the cup. Stir until it is foamy, then mix as much powdered sugar into it as it will hold, until it can be handled. Then add flavor, color. Add fruit to make a variety of kinds.

Delicious Salad.—To go with any spread this will honor the occasion: A can of shredded pineapple drained from its juice, two cups pecans and half a pound of marshmallows. Mayonnaise with whipped cream to soften it. This should really be called Ambrosia, a dish for the gods.

TRY THIS ONE.

If you haven't looked for this recipe you will be glad to have it after you have tried it. Mix together a cup of butter, a fourth of a pound of powdered sugar and a pound of flour. Roll out a quarter of an inch thick, prick with a fork and bake a golden brown. This is Scotch short bread. Rice flour is best for this if it can be obtained.

Peanuts and Rice.—Two cupfuls of rice (cooked), cupful of peanut butter, a cupful of cracker crumbs, one-half cupful of milk and two eggs. When the rice is well cooked and salted, stir in the peanut butter, stirring until well blended, then add the milk, the eggs well beaten, and lastly all the cracker crumbs, leaving some for the top. Shape into a rounding loaf, place in a buttered pan and bake until a golden brown all over. Serve garnished with parsley.

Nut Mince Pie.—Chop two cupfuls of apples, add a cup of nutmeats, cut fine, a half cup of vinegar, cider, or any fruit juice, one-half cup of sugar, one cupful of raisins, cloves, cinnamon and allspice, with salt to taste. This will make two pies.

Bran Bread.—Sift two cupfuls of flour into a basin, add two cupfuls of bran, two cupfuls of sour milk, a cup of brown sugar, a cup of chopped raisins, a teaspoonful of soda dissolved in the milk, and half a teaspoonful of salt. Turn into a buttered pan and bake one hour in a moderately hot oven.

Onion and Pepper Salad.—Chop six green peppers and one large Bermuda onion very fine; add salt, pepper and a bit of mustard, a cup of olive oil and the juice of a lemon, well mixed. Add an inch of preserved ginger cut very fine. Serve on a bed of lettuce, very cold.

WEDDING OF MISS JESSIE WILSON AND FRANCIS B. SAYRE

Mr. and Mrs. Sayre and East Room in Which They Were Wedded.

Washington, Nov. 25.—Jessie Woodrow Wilson, second of President Wilson's three daughters, was married to Francis Bowes Sayre at 4:30 o'clock this afternoon. The ceremony took place in the east room of the White House, and was performed by Rev. Sylvester Beach of Princeton, N. J., the president's former pastor and the close friend of the Wilson family for many years.

The entire affair was very simple, as had been requested by the bride, and the number of guests was rather —disappointingly so to many persons in official and social circles of Washington who had expected to receive invitations but were disappointed.

Miss Margaret Woodrow Wilson, sister of the three daughters, acted as maid of honor to her sister, and Miss Eleanor Randolph Wilson, the youngest, was one of the bridesmaids. The three other bridesmaids were Miss Adeline Mitchell Scott of Princeton, daughter of Prof. William B. Scott; Miss Marjorie Brown of Atlanta, Ga., daughter of Mrs. Wilson's cousin, Col. E. T. Brown, and Miss Mary G. White of Baltimore, a college friend of the bride.

Dr. Grenfell Is Best Man.

Mr. Sayre was attended by his best man, Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell, the famous medical missionary to the fishermen of the Labrador coast. The two men have long been fast friends and Mr. Sayre spent two summers helping Dr. Grenfell with his work.

The ushers were Charles E. Hughes, Jr., son of Justice Hughes of the Supreme court and a classmate of Mr. Sayre in the Harvard law school; Dr. Gilbert Horax of Montclair, N. J., who was a classmate at Williams college in 1909 and now at Johns Hopkins university; Benjamin Burton of New York city, and Dr. Scoville Clark of Salem, Mass., who was Mr. Sayre's companion in Labrador and Newfoundland.

Wedding Gown of Ivory Satin.

The bride's gown was of satin, of a soft ivory tint, trimmed with beautiful lace, both old and rare. It was made in New York and the women connoisseurs declared that it was a masterpiece. The lingerie in the trousseau is of the most dainty material and is all hand made. The maid of honor and bridesmaids were beautifully gowned and all looked their best.

Coming right in the midst of the chrysanthemum season, this was made a chrysanthemum wedding and that flower was used most profusely in adorning the White House. As the bride's favorite color is mauve, that was made the prevailing color in the decorations. The east room, and indeed all the rooms in the president's mansion, were beautiful indeed.

Depart on Their Honeymoon.

After the ceremony was completed and the couple had received the congratulations of the guests, refreshments were served, and then Mr. and Mrs. Sayre departed for their honeymoon. Their plans include a visit to the home of Miss Nevin, Mr. Sayre's aunt, at Windsor Forges, near Churchtown, Pa., where they first met. After January 1 they will live in Williamstown, Mass., for Mr. Sayre is to sever his connection with the office of District Attorney Whitman in New York and become assistant to Harry A. Garfield, president of Williams college.

There was one disappointment for those who attended the wedding, for the gifts were not put on display. It is known that these included many beautiful and valuable articles sent by relatives and personal friends of the bride and groom and of their families and by admirers of President Wilson. Handsome presents were sent by both the senate and the house, that of the latter being a diamond lavalliere which Miss Genevieve Clark, daughter of the speaker, bought for the representatives in New York.

Guests Limited to 400.

Those who were invited to witness the wedding were mostly personal friends and the number was kept down close to four hundred. The list was pared and revised several times, and as has been said, the operation resulted in many heartburnings. From the house of representatives' circle for instance, the only guests were Speaker Champ Clark, Mrs. Clark and Miss Genevieve Clark, Marjory Leader Underwood and Mrs. Underwood, and Minority Leader Mann and Mrs. Mann.

As might be expected, the streets outside the White House were as crowded as the police would permit with curious persons eager to watch the arrival and departure of the guests and trying to obtain through the windows a glimpse of the doings within. The police arrangements were admirable and nothing happened, in the White House or outside, to mar the happy occasion.

This is the diamond lavalliere which was the wedding present of the house of representatives to Jessie Woodrow Wilson.

Immense Wedding Cake.

Jessie Wilson's wedding cake was a triumph of the pastry cook's art. It was two and a half feet tall, counting the white orchids that were placed on top of it, and weighed 135 pounds. The first layer was four inches thick and 22 inches across. The cake contained 19 ingredients and its cost was about $500. Over the body of the cake was molded a thick white icing scroll work, on its top was a design for the initials of the bride and groom, done in silver, and around the sides were lilies of the valley in white sugar. This delicious confection was distributed in 2,000 dainty white boxes tied with satin ribbon and each of the proper size to go under the pillow of the recipient to bring dreams.

Mrs. Sayre was born in Gainsville, Pa., twenty-five years ago. She attended the Women's college at Baltimore and was an honor member of the class of 1908, being also elected a member of Phi Beta Kappa. For two years after her graduation she engaged in settlement work in Kensington, Pa., and she is a member of the executive board of the National Young Woman's Christian association. She has delivered several excellent addresses in public.

In appearance she does not resemble her father as much as do her sisters, having rather the features of her mother's family, the Axsons.

Something About the Groom.

Francis Bowes Sayre is twenty-eight years old, and was born at South Bethlehem, Pa., a son of the late Robert Heysham Sayre, who built the Lehigh Valley railroad and at one time was assistant to the president of the Bethlehem iron works, since known as the Bethlehem steel works. He was also once president of the board of trustees of the Lehigh university.

Francis Bowes Sayre graduated from Lawrenceville school, Lawrenceville, N. J., in 1904, and from Williams college in 1909. He entered Harvard law school and graduated "cum laude." He was a member of the Sigma Phi fraternity, Gargoyle society and the Phi Beta Kappa at Williams. For the past year he has been working in the office of District Attorney Whitman of New York. During the summer he was admitted to the bar of New York state.

Mr. Sayre's mother is Mrs. Martha Finlay Sayre, daughter of the late William Nevin, who was president of Franklin and Marshal college at Lancaster, Pa. She is a descendant of Hugh Williamson of North Carolina, one of the framers of the Constitution of the United States, and is a sister of the late Robert Nevin, head of the American church at Rome, and a cousin of Ethelbert Nevin, the composer.

Other White House Weddings.

The wedding of Jessie Wilson and Francis Sayre was the thirteenth to be solemnized in the White House. The first was that of Anna Todd, a niece of Dolly Madison's first husband, and John G. Jackson. Then Mrs. Madison's sister, Lucy, was married to Judge Todd of Kentucky. The third wedding, that of Maria Monroe, daughter of President Monroe, to Samuel Lawrence Gouverneur in 1820 marked the first social use of the east room. Eight years later John, the second son of President John Quincy Adams, married his cousin, Mary Hellen, in the blue room. While General Jackson was president there were three weddings in the White House, those of Delia Lewis to Alphonse Joseph Yver Pageot of the French legation; Mary Eaton to Lucien B. Polk, and Emily Martin to Louis Randolph. Many years passed before there was another marriage ceremony in the president's mansion, the next being of Nellie, the only daughter of General Grant, and Algernon C. F. Sartoris. In 1876 Emily Platt, a niece of Mrs. Hayes, was married in the blue room to Gen. Russell Hastings. The eleventh of this series of weddings was that of President Cleveland to Frances Folsom, and the twelfth that of President Roosevelt's daughter Alice, to Nicholas Longworth.

The Modern-Apollo was what he called "stunning, don't cher know," and he wore patent leather shoes, and a magnificent beard. The fellows said he was "too deucedly good-looking!" and the girls called him "too sweet for anything!" The Modern-Apollo thought them all the most delightfully observing people!

It was late in the season, when the lovely-woman appeared upon the scene. The Modern-Apollo was becoming weary of his many flirtations. Even looking handsome, and saying "Aw," was losing it's charm. He was in fact, quite insufferably bored, and growing too languid, even, for love-making! The Lovely-woman dawned upon him by gas-light, at the ball.

That was the beginning. She was quite "uncommonly thoroughbred, don't cher know?" and she hung upon his arms, and his words, and used her eyes and her dazzling smile—for the rest of the season!

It was all quite natural to the Modern-Apollo. All the girls did that. He was so terribly fascinating, dear boy!

He had done this some thing 20 times a season. He had done it carelessly, or eagerly, or gayly, or soberly, or passionately, or masterfully—any way to suit the subject—but he had never before done it in earnest!

The Modern-Apollo thought it over one night in his room. He had declined a most select punch party for that purpose! The fellows winked and said he was "hard hit!"

The Modern-Apollo heard, and his resolve strengthened. He pitied the other men, sincerely, but they could not all expect to have a glossy beard and a melting glance!

When his mind was made up, he became more devoted than ever, and the Lovely-woman seemed to enjoy it! At least she was the gayest of the gay, and always ready for a moonlight row, or a daylight walk or ride, or, best of all, a twilight tete-a-tete. The shadows which a semi-gloom gave to her eyes were simply intoxicating! It took all the Modern-Apollo's long practice and experience not to voice his love, on occasions like this! But he succeeded manfully.

The season waned, and the Lovely-woman seemed lovelier than ever!

There was a ball at the hotel! There was a crush, or, as the fellows said a "jam." "Everybody"—comprehensive term—was there, and "everybody" was elegantly arayed—the Modern-Apollo was in a state of exhilaration.

It was no hard matter to find a secluded nook, on a balcony. The Lovely-woman had a fondness for nooks—especially balconies! The music was quite melting—and so was she! The orchestra played "Come to Me, Love, In the Gloaming," and the Modern-Apollo murmured that it was appropriate, and several things.

The Lovely-woman listened coldly, even drew away from him, with a dignified gesture. He grew frightened! He went down upon his knees!

There was a step nearby, and the Lovely-woman sprang up eagerly.

"Oh, such a mistake!" she cried. "How it could have happened! So sorry!"

Approaching, was a bald-headed man with a military mustache and a distinguished air. She took a step to ward this individual.

"What an opportune arrival! Allow me—my husband, the colonel—just came down today."

The Lovely-woman tucked her hand confidingly into the arm of the new comer. That personage bowed with a condescension that was maddening.

The Modern-Apollo made them a sweeping salute.

"Most happy—pon my word!" said he.

He walked away with dignity, but all too slowly! He heard the distinguished person murmur a question, and the voice of the Lovely-woman floated back harmoniously, as she moved off.

"So glad you rescued me! Thought I was a widow! ! ! I do believe the idiot was trying to propose!"

The Modern-Apollo sought the ballroom, and offered himself to, and was accepted by five of the "pretty dears," in the next hour!

Barber Soothed Prince's Nerves.

The Turkish Heir-Apparent, whose democratic utterances have caused the suppression of the newspaper in which they appeared, was last year compelled, owing to neurasthenia, to pass some weeks in a Vienna sanatorium. The hairdresser attached to this establishment confided to a Viennese journalist that he was heartily relieved when Prince Yussuf Izzedin took his departure.

The prince requisitioned his services nearly every day, and after the royal beard and locks had been trimmed the unhappy barber had to run the scissors round his client's head for an hour or so, opening and shutting them continuously, as the patient found the touch of the steel cooled his scalp and the click of the blades soothed his nerves.

A Little Thing Like That.

If you are sufficiently talented look in your glass, comb your hair and hold a candle in one hand, all at once. You must be alone, too. If lucky, you'll see your true love's face over your shoulder.

COMMERCIAL

Weekly Review of Trade and Market Reports.

Dun's Review says:

"Trade conditions are reflected in the unseasonably light demand for money, especially in the East; in the South and West there is a little more inquiry. The recession in iron and steel is more pronounced than in previous weeks. Curtailment of operations in that industry has increased and working forces are considerably reduced, with buyers showing a disposition to hold off for still lower prices.

"Current demands from the railroads are disappointing and the falling off in consumption has also extended to less important lines, while there has been no check to the declining tendency in quotations. In copper the situation continues one of extreme dullness and substantial concessions are offered from the values previously prevailing.

"Failures numbered 373 in the United States, against 313 last year, and 37 in Canada, compared with 32 a year ago."

DISFIGURED WITH PIMPLES

R. F. D. No. 2, Box 46, Matthews, Ga.—"For three years or more I was troubled with pimples and blackheads. At first my face would itch and burn and then the pimples would break out. They looked almost as if I had measles, causing great disfigurement. They would make my face very red and sore. Then they festered and came to a head and large boils would come on my chin and nose.

"I also had dandruff which caused my scalp to itch and burn. It itched and burned so that I had to scratch it until it was irritated. The dandruff scaled off and showed plainly in my hair. It also caused my hair to break off and become very thin. I used several remedies which did not cure and gave but little relief. After I received a free sample of Cuticura Soap and Ointment I began using them according to directions. I secured two cakes of Cuticura Soap and two boxes of Cuticura Ointment, which cured me perfectly.' (Signed) Miss Willie M. Walker, July 31, 1912.

Grape-Nuts a Perfectly Balanced Food.

No chemist's analysis of Grape-Nuts can begin to show the real value of the food—the practical value as shown by personal experience.

It is a food that is perfectly balanced, supplies the needed elements for both brain and body in all stages of life from the infant, through the strenuous times of active middle life, and is a comfort and support in old age.

"For two years I have used Grape-Nuts with milk and a little cream, for breakfast. I am comfortably hungry for my dinner at noon.

"I use little meat, plenty of vegetables and fruit, in season, for the noon meal, and if tired at tea time, take Grape-Nuts alone and feel perfectly nourished.

"Nerve and brain power and memory are much improved since using Grape-Nuts. I am over sixty and weigh 165 lbs. My son and husband seeing how I had improved are now using Grape-Nuts.

"My son, who is a traveling man, eats nothing for breakfast but Grape-Nuts and a glass of milk. An aunt, over 70, seems fully nourished on Grape-Nuts and cream.' "There's a Reason."

THE REPUBLICAN,
Oakland, Md.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 27. 1913.

THE REPUBLICAN wishes all its readers a very enjoyable Thanksgiving day.

BE A BOOSTER, not a knocker, Subscrioe for your home paper, the Republican.

WE would suggest to the readers of this paper that, in making up their list of Christmas presents they include the REPUBLICAN. Its weekly visits would be appreciated. It publishes the local events of Garrett county. It is a paper for the home circle. It interests the old folks as well as the young folks and children. It is the only seven column paper published in the county. The paper speaks for itself. Your sons and daughters away from home would be pleased to receive THE REPUBLICAN. It would keep them posted about affairs in the old home neighborhood. It would take the place of the letter you failed to write. Every week it would be in their family circle. Can you think of a present that would give more pleasure than the 52 visits of the REPUBLICAN? Only $1.25 a year.

THE educational rally held at Friendsville last Friday was a great success in every respect and will prove of great value to the public school interests of Garrett county. Such rallies are needed at many other points in the county. Public school meetings in every school house neighborhood would prove of incalculable value to that community as well as to the entire county. Slowly the cause of education is gaining ground all over the county, but a more rapid advancement should be made. The school buildings and grounds in many places would be improved if a local interest could be awakened. All that is needed is a leader, some one to take hold of the matter and suggest the needed improvements. The teachers might do much excellent work in this direction if they would.

THE mail order houses of Chicago and other cities are flooding the country with their catalogues and circulars, seeking the trade of the public. What is the result? Ask the railroad agents at Oakland, Mountain Lake Park and other places in this county. They advertise and they get results. It is an indisputable fact that to advertise is to succeed. It is possible to do a limited business without advertising. But to built up a trade one must reach the people. This is a day when the farmer and the general public read, when the mail carrier touches the farm house, when the parcel post delivers the purchase at their door. Christmas is drawing nigh. If you want the trade you must avertise for it. You must go after it. The day when you could sit quietly in your store and wait for customers and get them has passed away, never to return. The merchant must keep in touch with the people, by circulars, by advertising in the local papers and by personal effort if he would succeed. One of the best mediums to reach the purchasing public is through the columns of the REPUBLICAN. Try it and be convinced of the fact. For the Christmas trade you ought to begin advertising at once. Piedmont, Keyser and Cumberland merchants are advertising in papers that circulate in this county. They are after the trade, The Garrett county merchant must awaken to the situation and get busy.

TODAY, throughout this great country of ours, will assemble a prosperous people in their respective places of worship, at the suggestion of the President of the United States and of the governors of the several states, to offer praise and thanksgiving to Almighty God for His goodness and mercies to us as a nation, as a state, a community and as individuals. In Oakland the congregations of the several churches unite in a special service in the Lutheran church, Rev. Archibald Moore, Methodist, will preach the sermon. The music will be furnished by the choirs of the several churches of the city. This is as it should be.

This will not only be a day of prayer and thanksgiving, but it will be, as well, a day of family re-unions and good-fellowship. The sons and daughters will return to the parental home to eat the Thanksgiving dinner—roast turkey, vegetables, mince and pumpkin pies and doughnuts. What happy hours will be enjoyed as they talk of the days gone bye and the promise of the future.

Business is laid aside for the day and the home life is enjoyed. Care and anxiety is forgotten. It is the day of the American, whether in his native land or in a foreign clime. Thanksgiving day is an American institution. As Americans let us enjoy it to its fullest extent. There are none of us but who have reasons for thanksgiving and praise. Things may not have gone as we wished them to go. We may not have accomplished what we expected to accomplished. We may have met with losses and disappointments during the year. Yet, notwithstanding all this, we have many things to be thankful for.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

Pastor MacPherson Explains Secret Of Longevity.

To the Editor of the Republican:

There was nothing slow about Pastor MacPherson's lecture here on Thursday evening, Nov. 13th. He held his audience entranced while he carefully opened up the Scriptures on the subject: "Victory O'er the Grave." He appealed only to the Bible for support and his points were well made and clearly and conclusively proven. We give a brief report of his sermon for the benefit of your readers.

We have reached the position which we have won by means of the many victories we have won along the pathway of our experiences. All mankind has advanced by overcoming difficulties, and each victory prepares the way for the succeeding one. Among our many achievements, however, there is one great sad thing lacking—we have failed to gain any victory o'er the grave.

Man's greatest enemy is death. Instead of man conquering Death, Death has been conquering Man. Man once had perfect life, and no such thing as death existed. When man disobeyed, he became amenable to the death penalty, and since then Death has gradually been gaining the ascendancy. Before the Flood the average man lived about 700 years before he became the complete victim of Death; immediately after the Flood the average fell down to 120 years whereas now the average length of life is little above 30 years. If something is not done soon, what may we expect for our race in the a few centuries? Thank God, the Bible points out a relief, and assures us that it will come before it is too late.

Like so many tributaries flowing into one great river to swell its volume and ultimately to be merged into the great gulf below, so, century after century, have the lives of men flowed into the one great river of Death which terminates in the gulf or Tomb. There was no hope of deliverance untill Jesus came and voluntarily "poured out His soul unto death," He also went down this great river of death into the gulf or Tomb. He was the first one to gain victory o'er the grave.

Since Jesus paid Adam's penalty, Adam and his race are legally free, and in God's appointed time they will all be set free, and given an individual trial in the Judgment Day to prove whether they are worthy of eternal life or death. It was Jesus who opened the way from death unto life, and eventually "All that are in their graves shall hear His voice and come forth."- Jno. 5:28.

We are not to suppose that all will be resurrected at once. The Resurrection Day shown in the Scriptures is a thousand yearday. The resurrection from grave will be a gradual process according to the Apostle Paul. "The dead in Christ shall arise first, then we which are alive and remain." "All shall be made alive, but every man in his own order." We see that there will be order in the resurrection. "Many that are first shall be last, and the last shall be first."

"Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection on such the second death hath no power (they will be made death-proof), but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with Him a thousand years." —Rev. 20:6. This is easily seen to refer to the church, elsewhere called "the Church of the first-born, whose names are written in heaven." The Church will be highly exalted and will sit with Christ in His throne to assist in judging the world, and even the angles.

Then will come the second resurrection including first a great company of good Christian people called in the Bible "the great multitude." Those were not so faithful to the Master as the members of the Little Flock. These will not sit, in Christ's throne, but will be permitted to "serve day and night" before the throne. They will not wear crowns of glory, but will be permitted to carry palms of victory.

The second resurrection pictured in the Scriptures applies also to the world of mankind. Theirs will not to a heavenly glory as in the case of the Church, but to an earthly glory. St. Paul calls attention to this terrestrial glory in I Cor. 15:40- "The glory of the celestial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another."

Chief among those in Paradise, or earth restored to perfection as it was in the Garden of Eden, will be those who were faithful to God before the Gospel Age. These Ancient Worthies will assist in raising the rest of the world up to perfection. Death will gradully vanish. "Christ shall reign till He hath put all enemies under His feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is Death." All the wicked will finally be destroyed, and the universe will thus be purified. This is victory indeed, this is climacteric, this is glorious!

"Lives again our glorious King;
Where, O Death, is now thy sting?
Once He died our souls to save,
Where's thy victory, boasting Grave?"

"Ham" Writes An Epistle On The Second Coming Of Christ.

To the Editor of the Republican:

Permit a few words on the teachings of the Bible concerning the second coming of Christ.

The strangest thing about this great and very important Biblical doctrine—a doctrine considered so essential by Christ and his Apostles that one verse of every thirty-five of the New Testament refers to it. Yet we are told with all the assurance of ignorance and the positiveness of the new ism, that is doing its best to make proselytes wherever it goes, that Christ has already come, although He is not as yet manifested to men, except as some, presumably the followers of this ism, see Him by faith.

The author of this new cult says, the second advent occurred in 1874 and since that time the millennium has been on the earth, and side by side with all the wickedness and apostacy. This dispensation will wind up in 1914, in October. An error as plain and crude as any he advocates. He did not come in 1874, because the second coming of the Lord is not in the calendar of dates. He said, "The Son of Man cometh in an hour when ye think not." Mark 13: 32.

By fixing the time at 1874, he assumes a knowledge which the Son of God contradicts. He did not come in 1874, because when the Lord descends into the air He will take the church to meet Him. But the church has been on the earth since 1874. It is here today. The same evidences that the church was on the earth prior to 1847 exist today, therefore the church is on earth today. This fact makes it evident that the Lord did not come in 1874.

He did not come in 1874, because when He comes He will take the Holy Spirit, the restraining power of wickedness, out of the earth as well as the church. II Thes. 2: 7. There is a power which convicts men of the sin of unbelief and leads them to Christ. That power is the presence of the Holy Spirit in the church. The Holy Spirit has not been taken away yet and this is positive proof that Christ has not yet come the second time. The presence of the Holy Spirit here is the official witness of the absence of the Lord. John 16: 7. Jesus said, "If I depart I will send Him (the Comforter) unto you." Jesus went, the Comforter came, and His presence is the witness of the absence of the Lord.

Zech. 14: 5 says, "His feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives." Jesus, in Matt. 24: 30, says, "All the tribes of the earth shall mourn and they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven."

Matt. 26: 64, Ye shall see the Son of Man * * * and coming in the cloud of heaven. His coming is a literal, personal, glorious and visible coming, yet this man teaches that He came in 1874, is now here as a spirit being and that the millennium will be inaugurated in October, 1914. All of which is positively opposed to the plain teaching of the Bible, as any honest scholar who is competent to interpret it will testify.

The second coming of Our Lord is referred to 318 times in the New Testament, and every where it is set forth it refers to the literal and personal coming and never does it mean death, the destruction of Jerusalem, any great calamity, as cholera, the progress of the church, or any other event or providence. It refers to the advent of Jesus Christ a second time to this earth. John 14: 3, John 21: 22-23, Acts 1: 11, Acts 20: 21, 1 Cor. 15: 23, Col. 3: 4, II Thes. 1: 10, Heb. 9: 28, Jude 14.

It will be a glorious coming. Matt. 24: 30, Luke 9: 26. He will come suddenly, Luke 12: 32-40, II Peter 3: 10, Rev. 16: 15. Our attitude toward this great event is set forth in I Cor. 1: 7-8, Phil. 3: 20-21, I Tim. 2: 19. His people will be watching for Him as a bride for the bridegroom, and with those who are in the grave, they will be caught up, probably secretly, to meet the Lord in the air. John 14: 3, 19, I Cor. 15: 23, 51-52, Phil. 3: 20-21, I Thes. 4: 15-18. Then will the Hinderer" the Holy Ghost, be taken away with the church, the bride of Christ and following this will be the "great tribulation" at the close of which Christ will come in visible and glorious manner with His people and establish His millenial Kingdom. This is yet future. Col 3: 4, I Thess. 3: 13, 4: 14, Rev. 19: 14. It will be visible, that is when He comes with His people for Rev. 1: 7. Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see Him, and they also that pierced him, and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him, even so, Amen.

If space would permit, I should like to discuss this interesting subject further, but enough has been said to show conclusively the error and evident inscripturalness of the views that have been presented in our community of late, and by the false teaching of the cult known as Russellism.

By the way that statement of Russell's, in which he regrets his error, is "a peach." First, he says, he brought no railing accusation against Rev. Ross, but if your readers will refer to Russell's reply in your issue of October 2nd, they will see that he refers to Mr. Ross as 'Ham's' fellow slanderer. Of course any one who exposes his pernicious errors is a slanderer in his estimation. He says also "The man (Ross) is thoroughly unreliable," loving and making lies. Apparently he is incapable of telling the truth. Financially irresponsible, a suit against him for damages could neither punish him nor stop him from lying. Yet this is is no railing accusation in his opinion. His apology reminds me of that of a small boy, who got angry at his aunt and told her she was awful mean. His mother required him to make an apology to his aunt. His apology was: Auntie, I am sorry you are so mean.

Yours truly, HAM.

Mr. E. J. Fringer in Florida.

To the Editor of The Republican:

In reading your paper of last week describing the severe snow storm and blizzard you passed through, my sympathy went out to my Garrett county friends. How glad I am that I made my trip south so early. We had a few cool days, but not below 40 degrees above zero, since then warm and dry. This evening I am sitting in my room with my coat off. Think of the long, cold and dreary winter before you. Why don't you come down to our "Magic city" and enjoy the nice warm days and delightful salt breeze from this beautiful and calm bay. If you come once you would come again. The nice, clever people and the beautiful location of our city would so delight you that you could not resist coming back, if you did not remain here. This is home to me.

Garden truck of all kinds is doing well, strawberries in bloom, oranges ripe and hanging on the trees ready for picking. Fishing and oystering to your heart's content, and everybody happy and contented. I spent last evening with the Bush family. They are all well and enjoy being here. I am assisting J. M. Hughey in his real estate business, so I am in a position to see and help any one coming down here for the winter. I would appreciate seeing many of my friends come and enjoy one of the delightful Florida winters.

Business is looking up, people are coming every day. You can hear the saw and hammer in all directions. We have four teachers in our new school building, each with a large number of scholars. Mrs. J. E. Bush is one of the teachers. It is wonderful how this city has grown since I first come to it, just one month over two years.

With best wishes to you and all my friends, E. J. FRINGER.

Lynn Haven, Fla., Nov. 19, 1913.

NORTH GLADE

The concert given in the M. E. church at this place Saturday night by Rev. McCamic was quite a success. The readings which were carefully selected consisted of the well known and famous pieces such as: Old Picket Snell, How Rubbie played, Trading Joe and Jim Bludso. They were beautifully rendered in their humorous manner making it very interesting for the many listeners. Many were there from far and near to hear Rev. McCamic recite and were benefited with the evening spent. We hope we will be able to have Rev McCamic again give us a concert.

Mr. and Mrs. Elisha Harvey, of Ryans Glade, spent a few days here visiting Judge and Mrs. C. S. Harvey. While here they and Judge and Mrs. Harvey spent Sunday with their old friend, J. L. Fitzwater who is suffering much with his affliction. We hope Mr. Fitzwater will soon gain strength and have less suffering.

Harrison Wiley, of Oakland, our county's assistant treasurer, passed through this section enroute for his Bittinger home Saturday and stopped with us a while.

The weather in the past week has given the farmers a chance to prepare their work for winter. They have moved with much speed to get their corn husked. Among those that had corn husking were C. T. Beckman and W. E. Fitzwater.

Misses Stella Reckner and Clara Stark, of Bittinger, spent Saturday and Sunday at Miss Stella's home at this place. They returned to Bittinger Sunday evening.

Misses Lena and Elizabeth Beckman, of Glendale, visited their grandparents Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Fitzwater recently.

Our school is progressing very nicely under the directionship of G. W. Moon.

Preaching services in the M. E. church Sunday 30th, at 10:45 a. m. All are cordially invited to attend.

BITTINGER.

Last week was a period of splendid weather, and persons having out-door work used it to advantage.

C. E. Ellithorp is building a new sheep stable on his farm at this place.

The pupils of the public school, of this place, held a public literary in the school house last Thursday, rendering a very pleasing program. We learn that the school will hold these meetings every two weeks during the winter, which is very commendable.

Lester and Irvin Bittinger, of Deer Park, are spending this week with relatives and friends here.

Since the removal of the family of George Yommer, the telephone exchange is now in charge of Misses Sarah and Cora Bittinger.

Misses Estella Reckner and Clara Stark, spent last Sunday with friends at North Glade.

A series of meetings was held in the Glades Mennonite church near here last week.

Messrs. C. E. Ellithorp and George W. Sterling, attended the educational rally at Friendsville on Friday of last week.

The Lutheran Sunday school will hold their meeting next Sunday at 2:30 o'clock p. m. instead of in the forenoon, as formerly. A full attendance is desired, of both young and old.

Addresses Need Watching

One of the greatest annoyances with which the postmaster has to put up with under the new Parcels Post law, is the slovenly manner in which parcels are addressed. Almost every train brings back some parcels that have not been marked as they should have been. One of the most frequent causes of trouble is the making of the return address so prominent that it is taken for the real address and thus a package sent out comes trailing back at once, causing the sender and the postal officials a lot of unnecessary trouble. Print your address plainly and in good size letters on the parcels and then up in a corner preceded by the word "From" or "Return to" put your own address in much smaller letters. This will make it easier for all hands and things will go along much more smoothly.

Temperance Notes.

Proprietors of more than 3,300 saloons in Ohio closed their places of business Monday, at midninght, in accordance with the provisions of the State license law, which limits the number of saloons in "wet" territory to one for each 500 population. The saloon-keepers who quit business had been refused license by county license boards.

Every saloon in Des Moines, Iowa, was closed Saturday afternoon in accordance with a decision handed down by the Iowa Supreme court.

One By One Like Leaves They Fall

A Temperance Talk to Voters

BY JAYSON KEP

Since the dear public are beginning to sit up and take notice and doing a little thinking for themselves a great many fool statements, which have masqueraded as thoughts, have had their baloons punctured; which is a good thing for the people who heretfore have been content to have their thinking done by proxy.

While we are at the business let us turn on the light and expose one of the most absurd, misleading and untruthful statements that has passed muster for facts, lo these many years, and the unthinking public has swallowed it whole and never batted an eye.

Some hotel men and all liquor men claim they must have a license to sell booze or they cannot run a hotel; that they loose money on their table and beds and must run a bar to make up the difference and get their profits; otherwise the dear traveling public would suffer inconvenience and untold misery.

Why if all the hotels were closed what would the traveling public do?

That statement has been a standing joke among the 800,000 traveling men for the twenty-seven years that I have toted a grip and the Lord only knows how much longer.

They charge us from $2.00 to $4.00 a day. We tip the porter, the bell boys, &c., oh no, we not have to—well, we know what we have to do to get any kind of service), and we buy cigars, but you can bank on it, that the boys as a class do mighty little "booze hoisting."

A traveling man cannot stay with a good house and drink. Booze and selling goods can't never become bosom friends, they will not mix.

Twenty years ago many traveling men thought they could, but the hotel men and the dear public need not worry about that bunch any more, for those whom the Grim Reaper haven't claimed have been removed from the scene of action by their employers and replaced by men who do not drink.

Now as a class, we do not need nor do not ask charity. We pay as we go and we get our leg pulled on the charity and church question in almost every town we make. We are easy marks, tickets for this and tickets for that, get your name on the quilt. It counts up in the course of the year. In fact some of the church people's contributions would look like a gnat's heel in comparison. You know they think the firm pays our bills and it is easy money. "Pull their leg."

Why should the good hearted hotel men sell us meals and lodging for less than cost? And why, supposing they did, should they collect money from a part of the community—yes take money which should go to buying comforts and necessities of life for wife and children in order to only charge us from $2.00 to $4.00 a day for board, which you know is entirely too low and much below cost.

We admit, I say we admit, we are a bully lot of fellows and very lovable, but we have never yet been able to figure out just why the hotel men have taken such a fancy to us, and by the way they never forget to collect the aforesaid $2.00 to $4.00 a day, from us.

Isn't their statement absurd? And you swallowed it. Why don't they say, "We want to run a booze joint because there is immense profits in it?" Why not be honest? If their statement were true, then they would be a bum lot of business men and you cannot accuse them of that failing. If they could not run a hotel and board us at from $2.00 to $4.00 a day, there is something radically wrong with their method of doing business and they better call in an expert to change their system.

In a large percentage of hotels which have a bar, "the tail wags the dog," the hotel is used as a feeder for the bar, the man who patronizes the bar is Big Mike in the other division. You squrm, I am telling the public something which all the traveling men know.

Another thing I want to tell you—the bars and the gang that loafs around them at the hotel have put many a young traveling man on the bum, made them lose their job. Oh yes, we have seen it start and watched it grow on them and then we missed them. It would be a blessing for the traveling man and a joy for their employers if booze was shut out of every hotel.

In the great fight in West Virginia last year 92 per cent. of the traveling men of West Virginia got out and worked hard for the amendment. They wrote articles, made speeches, worked with individuals, worked at the polls and put up their hard earned dollars for the cause, and are credited with being quite a factor in bringing forth the overwhelming majority of 92,342 for dry.

Hotel men all admit that it is the traveling man who keeps up the hotels. Now, I want to put you wise, the traveling men do not enjoy having most of the chairs in the lobby monopolized by a lot of oh-be-joyful individuals who want to keep within easy reach of the bar.

If it were left to a vote of the traveling men bar or no bar in the hotel, it would go dry by a West Virginia majority. Mr. Church Member and Mr. Good-moral Man, Outsider, another of your pet reasons for voting wet has been plucked from your boquet. "One by one like leaves they fall," and you soon will have no poor sufferers to feel sorry for and vote wet to help along. If you vote for booze, you do so because you want booze handy. Don't be a hypocrit any longer. Stand up to the rack like a man and say, "I vote for booze because I want it and I don't care a 'Tinker's dam' about how it affects my children."

The poor traveling public does not need your sympathy; they have money to pay their bills. Why don't you extend a little of your sympathy and attention to the poor families, wives and children of the drinkers, the slaves of the appetite and try to do something toward removing the cause of their trouble. You can't fool God and you can't even fool your neighbors. The day of the artful dodger is passed, the time is at hand when every citizen, in public or private life, will have to come out and show where he stands.

Sheriff-elect Bert C. Scott will assume the active duties of his office immediately after the adjournment of the December Term of the Circuit Court, which will convene on Monday of next week. The probabilities are the term will be very short, as no cases of moment are marked for trial on the civil docket. What the grand jury may find in its investigation is a matter of speculation which may or may not lengthen the term.

For a Christmas gift to your friends at a distance no more enjoyable present could be selected than a subscription for one year to the Oakland REPUBLICAN. Its fifty-two weekly visits would be a constant reminder of your thoughtful Christmas selection for their happiness Think of the joy you can give them for only $1.25. A joy that lasts all through the year. The Republican is a weekly news-letter from Garrett county. Can you think of a present that your absent friends would appreciate more.

FORTY YEARS AGO

Nov. 20, forty years ago, the Cumberland News published the following item: A lodge of the Knights of Pythiss, with 20 charter members, was instituted at Oakland Hon. George W. Lindsay, Grand Chancellor of the State; James Whitehouse, Graud Scribe, and Past Chancellor Edwards, all of Baltimore, officiated, assisted by a number of visiting Knights of Pythias from Piedmont.

The following officers were installed: C. T. Abel, P. C. and representative to Grand lodge; Dr. J. Lee McComas, C. C.; A. G. Sturgiss, V. C.; D. M. Mason, M. A.; W. H. Tower, M. of F.; G. S. Hamill, K. of R. and S.; Wm. L. Rawlings, M. of E.

There was a heavy storm in the mountain region. The snow was 23 inches deep at Altamont and nearly a foot deep at Oakland. At Cumberland the river was frozen over but the ice on the Maryland side was soon broken by the boats passing up the wharf.

Mrs. Geo. Wetzell Fatally Burned.

Wednesay morning, Nov. 9 shortly before 7 o'clock, Mrs. George Wetzell of Trans-Meyersdale, was so severely burned than death resulted on the evening of the same day at 6:45 o'clock.

The annual butchering was done on Tuesday, and early on Wednesday morning Mrs. Wetzel started fire under the kettle to the rear of the house for the purpose of preparing the pudding meat and the preformance of other minor details of the work that had not been finished on the preceeding day, as is frequently the case upon butchering occasions, and while working about the kettle, close to the fire, her clothing ignited, and before aid could reach the unfortunate woman she was a mass of flames.

In her desperation she ran into the house in serch of her husband who unfortunately, was in the barn on the extreme rear end of the lot. He, however, heard her screams and came as soon as he could, but not soon enough to extinguish the flames which had already accomplished their fatal work.

The lower part of the woman's body was burned almost to a crisp, and she suffered the most agonizing tortures being conscious, it is said, up until the moment that death came to put an end to her agony.

Mrs. Wetzell was a sister of Mrs. Mahlon Miller, of near Grantsville, this county.

ANNAPOLIS NEWS

FOR AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

President Patterson Will Urge An Appropriation Of $1,000,000.

President H. J. Patterson, of the Maryland Agricultural College, in an interview said he would urge the next legislature to make an appropriation of $1,000,000 for the advancement of the institution.

"It is planned to open a summer school for the instruction of teachers in the rural schools and to show them how to introduce vocational training in their class work," said President Patterson.

"We are only able to reach the farmers who have had the average school education. The other farmers are, through their ignorance, opposed to what they style 'book farming,' and are prejudiced against the scientific culture of the soil. It is this class of ignorant farmers that is holding down the percentage of the crop growth throughout the State. It is proposed to reach these farmers and show them by the example of the improvement in their neighbor's crop just what can be accomplished by scientific farming.

"For instance, the average milk producer has a number of cows in his herd that are simply 'hoarders.' That is, these cows are not producing enough milk to pay the farmer to keep them. By instructing the farmer how to distinguish these cows he may be able to get rid of them.

"We are not asking the legislature to appropriate this $1,000,000 in a lump sum, but would like to have a bill passed providing for the appropriation from year to year in sums of about $200,000."

TAX ASSESSMENTS REVIEWED.

State Board Of Appeals Orders Reduction In Some Cases.

The State Board of Appeals, consisting of Comptroller Harrington, Treasurer Vandiver and State Tax Commissioner Schley, which is the reviewing authority of appeals against assessments as made by the Tax Commissioner, met here and considered a number of appeals that had been on the files for some time. As a result, assessments were ordered reduced in two or three instances, while in others the action of the Tax Commissioner was affirmed.

The following appeals were heard: Ashland Tailoring Company, of Baltimore, affirmed; Franklin Printing Company, affirmed; Home Gas Company, affirmed; Thomas Hughes Company, reduced from $19,000 to $4,000 because of an error; Mallory Machinery Company, reduced from $7,000 to $4,000; Oehm-Sheffer Company, reduced from $3,000 to $1,800.

The following appeals were submitted on brief and will be decided later: Baltimore Antiseptic Steam Laundry Company, Cloverdale Water Company and the Southern Engineering Corporation. The appeal of the Southern Can Company was postponed, and the case of the Maryland-George's Creek Coal Company was withdrawn.

FOR CRIMINAL INSANE.

Separate Building Urged By Anne Arundel Grand Jury.

The grand jury for the October term of the Circuit Court for Anne Arundel county made its final report, and adjourned. Part of the report concerned the affairs of the State Hospital for the Colored Insane, at Crownsville, from which a number of criminal insane have recently escaped. The jury recommends that a separate building be erected for the criminal insane, and that they be not allowed to mingle with the others. The report makes this recommendation urgent, holding that the safety of the residents of the county demands that such a step be taken. The jury reported that several public buildings in Annapolis have not sufficient fire protection, mentioning the Maryland Hotel and the Colonial Theatre particularly. It recommends that the condition of the Maryland Hotel be reported to the State Fire Marshal at once.

SAY MONROEISM IS IRRITATING

Doctrine Scored at Pan-American Conference.

DIMINISHES OUR INFLUENCE.

George F. Tucker, a Distinguished Author, and Prof. Bingham, Of Yale, Make Plea For South American Republics.

Worcester, Mass. — Prof. Hiram Bingham, of Yale, and George F. Tucker, of Boston, author of The Monroe Doctrine and other books, spoke on the Monroe doctrine at the Clark University Conference on Latin-America.

Dr. Tucker urged the abandonment of the Monroe Doctrine. "The views of the Southern republics themselves," he said, "should be considered. The present protectorate idea of the United States is very different from the acceptable service rendered to the Latin-American countries 90 years ago. If the Monroe Doctrine is asserted to any further extent the catholic spirit of the patriot, and not the inflamed temper of the jingoist, should be brought to the settlement of the differences. Even those South Americans who do not fear our imperialism realize the selfishness of the Monroe Doctrine, and it makes them dislike us and mistrust our foreign policy.

"Consequently, by maintaining this national shibboleth and adhering to the words 'Monroe Doctrine,' we diminish our possible influence for good in the Western Hemisphere, and we interfere with the growth of our foreign commerce.

"We owe it to ourselves to give up the words 'Monroe Doctrine,' and to adopt a policy of Pan-American defense which will enable us to secure the friendship and support of our neighbors in the Western Hemisphere, which will increase our influence for good among them, and will remove any handicap in the development of our foreign commerce.

Professor Bingham, head of the department of Latin-American history at Yale, declared that the Monroe Doctrine is distasteful to the Latin-American countries. "When the South Americans use these words," he said, "or compress them into one—'Monroeism'—the meaning is for them a sinister one. It spells tutelage and intervention; it means the desire of the great and powerful United States to interfere in the personal affairs of the American republics. To the citizens of the leading American republics, like Argentina, Brazil and Chili, our adherence to Monroeism is extremely irritating, and even positively insulting. To the lesser republics, particularly those around the Caribbean Sea, Monroeism means interference, intervention, imperialism and annexation."

NO WHITE HOUSE RECEPTION NEW YEAR'S DAY.

Washington.—President Wilson shattered a precedent of more than 100 years' standing today.

He announced that there would be no public reception at the White House on New Year's Day.

For many years it has been customary for the President to stand in the Blue Room from two to five hours and shake hands with all who came along.

This will not be done this year.

Instead the President will go away from Washington for a "brief holiday vacation" and will not be in the White House on New Year's Day.

SEEKS $200,000 HEART BALM.

Sum Claimed In Charlemagne Tower Alienation Suit.

Philadelphia.—Two hundred thousand dollars is the amount of damages claimed by Mrs. Georgeanna Burdick Tower, who declares she is the wife of Charlemagne Tower, Jr., and who has sued Charlemagne Tower, Sr., for alleged alienation of the affections of his son. The complainant began her suit against Mr. Tower, Sr., who was former American Ambassador to Germany, on October 9. She declares in her suit that she was married to young Tower in New Haven, Conn., in June, 1911, while he was a student in a New England University, and she alleges that since then Mr. Tower, Sr., has induced young Tower to leave her and has alienated the son's affections.

AVIATION'S PART IN TIME OF WAR

Secretary Daniels on Importance of Flying Machines.

CONTRIBUTE TO PROSPERITY.

All Of the Various Types Dominating Factors In the Success Of Future Campaigns—How They Can Be Utilized.

St. Louis, Mo.—"In my opinion the newly developed art of aviation will not only tend to limit the duration and scope of hostile operations, but also aid in the control of the seas, one of the elements contributing materially to the power and prosperity of a nation."

Secretary Daniels made this statement here in the course of a public address upon aeronautics, in which he discussed the conquest of the air by the United States Army and Navy and the part aerial navigation will take in future wars.

"The potentialities of the aeroplane, when applied to the art of war, are extremely great and its proper use will undoubtedly be a dominating factor in the success of future campaigns," said he. "The principal roles of the aeroplane in naval warfare will be for scouting and reconnoissance work and for offensive destructive operations against hostile fleets and fortifications. Rash indeed will be the commander of an opposing fleet who would head his vessels against the fleet or coast of an enemy possessing a number of these vicious wasps of war, and unfortunate indeed would be a commander who did not have ready at his call this means of obtaining supremacy in the air.

"A torpedo costs $8,000, and frequently is lost in practice through deflection in direction that makes it impossible to follow it from the crow's nest of a ship. But an aerial scout can follow a torpedo's course unerringly by watching it from above. The price of one torpedo will pay for several flying machines. Experts say mines are easily 'picked up' or located by aerial scouts. One little mine may wreck a $10,000,000 battleship. A flying machine, costing but a small sum, would mean the ship's safety. The dirigible balloon, likewise, will play as important a part in naval warfare as the aeroplane, and possibly will have a greater effect on naval strategy and tactics."

HE KILLS FOUR IN DAY.

After Murdering Man a Mexican Slays Three Policemen.

Salt Lake City, Utah.—Chief of Police Grant, of Bingham, and Deputy Sheriffs Otto Whitbeck and Nephi Jensen were killed in a rifle fight with Ralph Lopez, a Mexican, near Saratoga Springs, Utah. Lopez is wanted in Bingham for the murder of a countryman there. After slaying the three officers Lopez fled into the hills. Posses are searching for him with the prospect of another fight if he is ever taken.

KILLS MOTHER AND HIMSELF.

Judge Refuses Lunacy Commission For Hans Schmidt.

New York.—The question whether Hans Schmidt was insane when he killed Anna Aumuller, cut up her body and threw it into the Hudson will be left to the jury that will try him for murder. Judge Foster in the Court of General Sessions denied a motion of Schmidt's attorney for the appointment of a commission to pass on his mental condition.

CAN PAY FOR FISCAL YEAR.

Corporations So Advised In Regard To Income Tax.

Washington.—The Treasury Department issued instructions to collectors in regard to the income tax, stating that every corporation will be allowed to pay its taxes on the basis of its own fiscal year. The collector in the district must be notified 30 days before the corporation proposes to close its fiscal year. Those which do not name a fiscal closing date will make returns for the calendar year.

FEDERAL CONTROL OF WATER POWERS

Resolution Adopted By Conservation Congress.

HAD A STORMY SESSION

Private Ownership Advocates Make Vigorous Fight, But Develop a Hopeless Minority. Bolters Fail.

Washington.—Monopolistic control of water power in private hands was denounced with a declaration that no water power rights owned by the public ever should be removed from public ownership by the National Conservation Congress, just adjourned here.

The climax of the water power fight which had agitated the congress for several days came after the committee on resolutions, to which had been referred divergent reports from the waterway committee, submitted that the matter had been taken from its hands by action of the convention in accepting general principles upon which the waterways committee agreed. No mention of the majority or minority reports, which differed as to State and Federal control of water power projects, was made in the resolutions committee report to the convention.

When the report had been read, Gifford Pinchot, former chief forester of the United States and father of the minority waterways report in the congress, moved as an amendment to the resolutions' report a declaration of principles on waterways control, similar to the ideas in the minority report signed by himself, former Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson and Joseph N. Teal, of Oregon. This amendment was adopted by a vote of 317 to 96, after one offered by Representative Burnett, of Alabama, which injected into the resolution the matter of State control of waterway projects had been defeated, 378 to 132.

The Pinchot amendment, approved after a stormy session during which repeated attempts were made to adjourn by some Southern and Western delegates, declared that monopolistic control of water power in private hands was swiftly increasing in the United States "far more rapidly than public control thereof," that increasing "concentration of water power in some hands" was accompanied by growing control over the power-consuming agencies, the public service companies of the country.

MINE EXPLOSION KILLED 24.

Six Others Were Injured In Acton (Ala.) Disaster.

Birmingham, Ala.—Complete exploration of the Alabama Fuel and Iron Company's mine No. 2, at Acton, in which an explosion occurred Tuesday afternoon, showed 24 men were killed and 6 hurt. State mine officials are investigating to determine the cause of the explosion.

THROAT PIERCED BY PENCIL.

Woman Dies From Wounds Received While Asleep.

Clarksburg, W. Va.—Mrs. Ida Somerville, aged 50 years, died in a hospital as the result of a peculiar accident. She fell asleep in her home Saturday with a lead pencil in her hand. Her head dropped on the table and the pencil pierced her throat, making a wound which caused her death.

DYNAMITE DIDN'T EXPLODE.

But Six Miners Were Fatally Injured In Car Collision.

Bellaire, O.—A car carrying 12 miners collided with a car hauling 250 pounds of dynamite 400 feet from the entrance of the Pultney mine, near here. Both cars left the rails. All of the men were injured, six fatally, it is believed. They were foreigners. The dynamite did not explode. If it had the 12 men would have been killed outright.

SEES END OF NATURAL GAS.

Manager Says West Virginia Supply Will Last Only Ten Years.

Wheeling, W. Va.—Appearing before the State Public Service Commission here in defense of advances in natural gas rates in Northern West Virginia towns, General Manager T. O. Sullivan, of the Manufacturers' Light and Heat Company, of Pittsburgh, declared that within 10 years the supply of gas in this State will have been exhausted. This was one of his arguments for the advance in rates.

HUERTA'S MESSAGE TO HIS CONGRESS

Defends His Acts as Dictator and Imposes New Tax.

U. S. NOT REPRESENTED

Also Orders Issue Of Small Bills. His Effusiveness To O'Shaughnessy Excites General Comment.

Mexico City.—His face showing none of that whimsical humor which sometimes characterizes him, President Huerta appeared before the new Mexican Congress and read his message.

Few Mexican Presidents have read at the formal opening sessions of Congress shorter messages and few have confined themselves so entirely to one subject. It was nothing more than a terse explanation of his motives for dissolving the old Congress, most of the members of which are now in the penitentiary, accused of sedition.

There were no extraneous frills to the session. It was more in the nature of a little business meeting of the President and the men converted into lawmakers during the recent so-called elections.

The message General Huerta bore to them was in its essence an admonition. The incident he related to them of the dissolution of the previous Congress was one by which it was intimated they might be guided in their conduct as Congressmen.

The message, as stated in the forecast, was chiefly a review of the political events since October 10 last; a plea of justification for the assumption of dictatorial powers, the dissolution of Congress and the imprisonment of the Deputies; a denunciation of the latter for alleged harboring of treasonable designs; a demand for a complete vindication at the hands of the new Congress and ratification of his acts, and a rather bombastic and stilted protestation of patriotism. That Huerta would promptly get the ratification seemed to be beyond doubt. The forecast was correct, even to the quoting of Napoleon.

The reply of the Speaker, Eduardo Tamariz, was brief. Not all the Congressmen were present.

Huerta, who appeared in evening clothes, was applauded only upon his arrival and departure, when the members of Congress and the spectators rose to their feet and added "Vivas" to the handclapping.

The only country not represented in the gallery reserved for diplomats was the United States. Nelson O'Shaughnessy, the Charge d'Affaires, acting under instructions, was absent from the session.

ARREST OF ZELAYA EXPECTED.

Washington Willing To Surrender Ex-Dictator To Nicaragua.

Washington.—The refusal of Secretary of State Bryan to receive Jose Santos Zelaya, ex-President of Nicaragua, it became known, was because the United States will take all steps in its power to have Zelaya brought to trial for the numerous crimes that are ascribed to him when he was dictator of Nicaragua. It is known that Zelaya is under surveillance and his arrest at any moment may be expected.

MISS BURNS PAYS FINE.

Suffragette Who Chalked White House Sidewalks.

Washington.—Miss Lucy Burns, the capital's first militant suffragette, paid a fine of one dollar in police court for chalking the White House sidewalks with "votes for women." The judge proposed to release Miss Burns on her personal bond not to repeat the offense, which is a violation of a city ordinance.

"I want this thing settled and over with," said Miss Burns, so the court made it a dollar, and she left, the center of admiration of her sisters.

SHOOTS WIFE AND HER MOTHER.

Then Electrician, Deserted, Turns Pistol On Himself.

Pittsburgh.—Charles Deitz, an electrician, aged 35 years, shot his wife, his mother-in-law, Mrs. Caroline Miller, and himself at Braddock, a suburb. The trio was hurried to the nearest hospital, where physicians said Dietz would likely die, but the women were not dangerously hurt. Dietz and his wife have not been living together and the shoting attended a visit Dietz paid to her mother's home.

GIRLS GO ON HUNGER STRIKE.

But Return For Lunch At College After Missing Meal.

Spartanburg, S. C.—Two hundred young women students at Converse College, who started a hunger strike at dinner as a protest against the food, returned for lunch. A dozen had weakened at breakfast. "Merely the desire of the young ladies to try some novel experience," was the comment of Dr. Robert P. Pell, president of the college.

TO SMASH THE EGG TRUST.

Attorney-General To Investigate Cold-Storage Combination.

Washington.—Attorney-General McReynolds is considering an investigation of an alleged cold storage combination, which he believes may be responsible for the high price of eggs and poultry. Charges have also reached the department that cold storage concerns in some instances sell cold storage products for fresh ones. Such transactions violate the Pure Food law.

MORE TROOPS TO THE BORDER

An Infantry Regiment Ordered to El Paso.

MORE CAVALRY AT LAREDO.

United States and Great Britain Acting In Harmony As To Disposition Of Naval Forces.

Washington.—Reinforcement of the American troops on the Mexican frontier is the latest development relating to the Mexican problem, but this movement of troops was declared to be not at all alarming by official statements issued in explanation. It was said at the War Department that one of two infantry regiments is to be ordered immediately to Fort Bliss, near El Paso, for the purpose of freeing one of the cavalry regiments now stationed at that fort for active duty along the international line in the execution of the neutrality laws. The choice will fall upon the Sixteenth Infantry, now at the Presidio, San Francisco, or the Twentieth Infantry, stationed at Fort Douglas, near Salt Lake City, Utah.

To serve as a garrison and defend the city of El Paso from any possible attack from the south of the line or to police the city in case of rioting it was said that the infantry organization would be as serviceable as the mounted soldiers. On the other hand, not being as mobile, the infantry could scarcely fill the place of cavalry on the border patrol.

The next result of the order is to increase by a full regiment the force of American troops available to maintain order along the border. That their services may be needed for this purpose was asserted by members of the Texas congressional delegation, and Secretary Garrison yielded to their appeals when he learned through the press dispatches that the Federal leaders were again approaching Juarez, opposite El Paso, and that the rebel general, Villa, who only recently had captured the town, had gone forth to meet the Federals in battle.

With the feeling of apprehension as to the safety of the oil tanks near Tuxpam allayed by pledges from the rebel leaders that there would be no violation of property rights there, navy officials were considerably relieved. It was expected that one of the two British armored cruisers from Barbadoes would put in an appearance at Tampico almost immediately, and apparently it was felt safe to withdraw the battleship New Hampshire from Tuxpam, particularly as the battleship Louisiana remains in that neighborhood to look after foreign interests.

With the removal of all misunderstanding as to the reasons for the visit of the British ships to the oil coast, it was felt that the lines of protection against anarchy would be strengthened materially. There has been fear that an attempt might be made to fire the great oil tanks, wherein are stored nearly 15,000,000 barrels of petroleum.

GOMPERS AGAIN PRESIDENT.

Re-elected Head Of American Federation Of Labor.

Seattle, Wash.—Samuel Gompers will rule the American Federation of Labor for another year. After re-electing him by a practically unanimous vote and selecting Philadelphia as the 1914 convention city, one of the most unexciting conventions in the federation's history, adjourned sine die here. The attempt of the insurgents to defeat Gompers for re-election fell flat. The antis were strong during the early days of the convention, but when the time came to elect officers only a single delegate opposed Gompers' re-election. Philadelphia was chosen over Fort Worth, Texas, for the next convention by a vote of 10,633 to 8,402.

WHIPPING POST'S ENEMY.

Representative Evans Again Denounces the Institution.

Washington.—Bareback flogging of convicts in Delaware was denounced in the House as degrading, cruel and a medieval relic of barbarism by Representative Evans, of Montana. Evans was defending his resolution for a Federal injunction against the practice. He said Attorney General McReynolds felt that there was no action he could take. "When you manacle a man to a post and beat him across the back," cried Evans, "you make him an enemy to society; malice and hatred toward all the world are sown in his heart, and sooner or later the seed must bear fruit."

NO HALT IN HUERTA PROGRAM.

General Villa Levies On Bank In Mexico City.

Mexico City.—The Chamber of Deputies completed the details of organization, appointing House committees.

In the lobbies and at the National Palace the idea prevailed that President Huerta is fixed in his determination to permit the new Congress to continue and is planning to carry out the program of the government for the pacification of the country.

NO HASTE ON CURRENCY.

Debate In Senate Expected To Last Till February.

Washington.—The Administration Currency bill, with the amendments proposed by the divided Senate Banking and Currency Committee, was laid before the Senate and debate on the measure was begun. The two factions of the committee, headed by Senator Owen and Senator Hitchcock, filed their divergent views on the Administration measure and the bill passed by the House, was made the "unfinished business" of the Senate.

SYNOPSIS.

Scarlett, an American soldier of fortune in the employ of the French imperial Police at the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian war, is ordered to arrest John Buckhurst, a leader of the Communists and suspected of having stolen the French crown jewels. While searching for Buckhurst, Scarlett is ordered to arrest Countess de Vassart and her group of socialists and escort them to the Belgian border. Scarlett finds Sylvia Elven of the Odeon disguised as a peasant and carries her to La Trappe where the countess and her friends are assembled. All are arrested. The countess saves Scarlett from a fatal fall from the roof of the house. He denounces Buckhurst as the leader of the Reds and the countess conducts him to where Buckhurst is secreted. German Uhlans descend on the place and Buckhurst escapes during the melee. Scarlett is wounded. He recovers consciousness in the countess' house at Morsbronn, where he is cared for by the countess. A fierce battle is fought in the streets between French and Prussian soldiers. Buckhurst professes repentence and returns the crown jewels to Scarlett. He declares he will give himself up to the authorities. Scarlett doubts his sincerity. Buckhurst urges the countess to go to Paradise. Buckhurst admits that he receives pay from the Prussians for information which he does not give. He secures passports to the French lines for Scarlett, the countess and himself. Scarlett reports to the secret service in Paris and finds Mornac, shadow of the emperor in charge. He deposits the crown jewels and later, when making a detailed report, finds that pebbles have been substituted for the real stones. Speed, a comrade in the service, warns Scarlett that Mornac is dangerous. He also informs him that all the government treasure is being transported to the coast for shipment out of the country. Scarlett and Speed escape to join a circus. The circus arrives at Paradise. An order is received by the mayor calling the citizens to arms.

CHAPTER XI.

In Camp.

We went into camp under the landward glacis of the cliffs, in a field of clover which was to be plowed under in a few days. We all were there except Kelly Eyre, who had gone to telegraph the governor of Lorient for permission to enter the port with the circus. Another messenger also left camp on private business for me.

Presently we were all sitting around the long camp-table in the glare of two smoky petroleum torches, eating our bread and ham and potatoes and drinking Breton cider, a jug of which Mr. Horan had purchased for a few coppers.

The hard cider cheered Byram a little; he drew a cherished cigar from his vest pocket, offered it to me, and when I considerately refused, he carefully set it alight with a splinter from the fire. Its odor was indescribable.

Byram appeared to have recovered nothing of his buoyancy and native optimism.

"Gentlemen," he said, "let's kinder saunter over to the inn and have a night-cap with Kelly Eyre."

The lighted door of the inn hung ajar as we crossed the star-lit square; Byram entered and stood a moment in the doorway, stroking his chin. "Bong joor the company!" he said, lifting his battered hat.

The few Bretons in the wineroom returned his civility; he glanced about and his eye fell on Kelly Eyre, Speed's assistant balloonist, seated by the window with Horan.

"Well, gents," said Byram, hopefully, "an' what aire the prospects of smilin' fortune when rosy-fingered dawn has came again to kiss us back to life?"

"Rotten," said Eyre, pushing a telegram across the oak table.

Byram's face fell; he picked up the telegram and fumbled in his coat for his spectacles with unsteady hand.

"Let me read it, governor," said Speed, and took the blue paper from Byram's unresisting, stubby fingers.

"Oho!" he muttered, scanning the message; "well—well, it's not so bad as all that—"

"Well, sir?" said Byram, in a low voice.

"Well, governor? Oh—er—the telegram?" asked Speed, like a man fighting for time.

"Yes, the telegram," said Byram, patiently.

"Well, you see they have just heard of the terrible smash-up in the north, governor. Metz has surrendered with Bazaine's entire army. And they're naturally frightened at Lorient. . . . And . . . well . . . they won't let us pass the fortifications."

"Won't let us in?" cried Byram, hoarsely.

"I'm afraid not, governor."

Byram stared at us. We had counted on Lorient to pull us through as far as the frontier.

"Now don't take it so hard, governor," said Kelly Eyre; "I was frightened myself, at first, but I'm ashamed of it now. We'll pull through, anyhow."

"Certainly," said Speed, cheerily. "We'll drum up the whole district from Pontivy to Auray and from Penmarch Point to Plouharnel! Why should the Breton peasantry not come? Don't they walk miles to the Pardons?"

A gray pallor settled on Byram's sunken face; with it came a certain dignity which sorrow sometimes brings even to men like him.

"Young gentlemen," he said. "I'm obliged to you. These here reverses come to everybody, I guess. The Lord knows best; but if he'll just lemme run my show a leetle longer, I'll pay my debts an' say, 'Thy will be done, amen!'"

After a painful silence he rose, steadying himself with his hand on Eyre's broad shoulder, and shambled out across the square, muttering something about his elephant and his camel.

Speed paid the insignificant bill, emptied his glass, and nodded at me.

"It's all up," he said, soberly.

"Let's come back to camp and talk it over," I said.

Together we traversed the square under the stars, and entered the field of clover. In the dim, smoky camp all lights were out except one oil-drenched torch stuck in the ground between the two tents.

Speed had some cigarettes, and he laid the pink package on the table. I lighted one when he did.

"Do you really think there's a chance?" he asked, presently.

"I don't know," I said.

"Well, we can try."

"Oh yes."

"I'll tell you what," Speed said, "if we only had that poor little girl, Miss Claridge, we'd catch these Bretons. That's what took the coast-folk all over Europe, so Grigg says."

Miss Claridge had performed in a large glass tank as the "Leaping Mermaid." It took like wildfire according to our fellow-performers. We had never seen her; she was killed by diving into her tank when the circus was at Antwerp in April.

"Can't we get up something like that?" I suggested, hopelessly.

"Who would do it? Miss Claridge's fish-tights are in the prop-box; who's to wear them?"

He began to say something else, but stopped suddenly, eyes fixed. Jacqueline stood behind me in the smoky light of the torch—Jacqueline, bare of arm and knee, with her sea-blue eyes very wide and the witch locks clustering around the dim oval of her face. After a moment's absolute silence she said: "I came from Paradise. Don't you remember?"

"Of course I remember you, Jacqueline. And I have an idea you ought to be in bed."

"Won't you sit down?" asked Speed.

"Thank you," said Jacqueline.

She seated herself on a sack of sawdust, clasping her slender hands between her knees, and looked earnestly at the elephant. Speed asked her, jestingly, why she did not join the circus.

"It is what I wish," she said, under her breath.

"And ride white horses?"

"Will you take me?" she cried, passionately, springing to her feet.

Amazed at her earnestness, I tried to explain that such an idea was out of the question. She listened anxiously at first, then her eyes fell and she stood there in the torch-light, head hanging.

"I should like to see a circus," she said. "Then I should know what to do. That I can swing higher than any girl in Paradise has been demonstrated often," she went on, earnestly. "I can swim farther, I can dive deeper, I can run faster, with bare feet or with sabots, than anybody, man or woman, from the Beacon to Our Lady's chapel."

"So you can dive and swim?" asked Speed, with a glance at me.

"Like the salmon in the Lalta, monsieur."

"Under water?"

"Parbleu!"

After a pause I asked her age.

"Fifteen, M'sieu Scarlett. Won't you take me?" she asked, sweetly.

"I'll tell you what I'll do, Jacqueline," said I. "Very early in the morning I'll go down to your house and see your father. Then, if he makes no objection, I'll get you to put on a pretty swimming suit, all made out of silver scales, and you can show me, there in the sea, how you can dive and swim and play at mermaid. Does that please you?"

She looked earnestly at me, then at Speed.

"Is it a promise?" she asked, in a quivering voice.

"Yes, Jacqueline."

"Then I thank you, M'sieu Scarlett, . . . and you, m'sieur. And I will be waiting for you when you come. . . . We live in the house below the Saint-Julien light. . . . My father is pilot of the port. . . . Anybody will tell you." . . .

"I will not forget," said I.

She bade us good-night very prettily, stepped back out of the circle of torch-light, and vanished—there is no other word for it.

CHAPTER XII.

Jacqueline.

The stars were still shining when I awoke in my blanket, lighted a candle, and stepped into the wooden tub of salt water outside the tent.

I shaved by candle-light, dressed in my worn riding-breeches and jacket, then, candle in hand, began groping about among the faded bits of finery and tarnished properties until I found the silver-scaled swimming-tights once worn by the girl of whom we had heard so much.

The stars had begun to fade when I stepped out through the dew-soaked clover carrying in one hand a satchel containing the swimming suit, in the other a gun case, in which, carefully oiled and doubly cased in flannel, reposed my only luxury—my breech-loading shotgun.

The Lizard was standing on his door-sill when I came up; he returned my greeting sullenly, his keen eyes of a sea-bird roving over me from head to foot. A rumpled and sulky yellow cat, evidently just awake, sat on the door step beside him and yawned at intervals. The pair looked as though they had made a night of it.

"You took my letter last night?" I asked.

"Yes."

"Was there an answer for me?"

"Yes."

So I took the letter and read it—a formal line saying the Countess de Vassart would expect me at five that afternoon.

"Look here, Lizard," I said, "I intend to be friends with you, and I mean to make you look on me as a friend. It is to my advantage and to yours."

"To mine?" he inquired, sneeringly.

"And this is the first thing I want," I continued; and without further preface I unfolded our plans concerning Jacqueline.

"Entendu," he said, drawling the word, "is that all?"

"No, not all. I want you to be my messenger in time of need. I want you to be absolutely faithful to me."

"And what is there in this, to my advantage, m'sieu?"

"This, for one thing," I said, carelessly, picking up my gun case. I slowly drew out the barrels of Damascus, then the rose-wood stock and fore-end, assembling them lovingly; for it was the finest weapon I had ever seen.

"Will You Take Me?" She Cried.

and it was breaking my heart to give it away.

The poacher's eyes began to glitter as I fitted the double bolts and locked breech and barrel with the extension rib. Then I snapped on the fore-end; and there lay the gun in my hands, a fowling-piece fit for an emperor.

"Give it?" muttered the poacher, huskily.

"Take it, my friend the Lizard," I replied, smiling down the wrench in my heart.

There was a silence; then the poacher stepped forward, and, looking me square in the eye, flung out his hand. I struck my open palm smartly against his, in the Breton fashion; then we clasped hands.

"Strike!" he cried; "take my friendship if you want it, on this condition—what I am is my own concern, not yours. Don't interfere, m'sieu; it would be useless. I should never betray you, but I might kill you. Don't interfere. But if you care for the good will of a man like me, take it; and when you desire a service from me, tell me, and I'll not fail you, by Sainte-Eline of Paradise!"

He turned on his heel, kicking off his sabots on the doorsill. "Break bread with me; I ask it," he said, gruffly, and walked before me into the house.

From the ashes on the hearth a spiral of smoke curled. The yellow cat walked in and sat down, contemplating the ashes.

Slowly a saffron light filled the room; Jacqueline awoke in the dim bed.

She swathed herself in a blanket and sat up, looking at me sleepily.

"You came to see me swim," she said.

"And I've brought you a fish's silver skin to swim in," I replied, pointing at the satchel.

She cast a swift glance at her father, who, with the gun on his knees, sat as though hypnotized by the beauty of its workmanship. Her bright eyes fell on the gun; she understood in a flash.

"Turn your back!" she cried.

I wheeled about and sat down on the settle beside the poacher. There came a light thud of small, bare feet on the stone floor, then silence. The poacher looked up.

"She's gone to the ocean," he said; "she has the mania for baths—like you English." And he fell to rubbing the gunstock with dirty thumb.

The saffron light in the room was turning pink when Jacqueline reappeared on the threshold in her ragged skirt and stained velvet bodice half laced, with the broken points hanging, carrying an armful of driftwood.

Without a word she went to work so swiftly that the pink light had scarcely deepened to crimson when the poacher, laying the gun tenderly in the blankets of Jacqueline's tumbled bed, came striding back to the table where a sea-trout smoked on a cracked platter, and a bowl of bread and milk stood before each place.

We ate silently. Ange Pitou, the yellow cat, came around with tail inflated. There were fishbones enough to gratify any cat, and Ange Pitou made short work of them.

The poacher rose, wiped his mouth with the back of his hand, and made straight for his new gun.

"You two," he said, with a wave of his arm, "you settle it among yourselves. He touched his beret to me, flung the fowling-piece over his shoulder, and walked away.

Jacqueline placed the few dishes in a pan of hot water, wiped her fingers, daintily, and picked up Ange Pitou.

"Show me the swimming suit," she said, shyly.

I drew it out of the satchel and laid it across my knees.

"Oh, it has a little tail behind—like a fish!" she cried, enchanted. "I shall look like the silver grilse of Quimperle!"

"Do you think you can swim in those scales?" I asked.

Swim? I—Jacqueline? Attendez un peu—you shall see!"

She opened her arms; the cat sprang to the doorstep and vanished.

Jacqueline looked at the swimming suit, then at me. "Will you go down to the beach, M'sieu Scarlett?"

But I had not traversed half the strip of rock and hard sand before something flew past—a slim, glittering shape which suddenly doubled up, straightened again, and fell headlong into the thundering surf.

After a long, long while, far out on the water she rose, floating.

Tossed back once more upon the beach like an opalescent shell, Jacqueline, ankle-deep in foam, looked out across the flaming waters, her drenched hair dripping.

"Look!" she cried, flinging her arms above her head, and dropped into space, falling like a star, down, down into the shallow sea. Far below I saw a streak of living light shoot through the water—on, on, closer to the surface now, and at last she fairly sprang into the air, quivering like a gaffed salmon, then fell back to float and clear her blue eyes from her tangled hair.

Presently she climbed to the sun-warmed hillock of sand and sat down beside me to dry her hair.

Ange Pitou, coveting a warm sun-bath in the sand, came wandering along pretending not to see us; but Jacqueline dragged him into her arms for a hug, which lasted until Ange Pitou broke loose, tail hoisted but ears deaf to further flattery.

So Jacqueline chased Ange Pitou back across the sand and up the rocky path.

"Come to the net-shed, if you please!" she called back to me, pointing to a crazy wooden structure built above the house.

As I entered the net-shed the child was dragging a pile of sea-nets to the middle of the floor.

"In case I fall," she said, coolly.

"Better let me arrange them, then," I said, glancing up at the improvised trapeze which dangled under the roof-beams.

She thanked me, seized a long rope, and went up, hand over hand. I piled the soft nets into a mattress, but decided to stand near, not liking the arrangements.

Meanwhile Jacqueline was swinging, head downward, from her trapeze. Her cheeks flamed as she twisted and wriggled through a complicated maneuver, which ended by landing her seated on the bar of the trapeze a trifle out of breath.

"You think you could drop from there into a tank of water?" I asked.

"How deep?"

"Say four feet."

She nodded, swinging tranquilly.

"You would try whatever I asked you to try?"

"If I thought I could," she replied, naively.

"But that is not it. I am to be your master. You must have absolute confidence in me and obey orders instantly."

"Bien."

"Then hang by your hands!"

Quick as a flash she hung above me.

"You trust me, Jacqueline?"

"Yes."

"Then drop!"

Down she flashed like a falling meteor. I caught her with that quick trick known to all acrobats, which left her standing on my knee.

"Jump!"

She sprang lightly to the heap of nets, lost her balance, stumbled, and sat down very suddenly. Then she threw back her head and laughed.

CHAPTER XIII.

Friends.

At seven o'clock that morning the men in the circus camp awoke, worried, fatigued, vaguely resentful, unusually profane.

By eight o'clock a miraculous change had taken place; the camp was alive with scurrying people, galvanized into hopeful activity by my possibly unwarranted optimism and a few judiciously veiled threats.

Clothed with temporary authority by Byram, I took the bit between my teeth and ordered the instant erection of the main tents, the construction of the ring, barriers and benches, and the immediate renovating of the portable tank in which poor little Miss Claridge had met her doom.

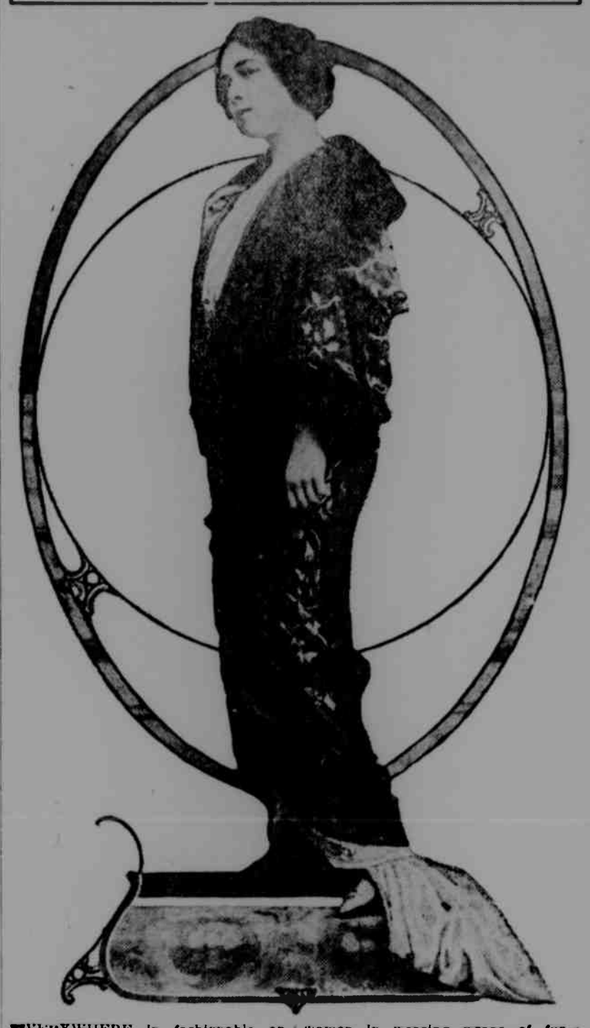
By the standing stones of Carnac, I swore that I'd have all Finistere in the tent. "Governor," said I, "we are going to feature Jacqueline all over Brittany, and, if the ladies object, it can't be helped! By-the-way, do they object?"

The ladies did object, otherwise they would not have been human ladies; but the battle was sharp and decisive, for I was desperate.

"It simply amounts to this," I said: "Jacqueline pulls us through or the governor and I land in jail. As for you, heaven knows what will happen to you! Penal settlement, probably."

And I called Speed and pointed at Jacqueline, sitting on her satchel, watching the proceedings with amiable curiosity.

"Speed, take that child and rehearse her."



Speed took Jacqueline by the hand, and together they entered the big white tent.

Persevering Chinamen.

There are oil and salt wells in China more than 2,000 feet deep that have been drilled through solid rock by hand with the most primitive tools.

Brocades and Furs Dominate Fashion

EVERYWHERE in fashionable apparel, brocades and furs are featured. Whether in coats or gowns or hats, one or the other (and oftener both together), tell of the love of luxurious clothing which seems to be inborn in women. Brocades and furs—in the parlance of the street—"talk money." They are rich and beautiful beyond all other materials.

In keeping with the richness of superb fabrics, garments are cut on voluminous lines. Cloaks are big, enveloping, richly trimmed and draped about the figure. Fur collars and cuffs, gold and silver laces by way of adornment, add to their sumptuousness.

Although many coats, especially those of all fur, are shorter than the model shown here, many brocaded coats trimmed with fur are very long. This is fortunate for the average woman. It takes a tall figure to wear the shorter coats with any style.

All coats, whether long or short, hang in to the figure at the bottom. If you would be in the class of the ultra fashionable, remember that in all your gowns and cloaks you are to strive for the effect of wrapping your figure with loosely hanging garments. Except about the feet everything is full and roomy. But withal this wrapped up figure, cloaks hang easily, away from the neck and loosely about the shoulders. In fact, garments are cut to produce the pose of French women in wearing wraps of fur—they wear such garments as if they were slipping off the shoulder.

Fox, skunk and martin are favored for collars, cuffs and borders. White fox and furs dyed in fancy shades are smartest for evening wraps. After all, the dark furs make the best combination with rich brocades.

It will not be hard to picture to the mind the wrap shown here, with dark mole-colored ground having deep Nattier blue in the pattern of foliage and flowers which covers it. The combination is quiet but very rich. There is almost no combination more elegant.

Brocades for such coats are wide and they are expensive. One must expect them to cost from ten to twenty dollars a yard. They are more costly than plain velvet, but such triumphs of the weaver's art must bring a price commensurate with their superb beauty.

Muffs and turbans are made of these rich fabrics, and trimmed with fur. They lend elegance to plain costumes without requiring a great outlay of money. Fabric muffs are draped and are larger than those of fur.

It will be noticed that the material is draped in the seams of the coat pictured here and that the shoulder line (or the lack of shoulder line) preserves the vague outline of the figure which fashion delights in.

JULIA BOTTOMLEY.

BEST METHODS OF ARRANGING THE COIFFURE

IF you have dark and glossy hair, show the same discriminating taste displayed by the beautiful brunette who is pictured here. Instead of striving for any of the fluffy or any of the severely plain styles in coiffures, select those which bespeak a rich abundance of shining hair.

There is almost no wave in the hair dressed in this fashion. But it is carefully coiled braided and pinned with many small pins into position. There are four coils overlapping across the back of the head, those at each side being first braided loosely.

The ears are covered except at the lobes, and the hair is brought out only a little way on the cheek. A few short locks are just barely curled at the ends at the side and lie flat to the temples.

This coiffure may be managed by any one having fairly thick hair, even if it is short. Brunettes are blessed with hair even in color, and the coils at the back are easily managed with short novelties which will match the natural hair exactly. It is not so easy for blonds to find a perfect match, as blond hair is generally somewhat streaked.

In dressing this coiffure nearly all of the hair is combed back to form the coils. These require four strands, and they are parted off evenly. By waving the hair a little it is easier to make the coils full and light and gives the back of the coiffure a better finish also at the crown of the head. The hair is massed at the back just below the crown and above the nape of the neck. Large shell pins with a few mock jewels, and of excellent quality, are fine with this coiffure.

Black Lace Waists.

As a refreshing change from white waists, the black lace waist, usually in chantilly, is made over flesh color or white lining, which will give equally good service with a newer style. They are just as suited as white waists for wear with a suit of any color. There is a great variety of styles in these waists, some having the foundation of net, chiffon or lace in white, with the black chantilly lace in bolero or jacket arrangement, with the lower section of the sleeves and the front of the waist in white.

Black Waists Now.

As a refreshing change from white waists, the black lace waist, usually in chantilly, is made over flesh color or white lining, which will give equally good service with a newer style. They are just as suited as white waists for wear with a suit of any color. There is a great variety of styles in these waists, some having the foundation of net, chiffon or lace in white, with the black chantilly lace in bolero or jacket arrangement, with the lower section of the sleeves and the front of the waist in white.

Leather Accessories.

Leather and suede are popular for many of the accessories of woman's dress. One a sort of leather peplum fitted to the flare of the hips, and twelve or fourteen inches of the newest things is the wide hip belt—wide. These belts are fastened with ball and socket fastenings under little pearl buttons. They are lined with silk in self color.

Giving Her a Hard Job.

Mrs. Newrich (who has advertised for a pianist)—"So you are the music teacher that answered my advertisement?" Pianist—"Yes, ma'am." Mrs. Newrich—"Well, sit down and play a couple of duets, so that I can see what you can do."—Yonkers Statesman.

Nothing In It.

An advertiser calls his patent washing machine "The Ladies' Delight." Now, if there is anything about washing that delights the ladies, we should like to know what it is. They are anything but delighted on a washing day.

SOME CRUMBS OF COMFORT

Those of Us Who Sweltered in the Dog Days May Find a Little Consolation Here.

For those of us who are forced to spend most of our summers in cities there are a few consoling thoughts, remarks a writer in the Atlantic Monthly. One is that the severest heat does not prompt men to crime, as the social statisticians have found that the severest cold does. Another is that the worst temperature we are called upon to face falls a long way short of the endurance limit of the human body and brain, as proved by French experiments at the 250 degree level. Another comes from the discovery through the newspapers, with every prolonged hot wave, that we are "breaking the record" in some line or other. This ought to be a stimulus to our pride, and if we wish to carry further the beneficent influence of mental suggestion, all we need to do is to compare what is happening to us with what has happened to various other people at various other times. For instance, when the encyclopedias tell us that in A. D. 627 the heat in France and Germany dried the water sources and a multitude of people died of thirst; that in the battle of Bela, in 1260, more soldiers were killed by the sun than by the weapons of the foe; that in 1303 three great rivers of western Europe went dry, and that in Odessa, in 1889, the noon temperature reached 141 degrees and a sunshade was necessary at five in the morning, we are bound to conclude that we are not so badly off, after all.

Moving Picture Animals.

A jungle of several acres, inhabited by wild animals of all countries, many of which are already well trained for the parts they are to play as motion picture actors, is maintained near Los Angeles by one of the big American film-producing companies. It is intended to extend the acreage and accommodations until the motion picture jungle will form the largest single collection of wild animals in the world, and within it will be, and now are, enacted many stirring scenes. A big elephant named "Toddles" is, for instance, the star performer in a film catalogued as "Lost in the Jungle," in which Toddles, during his wanderings in the forest, finds the heroine lying exhausted on the ground, and, kneeling, lifts her to his back and gallantly carries her to safety. All the animals are as conscientiously trained to do acts for the motion picture camera as are the trained animals of a circus.

Cat Only Living Thing on Derelict.

From a derelict ship a cat was rescued near Plymouth, England, a few days ago. H. M. S. Donegal had received orders to search for and sink the derelict Norwegian barque Glenmark. The Glenmark had been dismantled and abandoned more than a month ago. Her crew was rescued and taken to Liverpool by the steamer Dunholme. The Donegal picked up the ship 500 miles out, but finding the hull sound determined to save her. The only living thing on board the derelict was a cat, which had been driven mad by thirst and which severely bit a bluejacket who stroked it.

PRESENT LIMIT OF WIRELESS

Depends Largely on Existing Weather Conditions, but Possibilities Are Apparently Unknown.

According to Prof. J. A. Fleming, several of the most powerful wireless stations are now generating ether waves having a length from crest to crest of about four miles, and these disturbances can be "detected" at distances up to 6,000 miles from their source—that is, four such stations would suffice to "girdle" the earth. Obviously, however, the ability to "detect" the signals over this vast distance, presumably under favorable weather conditions, is a very different thing from the power to maintain commercial communication along the route. As yet the wireless service available to the public covers but a third, or at most half, this distance.

There is as yet no means of determining the practical limit of wireless communication. Improvements in apparatus, perhaps even some new discovery as to methods of stirring up the ether, may revolutionize the art and upset all present standards. But at present even the most successful systems get into serious difficulties when called upon to maintain constant communication over a line 2,000 miles in length. A recent British wireless commission was able to secure but one demonstration on a line 1,000 miles long, although several companies declared their ability much to exceed this distance in a commercial installation.—New York Evening Post.

"Inns."

At one time the words "hostel" and "inn" were not confined to licensed houses, but were applied to lodging houses. The "inns" of Oxford and Cambridge, very numerous before the introduction of colleges, were regulated by the college authorities. The Inns of Court were provided for the accommodation of law students. In olden times country houses of the aristocracy, during the absence of the owners, were used as "inns," or guest-houses. It was then the rule to hang out as signs the arms of the owners; hence the origin of public house signs.

QUEER ORIGINS OF WORDS

"O, dear!" is equivalent to O dio mio, "O, my God!"

"Dandelion!" is dent de leon (the lion's tooth), and "vinegar" was once vin aigre (sour wine).

Madame is "my lady," and sir has been extracted from the Latin "senior" through the French.

"Biscuit" keeps alive the Latin bis coctus (twice cooked) and a "verdict" is simply a vere dictum (true saying).

Kings in the earliest days were merely the "fathers of families," and the word is derived from the same source as "kin."

A "villain," before the stigma of disgrace was attached to him, was a laborer on the villa of a Roman country gentleman.

Pope is the same as "papa," and czar and kaiser are both "Caesar."

Queen at first meant "wife" or "mother," and a survival of its early signification exists in "quean" used now only in a bad sense.

"Hussy" was once a respectable housewife; a "knave" was simply a boy.

Quelquechose we have jumbled into "kicksbaws," and our "gewgaws" represent the jouxjoux or playthings of former French children.

"Jimminy" is a reminiscence of the classical adjuration, O gemini, used by the Romans when they called up the twins, Castor and Pollux, to help them.

"Powwow" comes from the North American Indians.

The word boss comes from the low Dutch and means master.

Kidnap comes from the napping or stealing of a kid, gipsy for child.

Calaboose, a prison; picaroon, a pirate; palaver, to talk, are all Spanish.

"A rum chap" is simply a gipsy lad, it has no relation to the product of the still.

Pal is a brother, and "conk," for nose, comes from the spouting fountain, the concha of the Romans.

Demijohn comes from the Arabic damaghan, itself taken from the Persian glass making town of Demaghan.

The common slang word "mash" is from a beautiful gipsy word "mafada," which means "to charm by the eyes."

Why should a man be called a spoon? Why spoony when he is making love? Simply because he is a "loeffel," which also means spoon.

A tinker's dam has nothing to do with swearing. It is merely the dam or stoppage, made of flour and water, with which the tinker stops the gap he is mending until the tin or the pewter he is using has cooled.

CIVIL WAR SHELLS IN TREES

The last battle of the Civil war of any importance was that in April, 1865, at Bentonville, Johnston county, twenty-five miles from Raleigh, N. C. To this day many trees of large size, notably the pines, show the effect of cannon fire and in some cases of the extremely hot musketry fire.

Albert Ross, a farmer, recently cut some timber and burned the badly shaped portions. There was a series of explosions and the workmen fled. Shells embedded in the wood had exploded and fragments were buried in all directions.

For years sawmill men have been very careful about handling the timber from this section, because saws have been almost ruined by striking embedded bullets.

General Sherman declared that at Bentonville he received the greatest setback on his famous march through Georgia and the Carolinas.

Wanted to Live in History.

Some men's idea of fame is certainly a distorted one. A murderer in South Carolina pleaded for the privilege of being the first man to be electrocuted when that new mode of execution was introduced into the state.

Hanna And Vandiver File Reports.

John B. Hanna, chairman of the Republican State Central Committee, and Gen. Muray Vandiver, chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee, filed their reports of the receipts and expenditures in connection with the recent campaign.

Chairman Hanna's statement shows that the reciepts aggregated $12,417.50 and the disbursements $12,388.32, leaving a cash balance on hand of $29 18.

General Vandiver's report shows total receipts of $16,188,19, $926.96 of which was a balance left over from the campaign last year. The total disbursements amounted to $15,384,59, leaving a balance in the treasury of $803,60.

General Vandiver reports that his committee contributed $500 to the Garrett county committee for expenses.

Is Doing Well.

Attorney Fred T. Martin, who has been in the City Hospital for several days past, is doing very well there, where he is taking treatment for an affection and is in a very cheerful mood. There he is getting a rest and receiving the proper treatment and hopes of an early and ultimate recovery are entertained.

CONSUMPTION VS. WAR

Simple Truths and Facts For Our Readers.

Consumption seems to be taking more people each year. It is a disease that is baffling the Medical profession. It is a germ disease and is not inherited as was once thought. The people that are burdened with consumption are each day setting free a lot of these tuberculi germs are freed each day and thereby causing more new cases. If our readers would pay more attention to the weak members of their family by keeping their lungs in a good healthy condition, the high ratio of consumptive victims would be greatly decreased. If consumption is a germ and the germ only acts on weak lungs, why not keep your lungs in good condition? Never go through the winter with a hacking cough, nor from day to day with pains through your lungs and your system in a nervous run-down condition. Negligence of the above which is oftimes not considered serious, many times turns out to be so.

A remedy by the name of Bear's Emulsion has recently been brought to our attention by numerous articles appearing in the papers written by prominent people that have used the remedy, who have been sufferers of lung trouble. If this remedy proves to act on every one as it has on those who have written testimonials, it will be a great thing for our country, as Consumption has killed more people in four years since the Civil War than were killed during the four years of the Civil War. Work On The Pike Stopped.

The work on the State road near the village of Grantsville which was almost completed, ended abruptly with the unexpected advent of winter, making it impossible to add the final retouching which, while not absolutely necessary, would add considerably to the appearance of the pike. The resurfaced portion extends slightly beyond the Stone house farm and is smooth, compact and substantially built and a boon to the traveler, making the intervening road between Grantsville and the macadamized portion west of Frostburg seem all the more rough by the contrast. The contractors and their men have gone to Hollidaysburg, Pa.

DECEMBER TERM OF THE CIRCUIT COURT

Convened Monday With Associate Judge Henderson Presiding

Judge R. R. Henderson came up from Cumberland Monday morning and opened the December term of court. The following persons were drawn as members of the grand jury: Jacob R. Pope, Vernon Hove, Charles W. Ream, John T. Browning, Floyd C. Stahl, Joel L. Kinsinger, Charles J. Sechler, Croner L. Calhoun, Thomas J. Crowe, Edward L. Miller, George D. Browning, George T. Miller, James N. Ross, Robert Lathrum, Jonas Schrock, Elliott C. Harvey, Sam. W. Bittinger, George W. Margroff, David O. Roth, Bradford Blocher, Asa L. Bittinger, F. P. Layman, and George W. Legge, Sr., who was named as foreman.

Judge Henderson excused the petit jury at the close of the calling of the docket until Monday.

There are 21 cases on the original docket and 13 on the appeal docket. A majority of the cases were marked continued.

One hundred and twenty witnesses were summoned to appear before the grand jury, which may be discharged today.

There are 12 prisoners in jail awaiting trial.

Ex-judge Ferdinand Williams and Attorney R. T. Semmes, of Cumberland, attended court Monday.

ATTENTION FARMERS

The B. & O. Railroad Company will run a special Farmers' train, in charge of experts from the Western Maryland College. This train will be of special interest to farmers who want to make the most out of their farms. Stops in Garrett county will be as follows:

Swanton, Friday, Dec. 5, 9 to 11 a.m.
Deer Park, 12 m. to 2 p. m.
Oakland, 2:30 to 5 p. m.

We urge the farmers to make it a point to visit this train. It is highly spoken of by those who have seen the exhibit. Remember the date, tomorrow.

Attention Owls.

The Oakland Nest of the Order of Owls will hold an important meeting Saturday night, at 8 o'clock. The election of officers and other matters will come before the meeting. A full attendance of the membership is earnestly requested.

HOW TO USE THE PARCEL POST.

Instructions As To The Best Method of Sending Parcel Post Packages.

Instructions as to the best method of sending parcel post packages, have been issued by the Postoffice Department which reads:

Parcel Post Packages cannot be registered, but any package may be insured against loss in an amount equivalent to its actual value, not to exceed $25.00 on payment of 5 cents fee, or not to exceed $50.00 on payment of 10 cents fee.

Any person desiring to send an insured parcel will call at the postoffice and secure an insurance tag, fill in the name and address of the addresse in two places on the Tag, write the sender's name and address on the back of the tag, state the actual value of the parcel in the space provided for that purpose, securely tie the tag to the parcel, present same at the window in postoffice and get receipt.

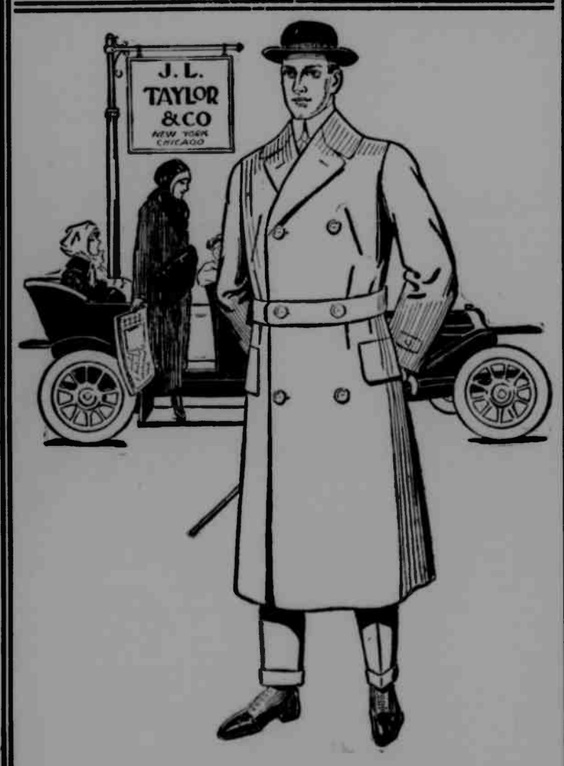
The sender's name and address must also be placed on each parcel.

The weight limit and postage is the same on an insured parcel as it is on an ordinary parcel; except the insurance fee as stated above.

Writing of a personal nature must not be inclosed in parcel post packages, but the following inscription may be written or stamped on the outside wrapper on packages as "Do Not Open Until Christmas," or a similar direction.

Strong cord and heavy paper should be used in the wrapping of parcel post packages, and those that contain glass or anything easily broken should bear the inscription "Fragile, and those containing articles likely to spoil should be should be marked "Perishable."

Figures of recent daily traffic through the terminal postoffices show that an enormous parcel post business is being done. Twenty large baggage cars, with 14,000 sacks of parcels originating in New York and aujacent territory are hauled out of that city alone every day by the railroads.



Christmas parcels should be mailed as early as possible.

FOR SALE.

The undersigned offers his farm for sale. It is located in Garrett county, Md., four miles west of Piedmont, faces the B. & O. railroad. It is improved by a good eight room house, good barn and all necessary outbuildings. Large apple orchard. Farm is well watered and is in good condition. Will sell at private or public sale. At the meeting of the School Commissioners and County Superintendents' Association of Maryland in Baltimore December 4 and 5, several features of public school legislation proposed by the State Board of Education will be discussed.

Dr. M. Bates Stephens, State Superintendent of Education, said today that in the educational rally campaign which has extended generally over the State, with massmeetings of patrons and pupils in various counties, and at several of which United States Commissioner of Education P. P. Claxton and national and State officials, including Governor Goldsborough, have spoken, the general trend of the proposed legislation which will be laid before the General Assembly in January has been brought to the attention of the taxpayers.

One feature of the program, in which general interest is being taken, is the proposition to fix a State tax rate of 16 cents for elementary schools, and to take care of the expenses of approved high schools, normal schools, the State Board of Education and other items by a special tax or appropriation. Under the present plan there is a levy of 16½ cents for the public schools, out of the proceeds of which about $225,000 is taken for normal and high schools and other purposes before the Comptroller makes the distribution to the city and counties of school money. A slight increase in the State tax rate would enable the school system to accomplish a greater work.

In the letter sent to leading taxpayers and patrons in the counties before the holding of the educational rallies Dr. Stephens directs special attention to the fact "that all the school education 95 per cent. of the children in your county receive is obtained at the public school." As the graduates of the high schools form but a very small proportion of the pupils enrolled, it is upon the elementary school that the burden of the system of State education falls.

The strengthening of the teaching force in the elementary schools is another feature in the proposed legislation, and some of the school bills will require all new teachers appointed after 1915 to be especially trained for the work; provide a State supervisor of rural schools; raise salaries of experienced elementary teachers to at least $600 annually; require county tax rates for schools to be not less than 30 cents; authorize county school boards to send teachers to a six-week summer school instead of holding a teachers' institute; give county school boards authority to establish in one approved high school in each county a teachers' training course as an elective, to cover the last year of the high school course and one year after graduation.

Married.

KIRKPATRICK--GLAZE.

Harry Kirkpatrick, of Indiana, and Miss Nellie J. Glaze, of Oakland, were married Monday evening, August 19th, at the parsonage of St. Mark's Lutheran church, Oakland, by the Rev. Edmund Manges. The marriage was kept secret until this time. Mr. and Mrs. Kirkpatrick are residing in Cumberland, at 55 Decatur street. Mr. Kirkpatrick is a brakeman on the B. & O. railroad.

WILLIAMS-WILT.

Thanksgiving At Oakland.

Oakland feasted and gave thanks last Thursday in celebration of the annual Thanksgiving holiday. The celebration was general and at the same time of a quiet nature. It was observed as a holiday and was marked by a general suspension of business. Business houses were closed all day and holiday hours were observed at the postffice.

The weather was disagreeable, a heavy mist or fog hanging over the city throughout the day, and the streets and sidewalks were muddy, but nevertheless the day was enjoyably spent by hundreds of Oaklandites.

The union services at St. Mark's Lutheran church was well attended, the audience room was comfortably filled. The singing was good and Dr. Moore's sermon was practical, appropiate and greatly enjoyed.

At a number of homes invited guests gathered with the family around the table and partook of the Thanksgiving feast prepared for them.

A New Issue of Stamps.

Postmaster General Burleson has authorized a new issue of stamps of the 7, 9, 12, 20 and 30 cent denominations, to meet the needs of the parcel post business. With these new stamps, and the smaller denominations already in use, nearly every amount from 1 cent to 60 cents can be made up with not more than two stamps, thus saving the annoyance of so many stamps on the parcel.

RABBIT-HUNTING IS VERY POPULAR

Requires Good Shot And A High Order Of Intelligence These Days.

"Rabbit hunting is among the best of sports in which the bagging of small game is involved," said a habitual participator in autumn recreations afield and in woodland covers. "By rabbit hunting, though, I don't mean hiding with a gun at the edge of old wood roads at dusk and from ambush shooting the unsuspecting game.

"Nor do I mean following the tracts of a rabbit on new fallen snow until they lead to the refuge of some friendly stone wall or hollow stump or tangled roots of a fallen tree or scraggly brush pile, there to dig out the maker of the feathery footprints and kill it by a thump on the back of its neck. Nor is the sending of a trained ferret into the rabbit shelters to drive the hiding creatures out in big-eyed terror to the cudgel or the whippet of the ferret's waiting owner.

"It is none of those that I mean when I hymn the rabbit hunt. The exciting chase before the well-trained hound is quite a different affair and no sportsman who has once indulged himself in it will ever again treat the rabbit hunt with scorn.

"The part of the dog in the rabbit hunt is in itself enough to enlarge the sport to a point worthy of any sportsman's consideration. Then to kill a rabbit while it is flitting before the dog through the brush or across the narrow space in some hazy vista is a feat which tries the skill of the best and truest of wing shots. The gunner will be amazed to find, the first time he goes out to pit his skill against the tactics of the rabbit, how many of the fleet little cottontails he dosen't get.

"With a gun that has no chock in its barrels—for a rabbit need not be bored through and through to bring it to bag—and with not more than four drams of powder back of a charge for No 4 shot, a hunter who can shoot quick and judge well the course of the game as his beagle sings it along to him from cover ought to be able to go out of an afternoon and return by supper-time with his bag of rabbits up to the law's limit, and he will have had exciting and blood-quickening sport.

"The beagle is the best dog for rabbits. This hound is short of leg but long of wind. He won't leave the rabbit trail to follow the track of a fox—and even in the country on the city's very threshold there is much cover yet that attracts and keeps Reynard in home and foraging to his liking.

"And your beagle takes his time in the chase. He dosen't rush the game, as the foxhound is likely to do. He is at once tenacious and true. And the music of his voice in the chace is sweeter yet than the bay of the foxhound, mellow and far-reaching as that is."

Obituary.

Herman Beckman, of Altamont, Md., was born April 15th, in the province of Hanover, Germany, and died Nov. 6th, 1913 aged 85 years, 6 months and 21 days.

Brother Beckman was 20 years of age when he came to this country and lived about 40 years on the farm where he died. His first wife preceded him to the Spirit World 22 years ago. Afterwards he married Miss Sarah Klipstein who survives him. He had an only child which died in early childhood.

Mr. Beckman was baptized in infancy, catechized and confirmed in the Lutheran church in his youth. He remained faithful to his church to the end of life. He was a kind husband, a loving friend, a helpful neighbor and an honest and upright citizen.

He has one brother living in Germany and two sisters in this country. Mrs. Schmidtt, of Thayerville, mother of Mrs. William Kale, and her brothers and sisters and a Mrs. Roll in Red House neighborhood. He was buried in the home cemetery on his farm by the side of his first wife. The pastor of the Oakland Lutheran church had charge of the funeral services. M.

MANIA FOR LEGISLATING.

More Than 12,000 Bills and Resolutions Introduced In Present Extra Session.

Called together solely to consider two or three important measures, there have nevertheless been introduced in the present extra session of Congress more than 12,000 bills and resolutions. This will illustrate America's passion for legislation. About this time one year ago in the regular session of the Sixty-second Congress, 35,638 public and private bills and resolutions has been introduced, while only 350 of these became public laws. Such wholesale introduction of foolish and ill-considered bills doubtless make a brave showing in the eyes of the home constituency concerning the great activity of their representatives in Congress, but even here the sham may be easily seen through.

If ever the country needed rest from legislative agitation, it is now. If business could be allowed to adjust itself in peace to the laws we now have without fear that the present status might be changed over night, the country would enter upon a new era of prosperity.—Leslie's Weekly.

Some Red Cross Seal Figures.

Few people have any idea of the magnitude of the Red Cross Christmas Seal Campaign. This year over 100, 000,000 seals have been printed and distributed. If placed end-to-end these seals would extend nearly 2,400 miles, or practically from New York to Salt Lake City. They have been sent to over 25,000 different agents and will be sold and handled by an army of not less than 100,000 volunteers, including men, women and children. Millions of advertisitg circulars have been scattered throughout the country, and so thouroughly has the advertising campaign been organized that it is doubtful if many people in the more populous State of the country will not have the Red Cross Seal and its mission in the prevention of Tuberculosis. It is hoped that at least 50,000,000 seals may be sold this year. The principle upon which the sale of seals is based is that every cent except what little is needed to cover the actual cost of printing and handling shall be spent for tuberculosis work in the community where the seals are sold.

Accidently Shot.

Thanksgiving day Messrs. Harper Bartlett, Dr. B. S Selby and his brother E. G. Selby, of Cincinati and Bowie Johnson, of Oakland, went rabbit hunting, and while in the woods near Pat Rodeheavers, the four first mentioned gentlemen scared up a rabbit which ran in the direction of Mr. Johnson who shot at it, the load striking a large stone glanced upward and some 50 shot entered the back, neck and side of Dr. Selby and the back of E. G. Selby. The day was a gloomy, dark day, and much fog. Mr. Johnson could not see the gentlemen, did not know where they were when he fired off his gun. The party returned to Oakland and had the shot or as many of them as could be, taken out.

Doctor Selby was able to be in his office the next morning and attend to business. It is needless to say that the rabbit escaped and as far as is known without any harm.

Oakland High School Notes.

AT ANNAPOLIS

F. E. COX ACQUITTED.

Former Game Warden Cleared On First Of Five Counts.

Franklin E. Cox, of Somerset county, the former deputy State game warden, who was removed from office by Governor Goldsborough, was acquitted on charges of misappropriation of State funds by fraudulent vouchers and false pretenses to the State Comptroller. The case had been on trial for two days and was given to the jury after every legal point had been bitterly contested by Robert Moss and James W. Owens, counsel for Mr. Cox, and State's Attorney Nicholas H. Green, who conducted the prosecution. The jury, of which Frank O. Spriggs, a young farmer of the Third district, was foreman, remained out about one hour before reaching a verdict. Mr. Cox was indicted on five charges. The count upon which he was tried was that of presenting a false voucher for $20, the sum purporting to be for badges for deputy wardens, which the prosecution claimed were never purchased. Mr. Cox took the stand in his own defense. He had no other witnesses. He told the jury he had nothing to conceal. He could not tell exactly when he had drawn a voucher for $20, although the indictment alleged that it was on January 14. He admitted he had provided for the purchase of badges, as well as drawn money for other expenses of his office on different occasions, but stated that some of the transactions, in the way of payments, were made through his assistant, Talbott Denmead. One disputed point over which the defense made strong contention was the apparent conflict between the indictment and the bill of particulars. Mr. Cox was indicted by the grand jury in the name of "Franklin E. Cox," whereas in the bill he was referred to as "Franklin E. Cox, game warden." It is understood the State will press the other charges against Mr. Cox, which are of a similar nature.

HAD WINE FOR MIDDIES.

Colored Man Arrested By Mayor Strange, Of Annapolis.

Mayor James F. Strange, of Annapolis, caught a negro in the act of furnishing a bottle of wine to two midshipmen and put him under arrest. The midshipmen ran away, but Mr. Strange believes he can identify one of them. Under a State law, it is a serious offense to sell or give intoxicants to midshipmen. The matter was reported to Superintendent Gibbons, and that official said that he would make every effort to find the midshipmen who tried to get the wine. Both Superintendent Gibbons and Secretary Daniels have strong views on the subject of midshipmen drinking, but it has been a long time since they have been called upon to deal with a case of this nature.

TO REVISE TRAFFIC LAWS.

Governor Names Commission To Make Needed Changes.

Governor Goldsborough announced that he is forming a commission to revise the present traffic laws of the State. The Governor has sent invitations to the following to serve on the commission: Judge Carroll T. Bond, Daniel C. Ammidon, Dr. H. M. Rowe, D. Lindley Sloan, of Cumberland, and William A. Kemp, of Easton. As soon as acceptances are received he will call a meeting of the commission.

To the First Governor.

A movement is on foot in Frederick to form an association for the purpose of erecting a monument to Thomas Johnson, the first governor of Maryland. The plan is to have the association raise at least $10,000, and the intention of those promoting the project now is to have the legislature appropriate this amount for the monument to be erected in Mount Olivet Cemetery. In this cemetery is a $10,000 monument erected to the memory of Francis Scott Key and another will be erected to the memory of Barbara Fritchie, whose remains were recently reinterred in this cemetery.

THE SAYRES AS ARTFUL DODGERS

Cleverly Put Aboard Ship Without Being Seen.

ELUDE THE WAITING CROWD

The President Was In the Dark and the Captain Was Warned But the Bridal Pair Were Finally Found.

New York. — The elusive White House bride and bridegroom—Mr. and Mrs. Francis B. Sayre—avoiding the gaily decorated gangway and bunting bedecked pathway arranged for them, slipped quietly on the liner George Washington through the second cabin Saturday and sailed away for Europe on their honeymoon. A great crowd that gathered on the docks at Hoboken was keenly disappointed at not seeing them, and even President Wilson did not know of his daughter's and son-in-law's arrival on the ship until he found them in their cabin five minutes before sailing time.

Mr. Wilson, accompanied by Miss Eleanor Wilson and Dr. Cary T. Grayson, reached the boat half an hour before the George Washington was due to start. The ship's officers stood at attention as he came on deck, and the band played The Star-Spangled Banner. The crowd cheered. There was a wait of 15 minutes for the Sayres. Nobody seemed to know where they were. The captain of the liner was growing nervous.

Finally, the President entered the suite assigned to the pair and to his surprise there they were, with a few friends and many flowers. The band struck up Mendelssohn's Wedding March as the hawsers were cast off.

Among the floral pieces presented to Mr. and Mrs. Sayre was a cluster of American Beauty roses, given by a committee representing the Hoboken (N. J.) letter-carriers on behalf of all letter-carriers in the United States.

Washington. — Letters from Mrs. Francis Bowes Sayre thanking members of the House and Senate for their wedding gifts were received at the Capitol. Letters were addressed to Senators Clarke and Martine, who were in charge of the movement for a present from senators. A letter to Speaker Clark, written the day before the White House wedding, was read to the House. It follows:

"May I not express to you very warmly my deep feeling of the honor the members of the House have paid in presenting me with the beautiful diamond necklace which was brought to me yesterday in a setting worthy of its beauty. I shall treasure this gift all my life, not only as an evidence of generosity, but of singular courtesy and thoughtfulness on the part of yourself and the other members of the House. I beg that you will convey to the members my sense of deep obligation and lasting pleasure. Mr. Sayre joins me in warm appreciation and thanks."

ARMY CONQUERS NAVY.

Cadets Spring Surprise In Annual Football Struggle.

New York.—Breaking in upon the conservative East, a Western brand of football swept across the Polo Grounds here and the Navy goat, bewildered and blinking at the dazzling array of plays and passes it had not learned to eat, was prone upon the field, while the Army mule kicked its heels high in the air and celebrated the first victory over the fighting forces from Annapolis since 1908. The Army defeated the Navy 22 to 9, in one of the most spectacular games of the year. Forty-five thousand persons, including President Wilson, his Cabinet and high officials of the government service, as well as foreign diplomats, cheered on the two teams as they bitterly fought out the issue.

MORE WARSHIPS SENT TO MEXICO

Villa's Troops to Attack Federal Stronghold at Chihuahua.

NO ALARM OVER TAMPICO.

Constitutionalist Forces Are Reported To Be Advancing Toward Tampico From Victoria.

El Paso, Texas.—The movement of Gen. Francisco Villa's troops to the south to attack the Federal stronghold at Chihuahua was begun when nearly 1,000 men under Gen. Rosallo Hernandez departed from Juarez.

They accompanied a work train used to repair the railroad line which was destroyed in places below Juarez by the Federals when they retreated southward after the Tierra Blanca battle.

Rebel leaders believe they will have a fight with the Federals at Villa Ahumada, 83 miles south of Juarez, as the Federal troops defeated at Tierra Blanca are marooned there.

Villa said he had plenty of ammunition for a field fight or for a siege of the State capital. He said he captured 1,122 shells in the recent fighting, besides 1,300 rifles and 23,000 cartridges.

Villa stated that not more than 60 of his men were killed.

Washington Gets No Word From Lind Or Fletcher.

Washington.—Secretary Bryan has no official communication from Rear Admiral Fletcher or John Lind, the special American envoy in Mexico, relating to conditions in the oil fields near Tampico.

The fact that no report had been received since the cable from Admiral Fletcher relating to conditions in the vicinity of Tuxpan several days ago was regarded in official circles as an assurance that there was no immediate cause for alarm.

Secretary Daniels early in the day issued an order directing the fourth division of the Atlantic fleet, now in the Mediterranean, to proceed to the east coast of Mexico via Guantanamo. The ships to make the trip are the Connecticut, Kansas and Ohio, ordered to replace the Louisiana, Michigan and New Hampshire, now in Mexican waters. The division left Mediterranean December 1, and should arrive off Vera Cruz about two weeks later. Rear-Admiral Badger, commander-in-chief of the Atlantic fleet, will direct this maneuver.

BLOW UP TROOP TRAIN.

Mexican Rebels Kill Three Hundred Federal Soldiers.

Mexico City.—A troop train carrying 300 Federals was blown up by dynamite near Laventura, on the National Railway, south of Satillo. The rebels are said to have shot and killed every one of the soldiers who escaped the explosion. About 100 women, known as soldaderos, who were on the train, were also killed, as were several children.

TRANSPORT PRAIRIE SAILS.

Orders Naming Pensacola May Be Changed By Wireless.

Philadelphia. — With 800 marines and a full crew on board, the transport Prairie left the Philadelphia Navy Yard at 1 o'clock Thursday for Southern waters. The transport carries stores and ammunition for a three months' cruise.

GAINED $76,406,657 IN A YEAR.

Personal Property Assessment In Pennsylvania $1,402,511,272.

Harrisburg, Pa.—Personal property assessed for State taxes in Pennsylvania in 1913 aggregated $1,402,511,272, according to figures made public at the Auditor-General's Department. This is an increase of $76,406,657 over 1912.

MRS. PANKHURST GOES HOME.

Says She Collected $20,000 On Her Lecturing Tour.

New York.—Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, England's militant suffragette, sailed for home, taking with her, she said, $20,000 collected during her recent lecture tour in this country. She will devote the money to the cause of woman suffrage in England. Mrs. Pankhurst said that on her arrival in Plymouth she expected to be arrested and sent to jail to serve the remainder of a sentence uncompleted because of her hunger strike.

MOST EXPENSIVE OF ALL DINNERS

Thanksgiving Day Has Become a High Priced Holiday.

MEALS NEVER SO COSTLY.

Not In 25 Years Has the Average American Been Obliged To Expend So Much For His Stomach.

Washington.—Thanksgiving dinner was the most expensive meal the average American has eaten during the last 25 years. It cost from 35 to 100 per cent. more than it did 10 years ago, and from 15 to 50 per cent. more than many Thanksgiving Days during the last six years, according to recently gathered government statistics.

Thousands of turkeys spoiled by having been shipped to market during the unseasonably warm wave which overspread the country a week ago; the drouth of last summer which shortened crop yields, particularly white potatoes; an alleged cold-storage combination, which Attorney General McReynolds now is investigating to find if millions of dozens of eggs and millions of pounds of dairy products have been withheld from the market by middlemen to force high prices, and the steady soaring of prices generally during the last decade are among the contributing causes to which economists point.

The great American hen, however, is somewhat responsible for the extraordinarily high price of eggs, according to Department of Agriculture officials, who are reluctant to place all the blame upon cold storage. Heat and drouth of the last summer, they say, caused the hens to stop laying sooner than usual. As to turkey, the rise in price seems to have extended all along the route to the consumer, beginning at the barnyard, where the farmer received an average of 15 cents a pound for his birds, about half a cent more than he got last year. But turkey is not a Thanksgiving bird at all, according to the experts.

"The Lord never intended turkey to be the Thanksgiving food of the country generally," says Dr. Mary E. Pennington, the expert in food research in the Federal Bureau of Chemistry. "Christmas is the time for turkey. Green goose is the Thanksgiving bird, and is generally used in Europe, where St. Martin's Day is celebrated about this time of the year. In colonial days in New England, where the winter season sets in early, it was different and more favorable to turkeys, but such conditions do not prevail over the United States as a whole."

MARLBOROUGHS REUNITED.

Duke and Duchess Bridge Over Differences.

London.—It is learned from high authority that as soon as certain matters can be arranged, without attracting too much notoriety, the Duke and Duchess of Marlborough will start their lives anew and resume together their recognized position in society. Public indications are not lacking to support this, and lead to the inference that the serious differences that caused the Duke and Duchess unofficially to dissolve matrimonial partnership several years ago, are being bridged over.

NEWS BULLETINS ON TRAIN.

Received By Wireless While Going Sixty Miles An Hour.

Scranton, Pa.—News bulletins received by wireless telegraph were displayed on a moving passenger train on the Lackawanna Railroad. The train was traveling 60 miles an hour between this city and Binghamton, N. Y. A Scranton newspaper sent 250 words from the Lackawanna wireless station. One of the dispatches was on the battle in Mexico, another regarding the threatened strike in Schenectady and another from Washington relating to the Mexican situation.

TERMS TO BEGIN JANUARY 1.

Radical Changes Proposed In Bill Now In Senate.

Washington.—Efforts will be made early in the new session of Congress for a favorable report from the Senate Judiciary Committee on the Shafroth resolution to begin the terms of President, Vice-President, senators and representatives on the first Monday of January immediately following election. The resolution was reported favorably some time ago by a subcommittee, and has been under consideration by the entire committee.

GROSS ATLANTIC IN AEROPLANE

Arrangements Being Made in London and New York.

PLANNED BY GLEN CURTIS.

To Be An Anglo-American Venture and Financed By a Prominent New York Sportsman—To Start In August.

Paris.—Preparations are being made in London and New York for an aeroplane flight across the Atlantic Ocean, to take place next August. The project is being planned by Glenn Curtiss, the American aviator; John Dale Cooper, one of his chief assistants, and an Englishman, whose identity has not been made known, but who is said to be a leading British aviator. A prominent New York financier and sportsman is furnishing the financial backing.

The plans in their present stage call for a flight from the Newfoundland Coast to the Irish Coast. The machine decided upon is a hydro-aeroplane, which has been designed, but not as yet constructed. This machine will embody both American and English ideas and the flight in every sense will be an Anglo-American venture. It was said that when the attempt is made Americans and British warships will line the route to be taken to aid the aviators in case the flight is not successful.

Fuel sufficient to last 36 hours will be carried and it is planned to complete the flight in this time. The machine is expected to average between 65 and 70 miles an hour.

The chief plans for the undertaking have fallen upon Mr. Curtiss, who has made a thorough examination of the conditions and he is confident that the trans-Atlantic flight will be made within the next 12 months. He has looked up the weather records for the past 20 years and found August to be the most favorable month from a meteorological standpoint.

ASKS $306,000,000 FOR MAILS.

Burleson's Estimate For Next Year Largest In History.

Washington. — Estimates totaling $306,000,000 for the postal service for the next fiscal year have been submitted by Postmaster-General Burleson to Congress. This total, if embodied as framed in accordance with the growth of the Postoffice Department, would make the greatest appropriation ever made in a single appropriation measure. Hearings on the administrative provisions of the bill, together with bills recently introduced by Chairman Moon, of the House Committee on Postoffice, regarding parcel post, indemnification, extension of money order paying business in every postoffice and other matters will be held by the committee this week. The estimates contemplate a substantial extension of the parcel post service, which branch is credited with a large part of the surplus of $4,500,000 earned by the postal service for the fiscal year just closed. One-cent postage promises to be one of the live issues to be fought out in the regular session of Congress.

TO TAX SINGLE BLESSEDNESS.

France Will Put Up Rate On Spinsters and Bachelors.

Paris.—All French spinsters and bachelors over 30 years old, unless they have at least three persons dependent on them, are to be subject to an increase of 20 per cent. in the income tax imposed by the new bill now under consideration. The Senate committee in charge of the bill introduced this clause when it terminated its examination of the measure which has taken four years to prepare.

MRS. GAY'S SLAYER TO HANG.

Lawyers Will Appeal On Temporary Insanity Plea.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Burr Harris, the young negro convicted 10 days ago of murdering Mrs. Rebecca P. Gay, the Christian Science practitioner, who was beaten to death September 26, was sentenced to be hanged on a date yet to be set. Harris' attorney filed notice of appeal. Harris admitted the crime when captured and pleaded temporary insanity at his trial.

TOLMAN MUST SERVE 6 MONTHS.

Sentence Imposed On "Loan Shark King" Affirmed.

New York.—Daniel H. Tolman, "king of the loan sharks," must serve six months in the penitentiary for usury. In so deciding the appellate division upheld the lower court which imposed sentence. Tolman based his appeal on the ground that the act of usury was committed by a woman employe without his knowledge or consent.

UPSIDE DOWN WITH PASSENGER.

Garros Accomplishes This Feat First Time In Monoplane.

Villacoublay, France.—Roland G. Garros accomplished for the first time in a monoplane a flight head downward carrying a passenger. During the maneuver the machine made several loops.

BANK ROBBERS GET $2,900.

Vault At Ellenboro, N. C., Blown Open, and Thieves Escape.

Charlotte, N. C.—Robbers blew the safe in the Bank of Ellenboro, a small town 50 miles west of here, and got away with $2,900 in cash, leaving $7.70 behind. Citizens say nine explosions were heard. One man approached the bank upon hearing the explosions and was driven back at the point of guns. The robbers constructed a defense of heavy wire fencing in front of the bank. The vault was entirely destroyed.

COMMERCIAL

Weekly Review of Trade and Market Reports.

Bradstreet's says:

"Quieter conditions rule in trade and industry. Unseasonably mild weather has checked demand for winter wearing apparel. Still dry goods and kindred lines report a good volume of orders for quick delivery, and those trades make more favorable comparisons with last year than any other lines. Holiday trade reports are cheerful.

"In industrial circles the tendency has been toward increased quiet, partially because of the continuance of lagging demand for iron and steel and other metals.

"The most important labor trouble of the week, that at Schenectady, involves 6,000 electrical workers, but the trouble is one of unionism and not of wages. The year's strikes to date involve fewer people than a year ago, and the aggregate is far below the maximum of 1903 and other disturbed years.

"Business failures for the week were 279, which compares with 247 in 1912."

SYNOPSIS.

Scarlett, an American soldier of fortune in the employ of the French Imperial Police at the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian war, is ordered to arrest John Buckhurst, a leader of the Communists and suspected of having stolen the French crown jewels. While searching for Buckhurst, Scarlett is ordered to arrest Countess de Vassart and her group of socialists and escort them to the Belgian border. Scarlett finds Sylvia Elven of the Odeon disguised as a peasant and carries her to La Trappe where the countess and her friends are assembled. All are arrested. The countess saves Scarlett from a fatal fall from the roof of the house. He denounces Buckhurst as the leader of the Reds and the countess conducts him to where Buckhurst is secreted. German Uhlans descend on the place and Buckhurst escapes during the melee. Scarlett is wounded. He recovers consciousness in the countess' house at Morsbronn, where he is cared for by the countess. A fierce battle is fought in the streets between French and Prussian soldiers. Buckhurst professes repentence and returns the crown jewels to Scarlett. He declares he will give himself up to the authorities. Scarlett doubts his sincerity. Buckhurst urges the countess to go to Paradise. Buckhurst admits that he receives pay from the Prussians for information which he does not give. He secures passports to the French lines for Scarlett, the countess and himself. Scarlett reports on the secret service in Paris and finds Mornac, shadow of the emperor, in charge. He deposits the crown jewels and later, when making a detailed report, finds that pebbles have been substituted for the real stones. Speed, a comrade in the service, warns Scarlett that Mornac is dangerous. He also informs him that all the government treasure is being transported to the coast for shipment out of the country. Scarlett and Speed escape to join a circus. The circus arrives at Paradise. An order is received by the mayor calling the citizens to arms. Jacqueline, daughter of the Lizard, offers to join the circus to give exhibitions in the character of a mermaid. Scarlett makes friends with the Lizard.

CHAPTER XIII.—Continued.

With mallet, hammer, saw, and screw-driver I worked until noon, maturing my plans all the while. These plans would take the last penny in the treasury and leave us in debt several thousand francs. But it was win or go to smash now, and personally I have always preferred a tremendous smash to a slow and oozy fizzle.

A big pot of fragrant soup was served to the company at luncheon; and it amused me to see Jacqueline troop into the tent with the others and sit down with her bit of bread and her bowl of broth.

"How is she getting on?" I called across to Speed."

"The child is simply startling," he said, in English. "She is not afraid of anything. She and Miss Crystal have been doing that hair-raising 'flying swing' without rehearsal!"

Byram's buoyancy had returned in a measure. He sat in his shirt sleeves at the head of the table, vigorously sopping his tartine in his soup, and, mouth full, leaned forward, chewing and listening to the conversation around him.

"I'll say one thing," observed Byram, with dignity; "if ever I git out of this darn continong with my circus, I'll recoöperate in the undulatin' medders an' fyful vales of the United States. Hereafter that country will continue to remain good enough for me."

Now that I had stirred up this beehive and set it swarming again, I had no inclination to turn drone. Yet I remembered my note to the Countess de Vassart and her reply. So about four o'clock I made the best toilet I could in my only other suit of clothes, and walked out of the bustling camp into the square, where the mossy fountain splashed under the oaks and the children of Paradise were playing.

One thing I noticed as I crossed the disused moat of the Chateau de Trecourt on a permanent bridge. There was a man, lying belly down in the bracken, watching me; and as I walked into the court I tried to remember where I had seen his face before.

There was a soft whirring in the air like the sound of a humming bird close by; it came from a spinning-wheel, and grew louder as a servant admitted me into the house and guided me to a sunny room facing the fruit garden.

Suddenly the melody ceased, and a young Bretonne girl appeared in the doorway, courtesying to me and saying in perfect English: "How do you do, Mr. Scarlett?"

The girl was Mademoiselle Sylvia Elven, the marvelously clever actress from the Odeon, the same young woman who had played the Alsacienne at La Trappe, as perfectly in voice and costume as she now played the Bretonne.

"I only came to renew an old and deeply valued friendship. I am going back to my flax now. And, by-the-way," she said, languidly, "is there in your intellectual circus company a young gentleman whose name is Eyre?"

"Kelly Eyre? Yes," I said, sulkily.

"Ah. Would you take a message to Mistaire Kelly Eyre for me?" she asked, sweetly.

I said that I would.

"Then please say that: 'On Sunday the book stores are closed in Paris.'"

"Very well, mademoiselle."

She courtesied and vanished.

I fancied, after a few moments, that I heard the distant thudding of a horse's hoofs; soon I was sure of it, and rose to my feet expectantly, just as a flushed young girl in a riding-habit entered the room and gave me her gloved hand.

I looked at her earnestly, scarcely understanding that she was saying she was glad I had come, that she had waited for me, that she had wanted to see me, that she had wished to tell me how deeply our tragic experience at La Trappe and in Morsbronn had impressed her.

"But come out to my garden," she said, smiling, and stripping off her little buff gauntlets. "There we will have a tea a l'Anglaise, and sunshine, and a long, long, satisfying talk."

She led the way along a path under the apricots to a seat against a sunny wall.

"First of all," she said, impulsively, "I know your life—all of it in minute particular. Are you astonished?"

"No, madame," I replied; "Mornac showed you my dossier."

"That is true," she said, with a troubled look of surprise.

I smiled. "As for Mornac," I began, but she interrupted me.

"Ah, Mornac! Do you suppose I believed him? In your dossier I read the tragedy of a gentleman."

"Do you know," said I, "that I am now a performer in a third-rate traveling circus?"

"I think that is very sad," she said, sweetly. "With no hope?"

"Hope?" With every hope," I said smiling. "My name is not my own, but it must serve me to my end, and I shall wear it threadbare and leave it to no one."

"Is there no hope?" she asked, quietly.

Suddenly the ghost of all I had lost rose before me with her words—rose at last after all these years, towering, terrible, free once more to fill the days with loathing and my nights with hell eternal, . . . after all these years!

"There is every hope," I said, "save the hopes of youth—the hope of a woman's love, and of that happiness which comes through love. I am a man past thirty, madame—thirty-five.

"My Name Is Not My Own, but It Must Serve Me to My End."

I believe my dossier makes it. It has taken me fifteen years to bury my youth. Let us talk of Mornac."

"Yes, we will talk of Mornac," she said, gently.

So with infinite pains I went back and traced for her the career of Buckhurst, sparing her nothing. She sat motionless, her face like cold marble, as I carefully gathered the threads of the plot and gently twitched that one which galvanized the mask of Mornac.

"Mornac!" she stammered, aghast.

I showed her why Buckhurst desired to come to Paradise; I showed her why Mornac had initiated her into the mysteries of my dossier, taking that infernal precaution, although he had every reason to believe he had me practically in prison, with the keys in his own pocket.

She told me that Buckhurst came to her house here in Paradise early in September; that while in Paris, pondering on what I had said, she had determined to withdraw herself absolutely from all organized socialistic associations during the war; that she believed she could do the greatest good by living a natural and cheerful life, by maintaining the position that birth and fortune had given her, and by using that portion and fortune for the benefit of those less fortunate.

This she had told Buckhurst, and the rascal appeared to agree with her so thoroughly that, when Doctor Delmont and Professor Tavernier arrived, they also applauded the choice she made of Buckhurst as distributer of money, food and clothing to the provincial hospitals, now crowded to suffocation with the wreck of battle.

Then a strange thing occurred. Doctor Delmont and Professor Tavernier disappeared without any explanation. They had started for St. Nazaire with a sum of money—twenty thousand francs, locked in the private strong-box of the countess—to be distributed among the soldiers of Chanzy; and they had never returned.

In the light of what she had learned from me, she feared that Buckhurst had won them over.

"But," I said patiently, "you have not yet told me where he is."

"I don't know," she said. "A week ago a dreadful creature came here to see Buckhurst; they went across the moor toward the semaphore and stood for a long while looking at the cruiser which is anchored off Groix. Then Buckhurst came back and prepared for a journey. He said he was going to Tours to confer with the Red Cross. I don't know where he went. He took all the money for the general Red Cross fund."

"When did he say he would return?"

"He said in two weeks.

"That is good news," I said, gayly. "But tell me one thing: Do you trust Mademoiselle Elven?"

"Yes, indeed—indeed!" she cried horrified.

"Very well," said I, smiling. "Only for the sake of caution—extra, and even perhaps useless caution—say nothing of this matter to her, nor to any living soul save me."

"I promise," she said, faintly.

"Now that Mornac is not even a pawn in the game—so, indeed, I begin to believe he never really was, but has been from the first a dupe of Buckhurst—it is the duty of every honest man to watch Buckhurst and warn the authorities that he possibly has designs on the crown jewels of France, which that cruiser yonder is all ready to bear away to Saigon.

"How he proposes to attempt such a robbery I can't imagine. I don't want to denounce him to General Chanzy or Aurelles de Palladine, because the conspiracy is too widely spread and too dangerous to be defeated by the capture of one man, even though he be the head of it.

"What I want is to entrap the entire band; and that can only be done by watching Buckhurst, not arresting him. Meanwhile, as long as we stay in Paradise we both are your devoted servants, and we beg the privilege of serving you."

"You ask the privilege of serving me," she said. "You could serve me best by giving me your friendship."

I was silent.

"Have you never given women your friendship?" she asked.

"Not in fifteen years—nor asked theirs."

She sprang up and caught both my hands in her ungloved hands. "Won't you take my friendship—and give me yours—my friend?"

"Yes," I said, slowly. As in a dream I bent forward; she abandoned her hands to me, and I touched a woman's hands with my lips for the first time in fifteen years.

"In all devotion and loyalty—and gratitude," I said.

"And in friendship—say it!"

"In friendship."

"Now you may go—if you desire to. When will you come again?"

"When may I?"

"When you will."

CHAPTER XIV.

The Path of the Lizard.

About nine o'clock the next morning an incident occurred which might have terminated my career in one way, and did, ultimately, end it in another.

I had been exercising my lions and putting them through their paces and had noticed no unusual insubordination among them, when suddenly, Timour Melek, a big Algerian lion, flew at me without the slightest provocation or warning.

Fortunately I had a training-chair in my hand, on which Timour had just been sitting, and I had time to thrust it into his face. "Down, Timour Melek! Down! down! down!" I said, steadily, accompanying each word with a blow of the whip across the nose.

The brute had only hurt himself when he struck the chair, and now, under the blows raining on his sensitive nose, he doubtless remembered similar episodes in his early training, and shrank back, nearly deafening me with his roars. I followed, punishing him, and he fled towards the low iron grating which separated the training-cage from the night quarters.

I was not in perfect trim that morning. Not that I felt nervous in the least, nor had I any lack of self-confidence, but I was not myself. The lions had been aware of it as soon as I set foot in their cage; and I knew it.

As I emerged from the cage Speed asked me whether I was hurt, and I gasped out that I was not.

"What went wrong?" he persisted.

"Speed, it was one of those seconds that come to us, when the faintest shadow of indecision settles matters. Engineers are subject to it at the throttle, pilots at the helm, captains in battle—"

"Men in love," added Speed.

I looked him over in astonishment.

"What's the matter with you?" he asked, amused.

"What's the matter with you?" I demanded. "If you mean to intimate that I have fallen in love you are certainly an astonishing ass!"

"Don't talk that way," he said, good-humoredly. "I didn't dream of such a thing, or of offending you, Scarlett."

I had an appointment to meet Robert the Lizard at noon, and I was rather curious to find out how much his promises were worth when the novelty of his new gun had grown stale.

The poacher was sunning himself on his doorsill when I came into view over the black basalt rocks. To my surprise, he touched his cap as I approached, and rose civilly, replying to my greeting with a brief, "Salute, m'sieu!"

"You are prompt to the minute," I said, pleasantly.

"Come to the point, m'sieu," he said, dryly. "We have struck palms."

"Lizard," I said, "give me your confidence as I give you mine. Yesterday, on a visit to Point Paradise, I saw a man lying lolly down in the bracken; but I didn't let him know I saw him. I have served in the police; I think I recognize that man. He is known in Belleville as Tric-Trac. He came here, I believe, to see a man called Buckhurst. Can you find this Tric-Trac for me? Do you, perhaps, know him?"

"What's That Box?" Asked the Lizard.

"Yes," said the Lizard, "I knew him in prison."

"How long has he been here in Paradise?"

"For two months."

"He is a filou—a town rat. He came here to meet a man named Buckhurst."

"I have seen that man Buckhurst, too. What is he doing here?" asked the Lizard.

"That is what I want you to find out and help me to find out!" I said. "Voila! Now you know what I want of you. Think out a plan which will permit me to observe this Monsieur Tric Trac at my leisure, without I myself being observed."

"That is easy," he said. "I take him food today."

The village square in Paradise was nearly deserted. The children had raced away to follow the newly arrived gendarmes as closely as they dared, and the women were in-doors hanging about their men, whom the government summoned to Lorient.

Far away towards Sainte-Ysole we saw the blue woods which were our goal. However, we had no intention of going there as the bee flies, partly because Tric-Trac might see us, partly because the Lizard wished any prowling passer-by to observe that he was occupied with his illegitimate profession. All the while we had been twisting and doubling and edging nearer and nearer to the Sainte-Ysole woods, until we were already within their cool shadow, and I heard the tinkle of a stream among leafy depths.

The Lizard's poacher's eyes began to glisten and shimmer in the forest dusk like the eyes of wild things that hunt at night.

Presently he beckoned me, stepped into the moss, and crawled without a sound straight through the holly thicket.

"Watch here," he whispered. "Count a hundred when I disappear, then creep on your stomach to the edge of that bank."

Before I had counted fifty I heard the Lizard cry out, "Bonjour, Tric Trac!" but I counted on, obeying the Lizard's orders as I should wish mine to be obeyed. I counted one hundred and crept forward to the mossy edge of the bank, under the yellow beech leaves.

Below me stood the Lizard, intently watching a figure crouched on hands and knees before a small, iron-bound box.

The person addressed as Tric Trac promptly tried to hide the box by sitting down on it.

"Flute!" he snarled. "Like a mud rat, you creep with no sound—c'est pas polite, nom d'un nora!"

"What's that box?" asked the Lizard, abruptly.

"Box? I don't see any box."

"You're sitting on it," observed the Lizard. "What's in it?"

"Don't know," replied Tric-Trac, with brisk interest. "I found it."

The Lizard was silent.

"Did you bring me anything to chew on?" inquired Tric-Trac sniffing at the poacher's sack.

"Bread, cheese, three pheasants, cider—more than I eat in a week," said the Lizard, quietly. "It will cost forty sous."

He opened his sack and slowly displayed the provisions.

I looked hard at the iron-bound box.

On one end was printed the Geneva cross. Doctor Delmont and Professor Tavernier had disappeared carrying Red Cross funds. Was that their box?

Tric-Trac having devoured the cheese, bread and an entire pheasant, made a bundle of the remaining food, emptied the cider jug, wiped his beardless face with his cap, and announced that he would be pleased to "broil" a cigarette.

The Lizard laughed, and Tric-Trac, disgusted, stood up, settled his cap over his wide ears, humming a song as he loosened his trousers belt. "Who are you gaping at?" he added, abruptly. "Bon; c'est ma geule. Et apres? Drop that box! The next time you come here to sell your snared pheasants, come like a man, nom de Dieu! and not like a cat of the Glaciere!—or I'll find a way to stop your curiosity."

He picked up his box and the packet of provisions, dropped his revolver into the side pocket of his jacket, cocked his greasy cap, blew a kiss to the Lizard, and started off straight in to the forest.

On our way home I drew from the poacher that Tric-Trac had named Mornac as head of the communistic plot in Brittany; that Mornac was coming to Paradise very soon, and that then something gay might be looked for.

And that night I took Speed into my confidence and finally Kelly Eyre, our balloonist.

Unfair Examination.

Two suburban mothers met on the train one day, and the topic of their conversation was their daughters. "How did your daughter pass her examination for a position as teacher?" asked one. "Pass!" was the answer. "She didn't pass at all. Maybe you wouldn't believe it, but they asked that girl about things that happened long before she was born."—Lippincott's Magazine.

It seems that designers who endeavor to prepare styles which they hope will become fashions, have worked along the most independent lines. There is no apparent uniformity of ideas in the construction of costumes, except the general approval given to narrow skirts and big waists. Accept these two features, look to the Orient for inspiration, and you may evolve styles to suit yourself. There is no hint to variety and eccentricity.

The Turkish pantaloon skirt of heavy and supple black satin which is shown here is an approved model. It is a picturesque but not a graceful garment, made to hang about a slim figure. And it takes slimness to the point of attenuation to wear drapery on these lines, with any success. But the idea of the pantaloon as suggested here brought in a variety of skirts with drapery arranged at the sides in this fashion.

In the majority of similar skirts less material is used, and in a simpler arrangement. The front is plain and there is no need of the lace underflounce at the bottom. Wide fabrics are cut in such a way that the skirt is narrow at the bottom, draped in hanging folds about the hips, and finished with a plain panel at the back. This interpretation of the pantaloon skirt is more pleasing, more simple and far more popular than the original development, which came from the Callot salon and which is pictured in the illustration.

The little Turkish jacket worn with the skirt is in blue velvet. It is a smart, military looking affair, very rich and rather simple. Black velvet and silk ornaments form its decoration. The model hangs loosely on the figure and is one of a few successful designs which incorporate a plain sleeve with arms eye defined. Such a sleeve is shapeless—a straight tube, saved from ugliness by the insertion of panels and cuffs of black velvet below the elbow. But it is in harmony with the jacket and skirt—it is true to the original Turkish jacket.

To be strictly fashionable, one must look as if the clothes were carelessly adjusted. This is a fad of the hour. A general falling-to-pieces and don't-care-if-I-do pose has been adopted by some extremists, but they are few. Clothing is soft, roomy and comfortable looking and tending more and more toward a graceful draping of the figure.

In spite of all this variety and eccentricity of styles, the good looking tailor-made suit continues to flourish almost undisturbed by the restless striving for something new. It is somewhat less severe, indulging a little in the use of draped lines in skirts and roominess in coats. The peg-top skirt and the Russian blouse make a combination as smart and up-to-date as can be, in the development of tailor-mades. A suit of this kind, with soft blouse of silk or lace, borrows just enough from the fads of the season to be quite in the mode, without losing the tailored character which so appeals to American women.

SHORT DRAPED WRAP OF BROCADED SATIN GIVES DRESSY EFFECT

A SHORT draped wrap of brocaded satin in the paprika color, or a mahogany, with trimming of bands of skunk, is among the handsome cloaks which will serve for day as well as evening wear. Brocaded satins may be had, too, at prices that are not too high to be considered by the possessor of an average dress allowance. They are shown in the richest weaves, costing all sorts of money, also, but there are attractive patterns to be had in the neighborhood of three dollars a yard.

An elegant satin is employed in the beautiful model shown here, and handsome martin fur in the bands that trim it. In a light golden brown, in tan or gray, but, best of all, in mahogany or paprika, this wrap is appropriate for day wear on dress occasions and for evening wear.

It will prove quite as effective in the less expensive satins and very pretty in the new fashionable fabrics with velvet-like surface. Skunk furs or even less expensive shaggy furs, dyed black may be used for the bands.

The hat worn with this wrap is larger than the average and is made of plush and satin. There is a plush-covered brim and soft puffed crown of satin. A narrow band of fur, like that in the wrap, furnishes a necessary finish at the base of the crown, and a shaded plume in an unusual pose completes the design. It is not a shape which all faces can wear, and a smaller hat would look equally well.

Campaign for Safety.

The vice-president of a great Canadian railroad has issued a circular as a part of the "safety first" campaign of that company which makes a thorough and exhaustive study of the causes of accidents and their prevention. He states that the prime motive of the movement is to correct unsafe conditions and practices before accidents have occurred and to investigate accidents that happen with the view of discovering the causes therefor and devising corrective measures to prevent future accidents of the same kind.

Novel Tunics.

The salient feature of the new modes is the extending tunic between hips and knee, which accentuates the modern slimness of figure. This tunic is not of distinct color from the rest of the dress. Some of the tunics dip down at the back, and sometimes form two box plaits in front, which naturally add to the size of the waist line. Flowers and butterfly bows on evening dresses tend to extend this size. Cross-cut folds are brought upward from back to front, ending in a bow at the back of the waist.

Gowns and Wraps That Glitter.

In brocades, velvets, silks and the innumerable transparent materials that accompany and complete them, the rage for gold color is all pervading. And in the broches the use of gold thread adds a glitter which, again, is one of the crazes of the season. Linings for coats are frequently in gold broche, and the new tunics are often made of silver or gold tinted [illegible] the dress, the band of strass or colored jeweling round the edge adding its note to the scintillating effect.

FASHIONS ROSEBUDS OF IRON

New Jersey Blacksmith Probably the Most Skillful Metal Worker in the World.

Louis Van Boeckel, the blacksmith of a small Belgian hamlet, has won more than local fame by his skill in fashioning flowers from metal by means of the tools of his trade. He has an American rival, however, in the person of James Cran, a blacksmith whose smithy is in Plainfield, N. J.

"It is interesting to watch this smith make a rose," says a writer in the New York Sun. "He first fashions the core, and then forges the smaller petals, hammering the ends out flat. Next, he takes a contrivance shaped like a screw-driver and opens the outer petals first. . . . After hollowing out the petals, he grasps the iron rosebud in a pair of tongs, thrusts it into the fire, and heats the stems of the petals. He takes it out of the fire, and hammers the stems into a solid mass.

"He forms the larger petals in the same manner, and having thus made the complete rose, he grasps it with larger tongs, heats and hammers it again, and finally puts the red-hot, glowing mass in a vise.

"All the different parts of the flower he forges separately. He makes the veins, or radical ribs of the leaves, with the peen of the hammer. The same tool, when it is slightly tilted, and its blows directed to the outside of the leaf, makes the serrated edges of the leaves. He first holds the piece from which the leaf is made in the tongs and heats and flattens it on the anvil. He forms the center rib in the leaf by letting that part lap over the edge of the anvil while he flattens the rest of the leaf.

"Mr. Cran works entirely from memory, and uses no model. His skill in metal working is said to be greater than that of Van Boeckel himself."

Many Old People in Berlin.

According to statistics just published Berlin appears to be an extraordinarily healthful place for the aged, who live there in remarkably large numbers. A feature of the figures is the much greater number of old women in proportion to old men, and with every decade above seventy the proportion increases astonishingly. In Berlin the number of men between seventy and eighty is 12,858, while the number of women is 25,204. For Greater Berlin the figures are 20,049 and 37,520 respectively. Of persons between eighty and ninety women are in an enormous majority. For Berlin the figures are 2,036 men and 5,371 women and for Greater Berlin 3,169 men and 7,810 women. Berlin has a large number of nonagenarians, and of these three out of every four are women. In Greater Berlin there are 364 women who have passed their ninetieth birthday, but only 111 men.

Lost Her Temper.

"An old woman came over here to my window the other day," said a young man in an information bureau, "and asked me what was good for an aching tooth."

"Some wag must have put her up to it."

"Yes, and when I snapped: 'Have it out, madam,' she proceeded to have it out with me."

WELCOME COMING OF LOCUST

Sudanese Consider Insects, Elsewhere Regarded as Pests, as a Most Palatable Food.

The latest advices from Khartum, in the Sudan, state that the usual ditches have been dug in all directions in anticipation of the summer rains, which, however, have as yet not put in an appearance. In the meantime these ditches are having their uses, for a plague of locusts has set in. Immense swarms have for days been passing over the city.

Locusts of course do a vast amount of damage to the fields. They multiply most rapidly and wherever they settle they devour every vestige of green and leave the land bare. The Sudanese are waging a vigorous campaign against them and their zeal is whetted by the fact that locusts constitute for them a very palatable dish. These insects are usually caught by the "Cyprus system," which consists in digging trenches and erecting on their farther side tin screens against which they dash and kill themselves.

It is not thought that this invasion will reach Egypt. The last time that country was visited by locusts was in 1904, when no fewer than 1,000,000,000 egg masses were destroyed. The work was carried out by over 240,000 men and cost the government close on $50,000, which was in all conscience a cheap riddance of the plague seeing that it might quite easily have ruined the entire cotton crop, not to mention crops of other summer products.

Aged Hare.

About 500 years ago there lived in Agshelin, a little town in Asia Minor, an imam, or village parson, the Khoja Nasr-ed-Din Effendi. Harry Charles Lukach says that one day a camel passed along the street in which the Khoja lived, and one of the Khoja's neighbors who had never seen a camel before ran to ask him what this strange beast might be.

"Don't you know what this is?" said a camel, but would not betray his ignorance. "That is a hare a thousand years old."

EVERY Maryland farmer who feeds a bushel of corn makes a two-fold contribution to the profitable and permanent agriculture of the State. First, by saving a large part of the fertility to the farm, and second, by aiding materially in increasing the demand for and maintaining the high value of this important farm product.

THE condition of Judge John C. Motter, who was stricken with paralysis on the streets of Frederick on election day, is steadily improving. He is able to sit up for short periods of time. While he is not out of danger, he has gained more during the last few days than at any time since his illness. His speech although still impaired is returning.

THE present day high cost of living was traced to a lack of tillers of the soil. In an address before the American Association of Farmers' Institute by Professor W. J. Kennedy, of the Iowa State College of Agriculture, Prof. Kennedy stated that since 1800, cities and towns had gained three inhabitants to the the rural districts one. Ninety per cent. of the population in 1800 were farmers as against 33 per cent. today. This decrease in farmers and the consequent decrease in farm products has caused advance in prices.

NEWS bulletins received by wireless telegraph were displayed on a moving passenger train on the Lackawana railroad. The train was traveling 60 miles an hour between Scranton, Pa., and Binghampton, N. Y. A Scranton newspaper sent 250 words from the Lackawana wireless station. A wireless station at Sarnia, Canada, picked up a wireless message from Darwin, Australia, a distance of 12,000 miles. We are living in a marvelous age. An age of magnificent possibilities and wonderful accomplishments.

THREE weeks from today another Christmas will be here, with its gifts and pleasure. If you would add to your personal comfort and happiness do your shopping at an early a date as possible. By so doing you will avoid worry, will have a better choice in the selection of gifts and be able to mail your gifts at an earlier date and thus make sure of delivery before the 25th. To wait until the last minute, means tired bodies, a troubled brain and possible disappointment in meeting your requirements. The merchants and their clerks will appreciate early shopping. It means so much to them.

THE Chronicle, of Emmitsburg, well says:

It is regrettable that the President was actuated by purely selfish motives in deciding to do away with the New Year reception at the White House. No one will deny that handshaking on these occasions is an arduous task, and that standing in line is somewhat of a tax on the physical strength of the receiving party. This, however, is the one opportunity offered the people, the masses, for greeting their Chief Executive, shaking his hand and looking into his face at close range. It may mean little to Mr. Wilson—this dispensing with an old and beautiful custom—but it means much regret to those from far and near who feel that they have almost a right to grasp the hand of the President of all the people on this day of felicitation.

ACCORDING to the telegraph dispatches from Washington the august body of Democratic leaders in Congress got busy last week because the President, in conferences with them, showed how they might be burned if they did not move. He called attention to the signs of business depression already beginning to make themselves seen. Should a panic come, he told them, the Democratic tariff and the Democratic party would be held responsible. The brunt of public resentment, be assured them, would fall upon majority members of Congress hoping for re-election in 1914. He believes and so told them, that the depression in business caused by the efforts of manufacturers to adjust themselves to the lower tariff schedules could be avoided by prompt action in providing currency legislation needed to tide the country over these temporary difficulties.

The President has made the Senate Democracy heed his proddings, and the currency bill is going to move along faster than the most optimistic had reason to expect earlier in the week What is more, unless present signs fail, the currency bill that goes before the President for his signature will be in all essential features the Administration measure that passed the lower house.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

To the Editor of the Republican:

The attached proposition was placed in my hands recently and recalling how quickly a recent copy of your paper reached the Rev. J. J. Ross, or some of his friends in Canada, it occurs to me that this might also reach him in like manner, so it will give him and others also, who manifest a similar spirit, an opportunity to verify certain charges which are being brought against Pastor Russell from time to time and incidently, they may, to use the vernacular of the day, pick up some "easy money."

I am acquainted with Mr. Giles and know him to be thoroughly responsible. A post-card addressed to the bank named in his proposition will, I feel sure, bring the desired information.

Thanking you for this courtesy, I am

Very truly yours,
WILLIAM WEBER.

TO WHOEVER INTERESTED.

I have deposited in the American Exchange National Bank, of Greenboro, N. C., $1,000 to be paid to the first person who proves in any court of justice in the United States that Pastor Russell is guilty of any immorality such as is the "gossip" of those ministers who preach "for pay." I have known Pastor Russell for 15 years and believe his teachings of Bible doctrines is the only teaching which is in strict harmony with the entire Bible, both Old and New Testaments.

Many great men claim that Pastor Russell is not only the greatest Bible expositor on earth, but so meek and full of love for God and humanity, that he does not turn aside to defend his reputation from Satanic slander. Hence I make the foregoing propostion in his defense.

I will also pay the following cash premiums for the texts below, viz: $50 for a text which says the Soul is immortal, $50 for a Bible text which says the Soul goes to heaven or hell immediately at death; $50 for a Bible text which says there is no probation or salvation after the Adamic death; $10 for a Bible text wherein is found the word "Trinity" (not a hymn book text), and $10 will be paid to any one who proves an error in Bible Chronology which is promulgated by Pastor Russell.

All Bible Commentators tell us that the "Mother" spoken of in Rev. 17: 6 is a symbol of the Roman Catholic church, and if this is true I will gladly give $10 to the first person who gives me proof that the "Daughters" (referred to in same verse) are not symbols of the 666 other churches. Two Salvations But No Second Chance

To the Editor of The Republican.

Filled with enthusiasm over God's future provision for the world, Pastor Thomas P. Yates, of Ontario, spoke in the Empire Theatre Nov. 20, to an audience which showed intense interest in what he revealed from the Scriptures as to the Two Salvations. The speaker made it very emphatic that none will get a second chance, though every one will get one full chance for salvation, either in this world or in the world to come.

Pastor Yates pointed out that many, who think of the Divine Program as merely an endeavor to rescue mankind from sin and death to righteousness and eternal life in the present time, are much confused, because it must be acknowledged that comparatively little has been done, or is now being done for man's uplift. After six thousand years it is still true that "the whole world lieth in the wicked one," "darkness covers the earth in gross darkness the heathen." In order to have any confidence at all in this theory, those who hold it are obliged to greatly lower their standards. They are forced to hope that God will admit millions of unfit people, crude, rude, ignorant and wicked, to eternal life and happiness or else provide for them purgatorial experiences, to make them fit for life eternal. He maintained that, as a whole, Christian people are greatly bewildered and that the tendency of their bewilderment is toward doubt, skepticism, atheism.

He pointed out, also, that others believe that God never intended the salvation of the world, but merely the salvation of the Church, "elect according to the foreknowledge of God through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the Truth." Those who hold this theory are greatly confused also, because it seems incomprehensible that God would make no provision for the "thousands of millions" of Adam's race, but allow them to be born in sin, shapen in iniquity, and to go down to the tomb with almost no knowledge of their Creator, to suffer, according to this theory, an eternity of unspeakable torments.

The speaker then showed that the Scriptures clearly set forth two salvations, entirely separate and distinct. They are different as respects time, in that the one salvation "began to be spoken by our Lord" at His first advent, and began to be applicable to the Church at Pentecost and will wholly cease at His second coming in the end of this age. The other salvation neither applied before our Lord's first advent nor during this Gospel Age, but will apply to all mankind, except the Church, during the Millennium—the thousand years of the reign of Christ and the Church, especially designed for the world's blessing and uplift.

These two salvations were shown to be distinctly different as to kind. The salvation of the Church during this Gospel Age, since Pentecost, means not only a deliverance from sin and death conditions to eternal life, but provides that their eternal life will be on the heavenly or spiritual plane and not on the earthly or human plane of existence. Thus the Apostle declares that our "inheritance is incorruptible and undefiled and fadeth not away and is reserved in heaven for us who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation." 1 Pet. 1:4,5. Our Lord also stated that in the resurrection we shall be as the angels. The Apostle says that we shall then be partakers of the Divine nature and like our Lord and Redeemer.

The world's salvation will follow will not include a change from the earthly to the spirit nature. It will mean a rescue from sin and death to the earthly perfection of the original man, in the image and likeness of his Creator, and surrounded by every necessity, blessing and comfort. Human perfection and the Eden home were lost through disobedience to God. The divine arrangement is that the merit of the Lord's sacrifice, when ultimately applied to mankind, shall fully cancel the death sentence upon him, as the Apostle declares: "He is a propitiation for our (the church's) sins; and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world." (1 John 2:2) The New Covenant, which was sealed by Jesus' blood will go into effect under him as Mediator, and under its provisions mankind are to be resurrected to life and perfection, and will gradually be brought back to all the glorious conditions lost in Eden. Paradise Lost will then be Paradise Restored. So we read that "God will have all men to be saved (from sin and death and the binding influence of Satan) and to come unto a knowledge of the Truth," for the purpose of furnishing every child of Adam a fair chance to be saved and to gain eternal life. The restored earth will be the eternal home of mankind.

In conclusion, the speaker urged upon his hearers the necessity of "giving more earnest heed" to the diligent study of God's Word rather than to the creeds originated during the Dark Ages, that thus their faith in God might be increased and their joys made full.

Pastor Yates was most emphatic in his assertions that none need expect a second chance. A chance of salvation is now being afforded the church; and in the age to come each individual of the world will be given his chance to believe and attain perfect life. This will include all the heathen: not that all will gain eternal life, but that all will be given a chance to hear and accept if they will. Those who disobey the Lord will be destroyed in the Second Death.

Diptheria in Frostburg.

On account of the prevalence of diphtheria in Frostburg all the public schools, the parochial school and the State Normal school were closed Nov. 26, and under orders from the State board of Health will remain closed until Jan. 1, or earlier if the spread of the disease shows signs of abatement.

The order from the Board of Health also includes the moving picture theatres and the secretary of the local Board of Health has issued notices to managers of these places to close up Saturday evening and give no more shows until further orders from the State Health authorities.

Local ministers have been instructed to discontinue the assembling of Sunday schools and the same instruction has gone to the Catholic church authorities with reference to the children's mass.

There have been 10 cases of diphtheria in town in three months and the epidemic is spreading.

WORTHY SERIOUS CONSIDERATION

The following three items are taken from the Frostburg Spirit of last week:

THE HOME TOWN.

Whenever a man comes back he is surprised to see how the old town has grown.

This town is getting better all the while; you may not see it, but he sees it.

The only question is, How fast is it getting better? That is up to you.

Let's dig in and make the man who comes back feel sorry he went away.

HOW WE HURT OURSELVES.

If you have anything to sell in this community—labor, crops or material—the people here must have money with which to buy it.

If you keep sending your money away from home it will be a long time getting back; it may never get back at all.

If all of it were sent away and none of it came back, how long would this town last?

WHOM WE HELP.

When some people are asked to do something for this town they seem to think they are asked to do something for somebody else.

Well, they are. But they can not do something for somebody else without doing something for themselves also.

The school taxes you pay help educate other men's children. But other men help educate yours.

Other people are doing things for you all the time. If other men hesitated you would suffer.

Since the beginning men have lived in communities. Why? So they could help each other.

The more we help each other the more we get out of the community.

Help. That gives you the right to make the other fellow help also.

Wanted. $6,000,000 To Finish Good Roads.

Having estimated that the highways system which has been mapped out by the State Roads Commission can be completed for approximately $6,000,000, Chairman Weller of that body Tuesday announced that the next Legislature would be asked for that amount.

As originally laid out the State roads system embraces about 1,150 miles. Already between 450 and 500 miles have been completed, while contracts have been let for between 100 and 125 additional miles to be completed next year.

ONE RESULT OF DEMOCRATIC ADMINISTRATION.

We are living under a Democratic administration. We have lived through a special session of a Democratic congress, of eight months duration. We have no comments to make on the administration or its congress. The following figures speak for themselves. They are the fruits of an administration not over nine months old. If such things happen in its infancy what will be the result as it advances in years? Who can tell?

Last Monday congress was called upon to appropiate over a billion dollars for the running expenses of the government for the coming fiscal year beginning July 1, 1914, and ending June 30, 1915. Estimates of the cost of keeping the governmental machinery in motion, transmitted by Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo to Speaker Champ Clark, aggregated the grand total of $1,108,681,777.02.

Appropriations made by Congress at at the last regular session totaled $1,074,302, 869.73. The increase is, therefore, $34,375,907.29.

CUSTOM RECEIPTS DROP

Customs reciepts of the government for November fell off about $1,500,000, compared to November, 1912, according to the monthly Treasury statement issued. November was the first full month of operation for the new tariff and if the month was a fair test of the bill's revenue producing powers the annual return from this source will decline more than $50,000,000.

The ordinary disbursements for November exceeded the ordinary receipts $2,713,732, compared to an excess of receipts for the same month last year of $1,831,529.

For the fiscal year to date the disbursements have exceeded the receipts by $8,716,100, compared to an excess of receipts last year of $1,817,337.

RAW WOOL FREE NOW

Raw wool went on the free list Monday under the provisions of the new tariff. Figures on wool that has been held in bonded warehouses waiting admission free of duty are not available here, but it is estimated that probably $1,000,000 worth was in bond in New York alone.

Philadelphia manufactures withdrew more than 8,000,000 pounds of raw wool from bonded ware houses under the free raw wool clause of the new tariff law, according to estimates of customs officials. Most of the wool came from New Zealand, England and Ireland. Before the withdrawals began it was stated that the warehouse contained about 10,000,000 pounds.

THE DEATH RECORD

SAMUEL J. FERGUSON.

Samuel J. Ferguson, a son of Samuel Ferguson, of Oakland, died at his home in Rock Island, Illinois, on Nov. 23. He was born at Hoyes March 20, 1865. He received his education in the public school of that village. He also attended Lebanon college at Lebanon, Ohio. He later went to Illinois and taught public school at Reynolds. In 1899 he was elected county superintendent of public schools of Rock Island county and was elected four times to this office which he filled with honor and success. He had high ideas and his aims always was to make the county schools more efficient. For some years he was manager of the Illionis state reading circle, a very responsible position. He was spoken of as a candidate for State Superintennent of public schools. Mr. Ferguson was an active member of the Methodist Episcopal church of Rock Island and was superintendent of the Sunday school. For a time he was president of the Men's Brotherhood of the church. He was a prominent Mason and at the time of his death was a member of Rock Island commandery and also of Kaaba temple of the Mystic Shrine of Davenport. The Rock Island Daily Union speaking of Mr. Ferguson said:

In the death of S. J. Ferguson Rock Island county loses a citizen. And this is said with the larger meaning. Mr. Ferguson has become recognized as an educator not only in Rock Island county but over a large portion of Illinois. What he did was done quietly and with but little show, and it would all bear inspection.

His untimely death is a setback to this county. His loss will be felt. It will be hard to get anyone who will fill his shoes.

In 1895 Mr. Ferguson was married, his wife having been Miss Anna Easter, of Hamburg, Ark. Surviving him are his father, Mr. Samuel Ferguson, of Oakland, Md., his wife and three children, Vance H., Kenneth E., and Sula M., all at home. He is also survived by six brothers and five sisters, Charles F., of Sioux City; Webb and Harry, of Berryburg, W. Va.; Edward, of Warden, Mont., and Herbert and Ernest, of Fairmont, W. Va., Mrs. Mary Boyer, of Thomas, W. Va.; Mrs. P. H. Harner, and the Misses Blanche and Maude Furgeson, of Duquesne, Pa., and Mrs. F.F. Fleming, of Washington, Pa.

The funeral of Mr. Ferguson took place on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 26. The public schools of both Rock Island and Moline were closed, as was also the office in the court house. All the schools in Moline and Rock Island had their flags at half mast and the flag was lowered on the Masonic temple.

Anglo-American Exposition.

July 14, 1914, has been designated as Baltimore Day at the Anglo-American Exposition, which is to be held in London from May to October of that year to celebrate the centenary of peace and progress in the arts, sciences and industries of the United States and Great Britain.

Maryland Day at the Exposition will be celebrated September 12, 1914, and upon both of these occasions efforts will be made to have as many Baltimoreans and Marylanders present as possible.

WHAT'S THE ANSWER?

A Temperance Talk to Voters

BY JASON KEP

If I carelessly expose to small pox, if I refuse to remove filth from my premises, dangerous to the community's health, if I spit on the sidewalk, if I catch fish or shoot game out of season, if I run a buzz-wagon too fast, I shall be arrested and punished. If I open a saloon and pay a high license what's the answer? I am elected alderman and permitted to boss the city.

Oh, you church people, you can't play ostrich any longer; the game is busted. "Oh Lord, I thank thee that I am not as this publican," was prayed long years ago and it didn't make good. When it came to getting results the poor publican who cried, "Oh Lord, have mercy upon me a miserable sinner," had the old hypocrit beaten a mile. Why? Because he was in earnest and proved he was in earnest by going and getting busy in his Master's cause. You can't fool God a little bit.

Just bear in mind that God requires of you that you help remove the pitfalls and temptations from before his little ones, the weaker ones. If you keep this in mind and act on it, it might save you an embarrassing situation later on.

You know that the saloons are killing off 152,000 poor souls every year in the United States, and recruiting 152,000 of God's little ones to fill the ranks.

You know that the average of drunkard's are started under seventeen years of age? and knowing this you go to church and pray, "Oh Lord deliver us from this curse of intemperance," and then go out and vote wet. You think I am severe and unjust, but am I? The liquor people who represent less than 5 per cent. of the population, dictates 70 per cent of your elections and brag about it among themselves. And the 35,000,000 church members of the United States,—well what's the answer?

'The Sunday-school man has always been noted
'For lighting saloons except when he voted,
He plied up his prayers with a holy perfection,
But knocked them all down on the day of election."

"By their works ye shall know them." (P. S. This is from the Bible.)

Oh my, wouldn't there be a bunch of us who would never be known as church people if it wasn't for the church register? Great guns! If those church registers should happen to get burned, wouldn't we be in a duce of a fix when we came up before the bar of judgment on that last great day, with no church register to introduce us?

Now, see here—no more foolishness—you know that the 35,000,000 church members of the United States can carry any election, have any law passed and carry every State for dry by an overwhelming majority, if they would go out and work and vote as they ought to pray? Why don't they do it? Why don't you? You know it is true. You know you could put the saloons out of your town mighty quick if you would quit talking in whispers and go out and fight.

See the results in West Virginia. When the church people quit sighing and offering up delicate, half-hearted little prayers, buckeled on their armor and went out to fight it was all over but the shouting.

We take off our hats to the church people of West Virginia. The world has never seen a more sincere, hard working, hard fighting army of the Lord than in the last fight in West Virginia.

There is a pattern for the church people of her sister states.

Better go over and get inoculated.

The merchants are beginning to decorate their store windows for the holiday season and are placing on their shelves and counters a fine assortment of holiday goods. Kris Kingle has opened up headquarters in Oakland. Do not send off for any of your holiday goods until after examining the splendid stocks to be found in your home stores. Be loyal to your home town. Watch the columns of The Republican for Christmas announcements.

A number of new subscribers were booked the early part of this week. The Republican is growing in favor right along because of its newsy columns. Its general make up, the large amount of interesting reading matter, the account of the local happenings from all over county has made it the paper for and of the people. The paper is also appreciated by the advertising public, who want to reach a profitable purchasing class of people. The paper speaks for itself

Advertising Holiday Goods.

Merchants who feel the strain of the Christmas holiday rush and the frequent lack of profit in a big trade concentrated into a few days should consider the advantage of beginning early to advertise holiday goods.

Trade follows the advertising. Where merchants don't tell the people about their holiday stock until December is well under way, the public does not realize that holiday goods are in, and make no special effort to hunt for gifts.

All the stores are to day carrying goods suited in every way for holiday trade. An early trade can be created by the simple expedient of telling the public what they can do at this stage of the season.

To the outsider at least it would seem as if the merchants would like this trade distributed over as many weeks as possible. In that way they can avoid hiring extra help, and the public will be better satisfied if it avoids hasty buying. Regular advertising promotes and establishes this regular current of business.

BITTINGER.

Our public school was closed last week from Wednesday evening until Monday morning, in order that the teachers might spend a complete Thanksgiving season at their homes.

The Baker & Nathan Lumber Co. has finished its operations on the Elias Orendorf tract of timber and will shortly begin cutting the Beitzell timber, north of this place.

Much fog and slight rain falls prevailed during the last half of the past week.

Leonard Stark, of Blaine, W. Va., is spending some time with his parents here, and we are glad to report his health considerably improved.

Mrs. Nettie Hoover was taken to Baltimore last week, where, in one of the hospitals in that city, she underwent a serious surgical operation and is reported doing very well.

The laborers in Jennings Bros.' lumber woods were notified last week of a considerable cut in their wages and strike may follow.

On Sunday afternoon, Nov. 23d, some persons passing by the Bowser school house, near this village, discovered that the building was on fire. The alarm was quickly given and some persons living near by came hastily to the scene and the flames were soon extinguished, but not until considerable damage was done. The floor of the house was so badly burned that it was not fit to continue school on Monday, and the teacher, Miss Miss Olive Callis, was obliged to return home, to await repairs. It is said that there are strong indications that the building had been purposely fired by some malicious person.

Great Loss In Turkeys.

A surprisingly large number of fine Thanksgiving turkeys shipped to market were condemned and destroyed because they had been spoiled. At Chicago the loss amounted to $6,000, at Philadalphia to $7,000 and at Boston $50,000. The latter was the greatest wholesale condemnation of food in the history of the New England States. In one day in Boston 18,000 turkeys, averaging from 12 to 15 pounds each, were taken from the big commission houses, given a bath in kerosene oil and sent to the fertilizing companies.

"We never found so many bad turkeys," said Dr. Burr. "These were all good birds, but they had been spoiled in packing. They were mostly Michigan birds, fat and good looking. For some reason or other the packers were in such a hurry to get them to market that they packed the birds before they cooled off. The abnormal warm weather did the rest.

Attention Knights Of Pythias.

MESSAGE TO SIXTY-THIRD CONGRESS

Departs in Some Degree from the Usual Custom of Giving a Formal Review of Departmental Work

MEXICO IS THE ONE CLOUD UPON THE HORIZON

Hopes to See Constitutional Order Restored by the Concert and Energy of Such of Her Leaders as Prefer Liberty to Ambition—Urges Senate to Concentrate Upon Currency Bill Until Passed — Rural Credits to Farmers Advocated.

Washington, D. C. The annual address of President Wilson, delivered at a joint session of the two houses of Congress at the beginning of the second session of the Sixty-third Congress, was as follows:—

Address of the President.

Gentlemen of the Congress:—

In pursuance of my constitutional duty to "give to the Congress information of the state of the Union," I take the liberty of addressing you on several matters which ought, as it seems to me, particularly to engage the attention of your honorable bodies, as of all who study the welfare and progress of the Nation.

I shall ask your indulgence if I venture to depart in some degree from the usual custom of setting before you in formal review the many matters which have engaged the attention and called for the action of the several departments of the Government or which look to them for early treatment in the future, because the list is long, very long, and would suffer in the abbreviation to which I should have to subject it. I shall submit to you the reports of the heads of the several departments, in which these subjects are set forth in careful detail, and beg that they may receive the thoughtful attention of your committees and of all Members of the Congress who may have the leisure to study them. Their obvious importance, as constituting the very substance of the business of the Government, makes comment and emphasis on my part unnecessary.

The country, I am thankful to say, is at peace with all the world, and many happy manifestations multiply about us of a growing cordiality and sense of community of interest among the nations, foreshadowing an age of settled peace and good will. More and more readily each decade do the nations manifest their willingness to bind themselves by solemn treaty to the processes of peace, the processes of frankness and fair concession. So far the United States has stood at the front of such negotiations. She will, I earnestly hope and confidently believe, give fresh proof of her sincere adherence to the cause of international friendship by ratifying the several treaties of arbitration awaiting renewal by the Senate. In addition to these, it has been the privilege of the Department of State to gain the assent, in principle, of no less than 31 nations, representing four-fifths of the population of the world, to the negotiation of treaties by which it shall be agreed that whenever differences of interest or of policy arise which can not be resolved by the ordinary processes of diplomacy they shall be publicly analyzed, discussed, and reported upon by a tribunal chosen by the parties before either nation determines its course of action.

There is only one possible standard by which to determine controversies between the United States and other nations, and that is compounded of these two elements: Our own honor and our obligations to the peace of the world. A test so compounded ought easily to be made to govern both the establishment of new treaty obligations and the interpretation of those already assumed.

There is but one cloud upon our horizon. That has shown itself to the south of us, and hangs over Mexico. There can be no certain prospect of peace in America until Gen. Huerta has surrendered his usurped authority in Mexico; until it is understood on all hands, indeed, that such pretended governments will not be countenanced or dealt with by the Government of the United States. We are the friends of constitutional government in America; we are more than its friends, we are its champions; because in no other way can our neighbors, to whom we would wish in every way to make proof of our friendship, work out their own development in peace and liberty. Mexico has no Government. The attempt to maintain one at the City of Mexico has broken down, and a mere military despotism has been set up which has hardly more than the semblance of national authority. It originated in the usurpation of Victoriano Huerta, who, after a brief attempt to play the part of constitutional President, has at last cast aside even the pretense of legal right and declared himself dictator. As a consequence, a condition of affairs now exists in Mexico which has made it doubtful whether even the most elementary and fundamental rights either of her own people or of the citizens of other countries resident within her territory can long be successfully safeguarded, and which threatens, if long continued, to imperil the interests of peace, order, and tolerable life in the lands immediately to the south of us. Even if the usurper had succeeded in his purposes, in despite of the constitution of the Republic and the rights of its people, he would have set up nothing but a precarious and hateful power, which could have lasted but a little while, and whose eventual downfall would have left the country in a more deplorable condition than ever. But he has not succeeded. He has forfeited the respect and the moral support even of those who were at one time willing to see him succeed. Little by little he has been completely isolated. By a little every day his power and prestige are crumbling and the collapse is not far away. We shall not, I believe, be obliged to alter our policy of watchful waiting. And then, when the end comes, we shall hope to see constitutional order restored in distressed Mexico by the concert and energy of such of her leaders as prefer the liberty of their people to their own ambitions.

I turn to matters of domestic concern. You already have under consideration a bill for the reform of our system of banking and currency, for which the country waits with impatience, as for something fundamental to its whole business life and necessary to set credit free from arbitrary and artificial restraits. I need not say how earnestly I hope for its early enactment into law. I take leave to beg that the whole energy and attention of the Senate be concentrated upon it till the matter is successfully disposed of. And yet I feel that the request is not needed that the Members of that great House need no urging in this service to the country.

I present to you, in addition, the urgent necessity that special provision be made also for facilitating the credits needed by the farmers of the country. The pending currency bill does the farmers a great service. It puts them upon an equal footing with other business men and masters of enterprise, as it should; and upon its passage they will find themselves quit of many of the difficulties which now hamper them in the field of credit. The farmers, of course, ask and should be given no special privilege, such as extending to them the credit of the Government itself. What they need and should obtain is legislation which will make their own abundant and substantial credit resources available as a foundation for joint, concerted local action in their own behalf in getting the capital they must use. It is to this we should now address ourselves.

It has, singularly enough, come to pass that we have allowed the industry of our farms to lag behind the other activities of the country in its development. I need not stop to tell you how fundamental to the life of the Nation is the production of its food. Our thoughts may ordinarily be concentrated upon the cities and the hives of industry, upon the cries of the crowded market place and the clangor of the factory, but it is from the quiet interspaces of the open valleys and the free hillsides that we draw the sources of life and of prosperity, from the farm and the ranch, from the forest and the mine. Without these every street would be silent, every office deserted, every factory fallen into disrepair. And yet the farmer does not stand upon the same footing with the forester and the miner in the market of credit. He is the servant of the seasons. Nature determines how long he must wait for his crops, and will not be hurried in her processes. He may give his note, but the season of its maturity depends upon the season when his crop matures, lies at the gates of the market where his products are sold. And the security he gives is of a character not known in the broker's office or as familiarly as it might be on the counter of the banker.

The Agricultural Department of the Government is seeking to assist as never before to make farming an efficient business, of wide co-operative effort, in quick touch with the markets for foodstuffs. The farmers and the Government will henceforth work together as real partners in this field, where we now begin to see our way very clearly and where many intelligent plans are already being put into execution. The Treasury of the United States has, by a timely and well-considered distribution of its deposits, facilitated the moving of the crops in the present season and prevented the scarcity of available funds too often experienced at such times. But we must not allow ourselves to depend upon extraordinary expedients. We must add the means by which the farmer may make his credit constantly and easily available and command when he will the capital by which to support and expand his business. We lag behind many other great countries of the modern world in attempting to do this. Systems of rural credit have been studied and developed on the other side of the water while we left our farmers to shift for themselves in the ordinary money market. You have but to look about you in any rural district to see the result, the handicap and embarrassment which have been put upon those who produce our food.

Conscious of this backwardness and neglect on our part, the Congress recently authorized the creation of a special commission to study the various systems of rural credit which have been put into operation in Europe, and this commission is already prepared to report. Its report ought to make it easier for us to determine what methods will be best suited to our own farmers. I hope and believe that the committees of the Senate and House will address themselves to this matter with the most fruitful results, and I believe that the studies and recently formed plans of the Department of Agriculture may be made to serve them very greatly in their work of framing appropriate and adequate legislation. It would be indiscreet and presumptuous in anyone to dogmatize upon so great and many-sided a question, but I feel confident that common counsel will produce the results we must all desire.

Turn from the farm to the world of business which centers in the city and in the factory, and I think that all thoughtful observers will agree that the immediate service we owe the business communities of the country is to prevent private monopoly more effectually than it has yet been prevented. I think it will be easily agreed that we should let the Sherman antitrust law stand, unaltered, as it is with its debatable ground about it, but that we should as much as possible reduce the area of that debatable ground by further and more explicit legislation; and should also supplement that great act by legislation which will not only clarify it but also facilitate its administration and make it fairer to all concerned. No doubt we shall all wish, and the country will expect, this to be the central subject of our deliberations during the present session; but it is a subject so many-sided and so deserving of careful and discriminating discussion that I shall take the liberty of addressing you upon it in a special message at a later date than this. It is of capital importance that the business men of this country should be relieved of all uncertainties of law with regard to their enterprises and investments and a clear path indicated which they can travel without anxiety. It is as important that they should be relieved of embarrassment and set free to prosper as that private monopoly should be destroyed. The ways of action should be thrown wide open.

I turn to a subject which I hope can be handled promptly and without serious controversy of any kind. I mean the method of selecting nominees for the Presidency of the United States. I feel confident that I do not misinterpret the wishes or the expectations of the country when I urge the prompt enactment of legislation which will provide for primary elections throughout the country at which the voters of the several parties may choose their nominees for the Presidency without the intervention of nominating conventions. I venture the suggestion that this legislation should provide for the retention of party conventions, but only for the purpose of declaring and accepting the verdict of the primaries and formulating the platforms of the parties; and I suggest that these conventions should consist not of delegates chosen for this single purpose, but of the nominees for Congress, the nominees for vacant seats in the Senate of the United States, the Senators whose terms have not yet closed, the national committees, and the candidates for the Presidency themselves. In order that platforms may be framed by those responsible to the people for carrying them into effect.

These are all matters of vital domestic concern, and besides them, outside the charmed circle of our own national life in which our affections command us, as well as our consciences, there stand out our obligations toward our territories over sea. Here we are trustees. Porto Rico, Hawaii, the Philippines, are ours, indeed, but not ours to do what we please with. Such territories, once regarded as mere possessions, are no longer to be selfishly exploited; they are part of the domain of public conscience and of serviceable and enlightened statesmanship. We must administer them for the people who live in them and with the same sense of responsibility to them as toward our own people in our domestic affairs. No doubt we shall successfully enough bind Porto Rico and the Hawaiian Islands to ourselves by ties of justice and interest and affection, but the performance of our duty toward the Philippines is a more difficult and debatable matter. We can satisfy the obligations of generous justice toward the people of Porto Rico by giving them the ample and familiar rights and privileges accorded our own citizens in our own territories and our obligations toward the people of Hawaii by perfecting the provisions for self-government already granted them, but in the Philippines we must go further. We must hold steadily in view their ultimate independence, and we must move toward the time of that independence as steadily as the way can be cleared and the foundations thoughtfully and permanently laid.

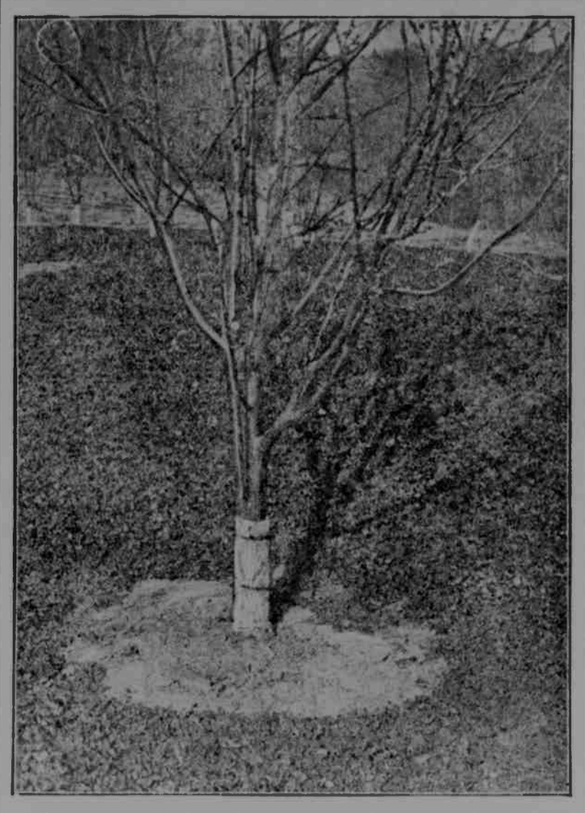
Acting under the authority conferred upon the President by Congress, I have already accorded the people of the islands a majority in both houses of their legislative body by appointing five instead of four native citizens to the membership of the commission. I believe that in this way we shall make proof of their capacity in counsel and their sense of responsibility in the exercise of political power, and that the success of this step will be sure to clear our view for the steps which are to follow. Step by step we should extend and perfect the system of self-government in the islands, making test of them and modifying them as experience discloses their successes and their failures; that we should more and more put under the control of the native citizens of the archipelago the essential instruments of their life, their local instrumentalities of government, their schools, all the common interests of their communities, and so by counsel and experience set up a government which all the world will see to be suitable to a people whose affairs are under their own control. At last, I hope and believe, we are beginning to gain the confidence of the Filipino peoples. By their counsel and experience, rather than by our own, we shall learn how best to serve them and how soon it will be possible and wise to withdraw our supervision. Let us once find the path and set out with firm and confident tread upon it and we shall not wander from it or linger upon it.

A duty faces us with regard to Alaska which seems to be very pressing and very imperative; perhaps I should say a double duty, for it concerns both the political and the material development of the Territory. The people of Alaska should be given the full Territorial form of government, and Alaska, as a storehouse, should be unlocked. One key to it is a system of railways. These the Government should itself build and administer, and the ports and terminals it should itself control in the interest of all who wish to use them for the service and development of the country and its people.

But the construction of railways is only the first step; is only thrusting in the key to the storehouse and throwing back the lock and opening the door. How the tempting resources of the country are to be exploited is another matter, to which I shall take the liberty of from time to time calling your attention, for it is a policy which must be worked out by well-considered stages, not upon theory, but upon lines of practical expediency. It is part of our general problem of conservation. We have a freer hand in working out the problem in Alaska than in the States of the Union; and yet the principle and object are the same, wherever we touch it. We must use the resources of the country, not lock them up. There need be no conflict or jealousy as between State and Federal authorities, for there can be no essential differences of purpose between them. The resources in question must be used, but not destroyed or wasted; used, but not monopolized upon any narrow idea of individual rights as against the abiding interests of communities. That a policy can be worked out by conference and concession which will release these resources and yet not jeopard or dissipate them, I for one have no doubt; and it can be done on lines of regulation which need be no less acceptable to the people and governments of the States concerned than to the people and Government of the Nation at large, whose heritage these resources are. We must bend our counsels to this end. A common purpose ought to make agreement easy.

Three or four matters of special importance and significance I beg that you will permit me to mention in closing.

Our Bureau of Mines ought to be equipped and empowered to render even more effectual service than it renders now in improving the conditions of mine labor and making the mines more economically productive as well as more safe. This is an all-important part of the work of conservation; and the conservation of human life and energy lies even nearer to our interest than the preservation from waste of our material resources.



We owe it, in mere justice to the railway employes of the country, to provide for them a fair and effective employers' liability act; and a law that we can stand by in this matter will be no less to the advantage of those who administer the railroads of the country than to the advantage of those whom they employ. The experience of a large number of the States abundantly proves that.

We ought to devote ourselves to meeting pressing demands of plain justice like this as earnestly as to the accomplishment of political and economic reforms. Social justice comes first. Law is the machinery for its realization and is vital only as it expresses and embodies it.

An international congress for the discussion of all questions that affect safety at sea is now sitting in London at the suggestion of our own Government. So soon as the conclusions of that congress can be learned and considered we ought to address ourselves, among other things, to the prompt alleviation of the very unsafe, unjust, and burdensome conditions which now surround the employment of sailors and render it extremely difficult to obtain the services of spirited and competent men such as every ship needs if it is to be safely handled and brought to port.

May I not express the very real pleasure I have experienced in co-operating with this Congress and sharing with it the labors of common service to which it has devoted itself so unreservedly during the past seven months of uncomplaining concentration upon the business of legislation? Surely it is a proper and pertinent part of my report on "the state of the Union" to express my admiration for the diligence, the good temper, and the full comprehension of public duty which has already been manifested by both the Houses; and I hope that it may not be deemed an impertinent intrusion of myself into the picture if I say with how much and how constant satisfaction I have availed myself of the privilege of putting my time and energy at their disposal alike in counsel and in action.

PLANTING AND SPRAYING OF ORCHARDS

If the young orchard contains grass or weeds, you may be sure that the mice will cause great damage, unless the trunks of the trees are well protected.

(By E. J. MILLER.)

There are many good reasons for the fall planting of orchards. October is the best month for taking up this question. The weather is favorable now but it is not likely to remain so for more than four or five weeks.

Those who wish to have an orchard or enlarge the one they now have, should get busy.

An orchard pays five times as much as grain per acre, and fall planting is becoming more popular each season, and as experience shows its advantages the practice is becoming general.

As soon as a tree or shrub becomes dormant it can be moved from one place to another.

When set out in the fall, the bruised roots begin immediately to heal, and callous is formed; the trees recover quickly from the moving, soon become firmly established, and with the first touch of spring are ready to go into business for themselves in a vigorous way.

Again the ground is generally in better condition for planting in the fall than in the spring, when much spring planting is done with the ground too wet for results.

After all rotten apples, pruned limbs, and other refuse have been cleared up about the orchard, the trees should be given a thorough spraying.

If possible one should choose a warm day for this operation, so most of the insect pests crawling out to lie in the sunlight will be exposed to the action of the spraying solution.

Special attention should be given old knots and rough and rotten spots about the trees, as in these places the fruit pests deposit their eggs for next season's crop and at the same time many of these pests themselves are harboring safe retreat till winter is over.

There are several reasons for this fall spraying. It not only destroys the insect pests, but their eggs, also, which have been laid.

After the spraying, the trees will be left healthy and clean and free from pests, while they are developing their next season's fruit crop. Another light spraying next spring will not come amiss, but this fall spraying will insure the work being done, not neglected next spring, when the rush season is on and the field turns the farmer's attention from the orchard.

AMOUNT OF SEED CORN TO SELECT

Good Rule to Follow Is to Gather as Many Ears as Are Needed for Planting.

(By A. C. ARNY, Assistant Agriculturist, University Farm, St. Paul, Minn.)

When you get into your own cornfield you may see so many good plants bearing good ears that you will just feel like keeping a-going. Hope you do, and while you are selecting good seed corn for yourself, select some for your neighbors. They need it to help boost the average yield of corn in this state to over forty bushels per acre.

How many rows has an average ear of corn of the variety which you raise? How many kernels per row after tip and butt kernels have been shelled off? Many hills will one ear plant, using three kernels per hill? One acre of corn checked three feet three inches contains 3,240 hills. If your ear has 600 good kernels it will plant 200 hills, three kernels per hill. At that rate it would require about seventeen ears per acre.

Remember, however, that in selecting the corn in the field you go over it rather hurriedly. When winter comes and you look the ears over carefully, you will find many that will not suit you. Of those that do suit, a number may not grow strong, unless the corn is properly dried and stored.

A good rule is to select twice as many ears from good plants in the field as are needed to plant the required number of acres next year. This allows a very close selection to be made during the winter.

Making the Egg Business Pay.

To assure a high quality of product and prevent in a large measure the loss now experienced in the value of the country's egg production, producers are urged to observe the following five simple rules:

1. Give the hens clean nests.
2. Gather eggs at least once daily.
3. Keep eggs in a cool, dry place.
4. Market eggs at least twice a week.
5. Kill or sell all mature male birds as soon as the hatching season closes.

Medicinal Weeds.

"Analysis of our edible weeds shows that they possess powerful medicinal qualities. The dandelion, for example, is replete with tonic salts and its aperient, besides being a natural liver medicine; the milkweed is a perfect tonic for the kidneys and a general cleanser of the system; the common yarrow is a good spring tonic for children; while red clover is one of the richest of all nitrogenous plants, and nitrogen is one of the most strengthening elements."

MEANS OF SECURING A STEADY INCOME

Poultry Keeping and Mixed Farming Afford Promising Means of Comfortable Living.

To the man of small capital poultry keeping and mixed farming afford the most promising means of making a comfortable livelihood. Poultry may with advantage be kept by those engaging in fruit growing aid prove a valuable adjunct to the orchard by keeping down pests and fertilizing the ground; also proving a material source of income while the trees are coming into bearing. To engage exclusively in fruit growing one is obliged to provide for the period from the setting out of the trees till they come into bearing, thus requiring an income from other sources, while in mixed farming returns may be counted on from the start.

A few acres planted in small fruits, early vegetables, potatoes, carrots, onions, cabbages, etc., with fowls, some cows and pigs, will give a man an assured income the first season, and will not interfere with his planting a variety of fruit trees, which will become profitable later.

GOOD METHOD FOR KEEPING POTATOES

Ventilation Helps Carry Off Moisture, Thus Keeping Tubers Dry During Winter.

The place for storing potatoes should have plenty of ventilation. Bins ought not to be over eight feet square and should have slat walls with hollow partitions, or there should be plenty of ventilating tubes with slat sides reaching from top to bottom of the bin. Where bins are as large as eight-feet square a ventilating tube in the middle of each one would be desirable. Ventilation helps to carry off moisture, thus keeping the potatoes dry and making it possible to cool them off quickly in the fall and keep them cool during the winter.

The Business Hen.

Anything worth doing is worth doing well—the man who sees no money in the hen on the farm is the man who considers her only as a scavenger, a necessary evil, good enough to turn the waste she finds into eggs and flesh for the table, but too insignificant for him to meddle with. He is the man, too, who never keeps accounts, who may wonder how the wife manages to keep the table supplied, but who never takes time to think the matter out.

POET AND THE INGENUE

By C. WENGLER.

She had come into the hotel grill room with her chaperon. He was dining with a young friend. Eyes were drawn to eyes, and during the long dinner neither saw but one face in that crowded room.

She saw the head of a god, hair tinged with gray, delicate poetic hands, a sensitive mouth and eyes that looked a world of sorrow and understanding. He was a man, old, soul-seared, satisfied. But the girl was too young in life to read signposts.

He saw a young girl with innocent blue eyes, a full, rosy mouth that suggested kisses, cheeks red with a redness that has recently come from the country. She was fresh, full of light and laughter, curiosity and expectation. The man read her with the understanding of the expert in human nature.

When she passed from the grill room her eyes went to his and she smiled as a child smiles at some new and as yet unencountered pleasure. And he looked after her as a connoisseur in human weaknesses who has chanced upon a new toy.

Such was their meeting.

The young girl spoke to her chaperon about the man with the godlike head. The chaperon told her that she must never mention his name, that she must not know that sort of a man. A great unhappiness settled about the girl's heart. She wondered why! She knew so little of things as they are, this girl with the innocent blue eyes and the red cheeks fresh from the country.

The next morning the girl came into the chaperon's rooms noiselessly. The chaperon was at the telephone.

"Oh, splendid, Jack! I've wanted to meet Owen Marsh ever since I read that exquisite poem of his, 'The Lovers of Lara.' Bring him to tea at four and I'll ask some congenial people. Until four, good-by!"

The girl slipped out of the rooms as quietly as she had come in. She couldn't bear to meet the eyes of her chaperon just then. Owen Marsh was the man with the godlike head! Owen Marsh was coming to tea! What could it mean after the words of last night? Was she really to meet her hero after all?

A little later she returned to her chaperon, to await announcement of the afternoon tea. None came. Instead, that gracious lady turned to her:

"Child, Madam Manette telephoned that she would like you to take your lesson at four today, instead of two. Estelle will call for you at five and take you for a chocolate."

The girl made no reply. Her mind was in a whirl. But about 5:30 that afternoon, as Owen Marsh was whispering insinuatingly into the chaperon's delicate pink ear, a slip of a girl entered the rooms. She walked directly to her chaperon, but without looking at her. Her eyes were on the man with the godlike head.

The chaperon forgot herself. "I thought you were driving in the park," she said sternly.

"Estelle told me you were having a tea," still looking straight at the face that had so thrilled her, "and I didn't want to miss—him."

The girl dropped into the chair at the elbow of the man with the wonderful face. And there was nothing for the chaperon to do but—introduce them.

Some one called her away then, and the man and the girl were left alone. In all that roomful of people neither saw any other. It seemed to each that they had waited long for this moment. They made the most of it.

"They couldn't keep us apart," the girl said.

"I have known you always," said the man.

"I love you," said the girl.

"I've always loved you," said the man.

And then some one intruded, some one that could not be escaped.

"I'll meet you under the roses in the corridor," whispered the man.

Before the guests had all taken their leave the girl slipped away. When the man left the chaperon's room he found the girl—waiting—under the roses. He lifted her into the taxi and they drove far out into the country to a little inn, where a room always waited for the man.

He named her the Blush of Dawn and called himself the Valley of the Shadow. He was a poet; she was an ingenue. One night of inspiration was his. A night that shattered every illusion was hers. Then he told her that in the Valley of the Shadow men live—alone. He went back to his lair with one more sensation livening his sluggish blood. It was on such moments that he lived.

She went into the street, for the chaperon was a foolish woman; she closed the door against her. It was for this that the girl had grown up over night.

The man boasted of his conquest. He was a—poet. Some men turned their backs upon him. Others took up the scent laid bare. Women read the poem the girl had inspired, and asked the poet to dinner. The chaperon sent him a silly note, swearing undying devotion. The girl's aunt invited him to give lectures on Bjornsen and Ibsen in her home of mornings.

But the girl—ah, the girl—why ask?

Backache Warns You

Backache is one of Nature's warnings of kidney weakness. Kidney disease kills thousands every year.

Don't neglect a bad back. If your back is lame—if it hurts to stoop or lift—if there is irregularity of the secretions—suspect your kidneys. If you suffer headaches, dizziness and are tired, nervous and worn-out, you have further proof.

Use Doan's Kidney Pills, a fine remedy for bad backs and weak kidneys.

MADE A VICTORY FOR "SENCE"

Farmer Most Cleverly Outwitted, and Then Insult Was Added to Injury.

Two large orchards, side by side, brought much profit to Farmer Turmut, and much trouble. For the orchards were considered fair game by the youth of the village, and two orchards are harder to watch than one.

One day, looking from one orchard to the other, Turmut saw a small boy shin down a tree and uttering a word of warning to another imp still up among the apples, ran off.

Turmut reached that tree in record time.

"Got yer this time!" he roared to the boy almost hidden among the leaves. "Come down!"

Getting no answer and not being in a hurry, he sat down and waited. Time passed, and still he waited, until a servant brought him a note that had just been dropped through the letterbox. He did not wait after he had read it as follows:

"Some people as apples, some as sence. You blu watchin a pare of trowsis stuffed with straw, and we blu gettin' your apples from the other orchard. Grate victory for sence."

He'd Called Seventeen.

Jim was a new porter in the hotel and he was putting in his first night at his new and responsible position. It was late in the morning, and so far Jim had done all he was told and getting on splendidly.

Call 17 and 4," commanded the night clerk as he looked over his call sheet. Jim obeyed. After he had been gone for a considerable time, the clerk went up to see if he had called the rooms designated.

"Well," sighed the new porter whom he found on the third floor, "I've got seventeen of 'em up, but I haven't started on the other four yet.—National Food Magazine.

The Necessity.

"I'm going to leave, ma'am."

"Good gracious, cook! What will we do for bread in the morning?"

"If you want bread, ma'am, you'll knead it, that's all."

The largest cement kiln in the world, operated entirely by electricity, recently was put into operation by a Pennsylvania plant.

WIFE WON

Husband Finally Convinced.

Some people are wise enough to try new foods and beverages and then generous enough to give others the benefit of their experience. A wife writes:

"No slave in chains, it seemed to me, was more helpless than I, a coffee captive. Yet there were innumerable warnings—waking from a troubled sleep with a feeling of suffocation, at times dizzy and out of breath, attacks of palpitation of the heart that frightened me.

(Tea is just as injurious as coffee because it contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee.)

"At last my nervous system was so disarranged that my physician ordered no more coffee." I capitulated.

"Determined to give Postum a fair trial, I prepared it according to directions on the pkg., obtaining a dark brown liquid with a rich snappy flavour similar to coffee. When cream and sugar were added, it was not only good but delicious.

"Noting its beneficial effects in me the rest of the family adopted it—all except my husband, who would not admit that coffee hurt him. Several weeks elapsed during which I drank Postum two or three times a day, when, to my surprise, my husband said: 'I have decided to drink Postum. Your improvement is so apparent—you have such fine color—that I propose to give credit where credit is due.' And now we are coffee-slaves no longer."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Postum now comes in two forms:

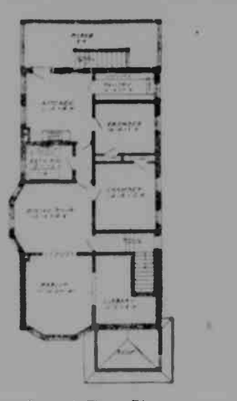
Regular Postum—must be boiled.

Instant Postum is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. Grocers sell both kinds.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

THE AMERICAN HOME

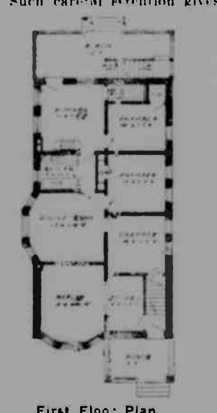
Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 178 West Jackson boulevard, Chicago, Ill., and only enclose two-cent stamp for reply.



This is a two flat building of six rooms each, and it represents a style that is popular at the present time in some of the larger cities.

Such buildings are generally built and owned by men who live in the lower flat and rent the upper. In case the building is fitted with a steam heating plant the owner manages the boiler and the hot water heater, thus supplying steam and hot water for the whole building.

It costs very little more to heat two flats than one when steam is employed, so as it is a matter of economy to have one heating apparatus, and as for hot water the same rule applies. The hot water heaters in flat buildings are little round stoves, either with water jackets or lined with coils of pipe through which the water circulates. Sometimes in winter the water is heated from a coil of water pipe inside the furnace of the boiler, but for the better buildings the hot water heater is entirely separate from the steam heating plant.



A six room flat like this on a good street in the city of Chicago will rent from $40.00 to $50.00 per month, according to the size of the rooms, cost of the building, and the janitor service that goes with it. In the better resident sections a great deal of work is put on the lawn, in washing the front and back steps, front hallway, cleaning the plate glass and a thousand little things that cannot well be enumerated but which go to make up the proper appearance of a well kept building.

All deliveries of groceries and parcels of all kinds are required to be made at the rear entrance. There is a heavy galvanized garbage can on the back porch at the outside of each kitchen door; this is emptied by the janitor every morning. In the summertime usually the porches are washed down with a hose either morning or evening and the grass is sprinkled either in the front or at the back, or both. Such careful attention gives a building of this character an air of thrift and a tone of superiority which commands respect enough to secure good rents.

Second Floor Plan.

First Floor Plan.

One flat in such buildings often rents for enough to pay the interest and taxes on the whole investment so that the owner can figure his own rent only costs him the janitor service, repairs, etc. A two flat brick building the size of this one, which is twenty-seven feet in width and forty-nine feet in depth, is generally valued in the resident sections of Chicago at from $3,000 to $10,000, according to the size of the lot, location, style of finish and general condition.

In designing flats, architects try to avoid long hallways. There is generally not much objection to passing through a dining room, as it is not used much except at meal time so the dining room may be counted as part of the hall and save that much space.

It is considered a great advantage to have windows on both sides of a building. Too many resident flat buildings are placed right up against each other so the windows at the sides get no light except from the so-called light areas. When the buildings are long and narrow, as most of them are, the middle rooms are quite dark even when the sun is shining. On gloomy days a good many high priced flats are so dark that artificial light is necessary all day long. Flat life is objectionable enough at best, however, if a man owns a building like this on a corner lot he may consider himself in luck.

The lower flat is always smaller than the upper one because the front stairway generally spoils one room, but in this plan a reception hall is secured which may be used as an adjunct to the parlor on the first floor. It is always important to have one bath room over the other so the plumbing pipes may be as short as possible and grouped so as to include both bath rooms and both kitchens.

Flat buildings have undergone considerable evolution during late years. The new ones are a noticeable improvement over older buildings from the fact that most of the more pretentious new flat buildings have good porches both in front and at the back; they have large windows, ventilating shafts, light hallways and wide easy stairs, they have heavy hardwood cut side doors, generally with a large panel of plate glass in front.

The porches are heavy with cement floors, especially in front, and I notice that more attention is being paid to back porches every year. Families living in flats like to get outside at every opportunity, usually one porch or the other is sheltered from the sun or the wind so that it is possible to get outside in one direction or the other. Builders are learning that it pays to cater to the wishes of renters, and they are paying more attention to such accessories.

In the Footsteps of Xenophon.

It is a beautiful ride of ten hours across the lake to Tadvat, a little Armenian village where life in all its simplicity may be seen as it was 2,000 years ago. Farther south, a day's journey from Lake Van, is Bitlis, another mission station. It is a beautiful place on the Bitlis Su, one of the head waters of the Tigris. Way back in the time Xenophon, when the 10,000 Greeks marched on their way to the sea, they passed Bitlis, and even then the Kurds hurled stones down upon them from the castle rock.

At the present time the Turkish government is building a good permanent road through the Armenian mountains, and it is a picturesque country through which it passes. There are high mountains, streams bounding over the rocks, quaint villages perched in precipitous places and inaccessible during the winter time. At Sert, in the mountains farther south, I was told that a wagon had never been seen; even the horsemen must climb over steep rocks, leaving his horse to follow him.—Christian Herald.

Harmful Type.

Mayor Gaynor was a good hater—a good hater of shams and hypocrisy and cant.

He hated also the overoptimistic, overcharitable man, who has a good word for all. Of such a man he said one day:

"These fellows, praising the praiseworthy and blameworthy alike, do harm. It was one of these fellows who remarked of a notorious scandalmonger:

"'She is so kind, so indulgent, by nature! Why, even when she is speaking ill of people she doesn't believe a word of what she says.'"

As Babies Regard It.

According to Prof. A. A. Berle of Boston, "baby talk," in which parents indulge, is bad for babies. As a matter of fact, many infants have for years looked upon it as an insult to their intelligence and have refused to be interested in it.—Punch.

Criminals' Finger Prints.

Dr. Heintl recommends a very good method for taking the finger prints of criminals, this not relating to finger print records in an anthroponometric bureau, but where the record is to be taken on the spot where a crime occurred, such as on a wall or any object which cannot be moved and where the print is impossible to photograph on account of lighting or other reason. He makes use of a very fine color powder so as to dust it over the prints which are of a more or less greasy nature, and in this way the powder adheres to the finger print and takes all its gradations. Then a specially prepared paper is pressed upon the print and the powder adheres to it so as to give a good copy of the original. Such paper is prepared with a mixture of beeswax and paraffin, adding a few drops of glycerine.

RINGWORM ITCHED TERRIBLY

1545 Alsquith St., Baltimore, Md.—"My children were afflicted with what they called ringworm of the scalp contracted from a house-cat they were playing with. The ringworm formed on their scalps about the size of a silver dollar and their hair fell out, leaving a round scale or crust on their scalps. Their hair fell out in round spots. There was terrible itching, and they scratched till the blood came. They were very fretful and could not sleep at night, and they were very cross.

"They were treated for several months with no improvement whatsoever. I was told they would never have any hair and would always be bald. Then I began using Cuticura Soap in connection with Cuticura Ointment and the first week I could see the wonderful remedies were doing all they were claimed to do and in six weeks' time they were entirely cured. They all have a beautiful growth of hair." (Signed) Mrs. Sadie Pollock, Jan. 1, 1913.

This Is Vital to Every Owner

OF A

Maxwell-Briscoe Motor Car

Made at Tarrytown, N. Y. and New Castle, Ind., 1905 to 1913

Also to all Owners of Stoddard-Dayton, 1905 to 1914; Columbia Gasoline and Electrics, 1906 to 1914; Everitt Cars of Any Model; Brush, Sampson and Courier Cars

THERE ARE THREE GOOD REASONS why you should have your car overhauled now and worn parts replaced.

FIRST: The garage man can give you better service—and you can spare the car better now than later. No matter whether you are going to keep the car, or sell or trade it in on a new one—it will pay you well to have it thoroughly overhauled, worn parts replaced by new ones and body repainted.

SECOND: We are able to furnish replacement parts for all models of above makes of cars within 48 hours from receipt of order. Have concentrated this branch of the business at Newcastle, Ind. (center of population of the U. S.) Here we have a $1,750,000 investment in plant and stock. 45,000 separate bins of parts.

THIRD: And perhaps the best reason why you should secure your requirements now—we must increase prices 20% January 1st, when the new parts price lists will be off the presses.

NOW NOTE THIS—Never before in the history of this industry has a new concern, having bought the plants and assets of a bankrupt one, taken upon itself the obligation of furnishing replacement parts for the cars it never made.

THE MAXWELL MOTOR COMPANY DID. We considered it good business, even if not a moral or legal obligation.

WE FOUND 122,000 owners out in the cold, as it were—pleading for parts. Their cars laid up and useless in most cases.

WE'VE INVESTED about one and three-quarters millions ($1,750,000) dollars in a plant and stock of parts, for over 150 different models, made by the concerns that comprised the United States Motor Company, whose assets we purchased from the Receiver thru the U. S. Courts.

WE TOOK THE NAME MAXWELL solely for the protection of 60,000 persons who had bought cars under that name.

HAD WE CHOSEN ANOTHER NAME those 60,000 cars would have had almost no value in the second-hand market. As it is, they have a definite value. And by the replacement of the worn parts your car will be good for a long time to come.

ANY RECOGNIZED DEALER or repair man—whether he handles the present Maxwell line or not—can procure these parts for you. Or you can order direct. Shipment will be made within 24 to 48 hours after receipt of the order at Newcastle.

Write for our booklet—"How to Make Your Car Last Twice As Long." In which the names of the above mentioned Dealers appear.

GRANTSVILLE.

Mr. Lewis Gingerich and family moved into the house he recently purchased.

Merchant Boning was a Baltimore City visitor the past week.

Mrs. Frank Blocher, after visiting in Lancaster, Pa., has returned here.

Davis, the new Maryland town near this place, is putting on city airs. It has an electric light system and a telephone line. The J. B. Davis and Sons Co. are wide awake business people.

Miss Edna Bender, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Bender, is happy over the arrival of a Christmas gift in the shape of a splendid piano. Kris Kingle was appreciated just as much as if received at a later date.

Mrs. Hampton Butler and Mrs. Lloyd Hoover, of Jennings, a few miles from here, are patients in the John's Hopkins hospital Baltimore. Dr. H. T. Robinson accompanied them to the hospital.

Last week several families of this vicinity moved to Fredoria, Mercer county, Pa., as follows: Milton J. Folk, Norman Ringer and Arthur Jordan. Miss Edith Smouse, a niece of Mrs. Jordan, accompanied them to their new home. Messrs. Folk and Jordan purchased farms near Fredoria. It is the intention of Mr. Ringer to buy as soon as he can find a property to suit him.

Born—to Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Miller, of Jennings, a daughter.

The box-supper held at Jennings, netted the Sunday school $45, besides offering those present a very enjoyable time.

The sheriff was seen traveling through this part of the country last week.

W. O. Blocher, of this place, visited relatives and friends in Meyersdale, Pa., part of last week.

"I say, my friend," called the motorist to the farmer, as he drew up alongside of the field, "I'm looking for a decent road to take me into Squigglesville."

"I'm darned glad to hear it," replied the farmer. "Ef ye happen to find it, stranger, send me a tellygram, will ye?"—Judge. He might have said Grantsville.

Thanksgiving night three young men of the neighborhood of the old King farm, dressed them elves up in women's clothes and proceeded to call on some of the old bachelors of that locality. A very pleasant hour was spent with J—. The last call was made on ——, who was very glad to meet the young ladies(men). After a very social time, one of the ladies remarked that she was from Cumberland and would enquire the way to Mr. O——s. Mr. Bachelor suggested, that if his company would be acceptable he would be pleased to pilot them over there. He was assured that they would be glad to have his company. He lighted his lantern and the happy journey began. What bliss was his. After a delightful tramp of three-quarters of a mile a revelation occurred and the lovable young lady developed into a young man. For some time afterwards the atmosphere was filled with—not gentle words of love, but with angry and blasphemous sounds.

WE would suggest to the readers of this paper that, in making up their list of Christmas presents they include the REPUBLICAN. Its weekly visits would be appreciated. It publishes the local events of Garrett county. It is a paper for the home circle. It interests the old folks as well as the young folks and children. It is the only seven column paper published in the county. The paper speaks for itself. Your sons and daughters away from home would be pleased to receive THE REPUBLICAN. It would keep them posted about affairs in the old home neighborhood. It would take the place of the letter you failed to write. Every week it would be in their family circle. Can you think of a present that would give more pleasure than the 52 visits of the REPUBLICAN? Only $1.25 a year.

BIG DISCOVERY AT ELKTON

Epoch Making Remedy Made By Dr. John D. Bear.

His Emulsion Was Tested Four Years Before it was Put on the Market. Testimonials.

A wonderful remedy has been discovered by Dr. John D Bear of Virginia. There are testimonials after testimonials given by people who have used this remedy and all say it has proven to be a great success. It was experimented with for four years before being put on the market, during that time it effected some great cures. We believe it has come to stay and be used as a remedy. Everyone can rely on it to help stamp out the ravages of the consumption germ. If this remedy continues to meet with such success it will be a great thing for our country, as the State of Virginia alone lost 5,000 people last year from consumption, and 20,000 are reported to have it now. It was found out yesterday that Sturgiss Pharmacy has ordered a shipment of this great remedy. We congratulate our drug store on being so prompt.—Advertisement.

THE FARMERS TRAIN LARGELY PATRONIZED

By Agriculturalists and Townspeople When it Visited Oakland.

The Farmers train advertised to stop at Swanton, Deer Park and Oakland, appeared on time. The train consisted of a sleeping car, dining car, two coaches and baggage car. The first coach was designated as the Dairy car. In this car short talks were given on breeds and breeding, cow testing associations, some common cow diseasee, grass and alfalfa.

The second coach was designated as the woman's car. The subjects discussed were, domestic science, home economics, practical demonstration and the economic use of some home labor saving appliances, practical poultry on the farm, home garden, fruits.

The baggage car was the live stock department. Here was seen a Guernsey bull and cow, an Ayrshise cow, and a Jersey cow. All registered stock. Here were also exhibited practical appliances for the stable

The lecturs were Dr. Richard S. Hill, director Farmers Institutes; S. S. Buckley, V. M. D., of College Park; Guy E. Walcott, U. S. Department of Agriculture; James R. Mahaffy, Wilmington, Del.; Mr. E. I. Oswald, a practical poultry man, of Chewsville, Md., and Miss Mary A. Burnite, Denton, Md.

Miss Burnite's talks on domestic science were practical and her demonstrations with a fireless cooker very interesting.

The following B. & O. officials accompanied the car and made themselves generally useful. C. W. Allen, Traveling Pass. Agt., W. I. Bishop, Traveling Agent Industrial Dept. B. & O. R. R. Mr. Cox, of the Cumberland freight office, and Mr. Sterling B. & O. mill agent. We had the pleasure of meeting these gentlemen and found them courteous and much interested in the object of the train. Dr. Hill, Messrs. Allen and Bishop placed us under obligations for favors shown. Mr. Charles Brooks, one of the trustees of the Western Maryland College accompanied the train. At Swanton and Deer Park much interest was manifestnd in the splendine work of those in charge.

At Oakland there was, during the two hours and a half the train stood on the side track, a large number of people present to inspect and listen. The lecture-room cars were always filled with eager listeners. The live stock car with its high bred dairy animals, and its equipment, as a modern barn, delighted all who visited it. Those in charge were ever ready to explain and answer questions.

At least 50 pupils of the Oakland High school visited the tram, Farmers, their wives and daughters for miles around Oakland were present. Mr. W. A. Smith brought up a load of interested people from Hoyes. Hundreds of Oakland men and women were in attendance.

The farmers train was a great success and must result in much good. The Western Maryland College and the B. & O. Railroad Compainy are to he congratulated on the splendid thought which brought about this train.

It is to be regretted that the train could not have been held here for two or three days, and the largest hall in town secured for the lectures. They were worthy of it.

WHAT RED CROSS SEALS DO.

Every Red Cross Christmas Seal that is sold is a real bullet in the fight against tuberculosis. These seals last year helped to support thousands of needy tuberculosis patients and to give them a chance for life. They provided for many visiting nurses, whose hundreds of thousands visits brought instructions and cheer to numerous patients. They helped maintain dispensaries in scores of cities from the Atlantic to the Pacific, where thousands of consumptive patients received free treatment, aid and advice. They provided the means to purchase millions of copies of circulars, pamphlets and other literature with which the public has been educated about tuberculosis. They have established and helped to maintain more than 150 open-air schools for children who needed open-air treatment. These are just a few of the ways in which the $400,000 received last year was expended. This year $1,000,000 is needed. Surely every one can help by buying at leat ten seals.

We will sell you anything from a doll to a Ford car. TREACY.

GRAND JURY REPORT.

To the Honorable, the Judges of the Circuit Court for Garrett county.

The Grand Jury for the December term, 1913, of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, having now completed our labors, desire to make our report to the court and receive our discharge.

We have had before us and examined 96 witnesses, and have found 29 presentments and indictments.

We have found presentments in all cases in which we believed the evidence justified and have ignored trival cases and those cases in which the evidence did not warrant presentments.

In accordance with the instructions of your honor, we have inspected the several county buildings and have found them all in good condition except that we find that there is a leak in the court house above the Orphans' court room which should be repaired at once.

The records in the several offices in the court house are correctly and neatly kept. We recommend that additional filing cases and an additional book case be procured for the use of the Orphans Court, and would also recommend that a toilet be installed on the third floor of the court house for the use of the grand jurors. Additional vault space should be provided in the office of the county treasurer, as the same is insufficient to meet the requirements of said office. We would also recommend that the county commissioners provide additional cots and blankets for use in the jail.

We desire to express our thanks and appreciation to the court, the States Attorney and the county officials for the kindness shown us and assistance rendered us in the discharge of our duties.

We now beg to be discharged.

EDITOR RASCHE WAS THE ORATOR

At The Annual Memorial Services of Elkins Lodge of Elks.

The annual memorial services of the Elkins Lodge of Elks were held Sunday afternoon in the Elkins Grand opera house, when the Elks and a large gathering of friends that packed the theatre from galleries to pit, paid silent and sorrowful tribute to their absent brothers. An impressive musical program was rendered after the ritualistic memorial exercise of the lodge. The feature of the afternoon was the eloquent and scholary memorial address, which was delivered by Editor Leo J. Rasche, of the Grafton Sentinel, a member of Grafton Lodge. This was one of the most magnificent oratorical efforts ever heard in Elkins, and the great audience present was held under a magical spell until its conclusion. The eulogy to the departed members was delivered by Hon. W. E. R. Byrne, of Charleston, and this also was a beautiful tribute to the memory of the departed members.

STATE CAN SAVE FEES.

Among the amendments to the State Constitution adopted at the last election was one authorizing the General Assembly of Marvland to do away with the multiplicity of attorneys that now draw saleries from the State and substitute a legal department under the direction of the Attorney General. How far the change shall go depends upon the action of the Legislature. Drafts of laws that will make a clean sweep are now being considered.

It is the general impression that the Attorney General's office is to be organized along the same lines as the City Solicitor's office in Baltimore city. This plan would provide for a number of deputies or assistants to be appointed by the Attorney General.

Among the boards and departments who now have attorneys whose tenure of office is considerered at stake are the following:

Election Supervisors throught the State.

School Boards throughout the State.

County Commissioners throughout the State.

The statement has been made that more than 100 attorneys are involved in the proposed change and that the State now pays out more than $100,000 a year for legal advice.

Garrett's Latest New Town.

The new town of Davis, Garrett county, where a postoffice has just been established at the request of Representative David J. Lewis, is located about two miles northwest of Jennings, near the site of the defunct village of Cleveland City. Many dwellings have been built and are occupied. The work of sawing the first lumber for the buildings which have made the town began April 9 last. A large store has been established. The mill has a capacity of from 35,000 to 45,000 feet daily and there is machinery for the utilization of the by-products. The mill is one of the most modern in the country.

A railroad 12 miles long penetrates the timber tract which embraces 5,000 acres. The development is being pushed by J. B. Davis & Son's Company, composed of J. B. Davis, John Davis, Wilber Davis, S. I. Bowling and F. W. Davis. Davis is located on a level strip of bottom land alongside the north branch of the Casselman river. The road crosses the river just six times. Davis promises to be a busy place for years to come.

WHERE TO DO YOOR CHRISTMAS SHOPPING

Republican Advertisers Want And Should Have Your Trade.

The Republican this week issues a two page supplement. It is our Christmas offering to our patrons. The holiday reading will prove interesting to the thousands of readers of this paper, and the holiday advertising will be equally as interesting. The advertisers are the wide-awake, live and let live merchants of Oakland. They have provided for the holiday trade of 1913 and want you to call and inspect their holiday purchases. You will be wise in doing so. We recommend an early inspection of these splendid goods. By calling early you have the first choice and a greater variety to select from.

For Christmas Specialties, perfumes, sachet powders, Parker's fountain pens, Martha Washington candies, and other nice and good things go the Oaklanc Pharmacy. Box paper, combs and brushes.

Dolls and toys in great variety at James Treacy's store. We cannot enumerate them. They are just exactly what the little people wish for and the prices away down. Plenty of good things for the table.

See Wade Hinebaugh's advertisement ladies, He has many suitable articles for the husband or the young man of the home circle. His has a well equipped harness and saddlery, with automobile and carriage furnishings.

For groceries, fruits, nuts, candies, etc., do not forget "the exclusive grocery store" of Art White. His line is good enough "for the King's table," or the home of an American citizen. Oysters, celery etc. For something extra good go to Whites.

As usual, J. H. Hart's store is pleasingly supplied with a full line of holiday goods for the home folks. Good sensible gifts, things that will delight the recipient and donor as well. Call at Hart's and see his display. Some nice things for the men folks are shown.

A. D. Naylor & Co. will furnish you a nice cutter, for enjoyable sleigh rides; a buggy or carriage, if you prefer. If something extra is wanted for father and the boys, they have a car of Burton bob-sleds. A fine line of farm implements. Naylor's line of useful presents is complete.

For things beautiful and useful, for appropriate and cheerful decorations, for the thousand and one things needed to make home enjoyable at Yule time, for your Christmas and New Year cards, for a beautiful line of novelties do not fail to call at Hamil's Book and Stationery store.

Dixon & Kelso are headquarters for holiday needs. They have provided gifts for each member of the home circle. Do not miss seeing their offerings and getting their prices. Their stock is immense, and the selection fine. In Christmas groceries and candies they have a choice selection.

The Rexal Store, Mr. Jos. E. Harned proprietor, is well worth a visit from every one in hunt of holiday goods. There are many suitable articles to gladden the heart of any one. Read Mr. Harned's advertisement, and do not fail to visit the Rexal store before completing your purchases.

Arthur Townshend, at the old Townshend stand has a nice line of useful and appropriate articles for holiday gifts for boys and girls, young men and women, and parents, selected with a view of pleasing the purchaser. The prices are just right. Christmas groceries fruits, nuts, candies in plenty.

The display of seasonable goods made by H. C. Sincell will attract a large number of purchasers. The stock is large, the selection beautiful and appropriate. In seeking gifts do not fail to call at Sincell's. To do so means, pleasure, profit and happiness to yourself as well as to the recipient of your gifts.

For clothing, for shoes, for hats—nothing more appropriate for the male folks—call on A. E. Weimer. He has the latest fashions, a splendid assortment and at prices to meet your approval. Weimer can hat, clothe and shoe the male portion of the family, and do it splendidly, neatly and satisfactorily.

J. M. Davis & Sons make a very beautiful display of holiday articles,—something useful as well as ornamental. Prices running from 5 cents up. You will be surprised to see this attractive exhibit, covering the first floor of their store building. You will find something suitable for every member of the family.

You will find at Thomas Littles store choice fruits, nuts and candies, a line of Christmas groceries that will make your "mouth water," an up-to-date stock of general goods that will please and delight you and yours. Of course you will see Little's stock of holliday attractions before making your purchases. You will be wise if you do.

Andrew Gonder the toy man, the recognized agent of Santa Claus, has his store fixed up in great shape, one of the best decorated rooms we have seen this season. The shelves are full of things that add to the pleasures and happiness of life, "Andy" Gonder's holiday offering has a reputation which reaches far and wide. He has a knack of getting just what you want. A visit to his store is an enjoyable event.

At Mountain Lake Park, the People's Store is well stocked with goods of every description, a sort of Noah's ark. Things that bring delight and pleaure. There are fruits, candies, nuts, fine groceries, etc. H B. Harvey is ready to meet your wants and make your visit to his store one of profit and pleasure.

THE DEATH RECORD

EDWARD HOOD SINCELL.

Wednesday morning this community heard with much sorrow of the death of Edward Hood Sincell, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward H. Sincell, at the family home. Edward Hood Sincell was born in Oakland, December 23, 1891. He was educated at Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg, Pa., graduating therefrom last June. He was preparing himself for entrance to Johns Hopkins University for a course in medicine next fall. Six weeks ago he was stricken with typhoid fever and was very ill from the start. He had the very best medical attention, but his condition, owing to a former illness, was such that his recuperative powers could not respond to the treatment. The funeral will take place Sunday at 10:30 a. m. from the Methodist church. Among the young people Edward had many friends, he was a bright student and was hopeful of a promising future. In this hour of affliction the family have the deepest sympathy of the community.

He is survived by his parents, one brother Milton, his maternal grandfather, paternal grandmother, a number of uncles and aunts, and a host of warm friends. R

PROMINENT REPUBLICANS TO MAKE A SURVEY

Prominent State Leaders to Be Guests of Andrew Ramsay of the State Road Commission.

Prominent Republican leaders of Maryland have been invited by Andrew Ramsay, a member of the State Roads Commission, to be his guest at dinner at the Queen City Hotel, in Cumberland, on Thursday evening. The dinner was originally planned as a compliment to Governor Goldsborough and a few friends. At first it had no political significance. When it became generally known that the Governor, Senator Jackson and other leaders would be Mr. Ramsay's guests, the affair was seized upon by Western Maryland Republicans as an opportune moment to review party conditons and to prepare for battles of the future, as well as to extend a welcome to the distinguished visitors. The occasion seemed to meet a general demand, not only in Western Maryland, but throughout the state, that the responsible leaders of the Republican party should get together, put their heads together, calmly review the unfavorable results of the election, determine as far as possible the causes which produced the result, and proceed to eliminate the causes.

Because of the apparent need of such occasion the dinner at Cumberland has developed into a Republican statewide event. Those leaders who have accepted invitations have agreed that whatever they will say will be entirely of a suggestive nature. They have declared that they are unwilling to arrogate to themselves the important task of determining what the Republican party shall and shall not do. They say they are willing to take first steps, expecting other Republicans toroughout the state to be animated by the same spirit by which they will be guided, namely, to let the dead past bury its dead, to look to a future that looms up brightly, and to look to subordinate all personal aim, and ambitions to the general welfare of the party. Mr. Ramsay will permit his guests to give free reign to their views in speeches, which will be limited to 15 minutes each. He had not intended that his dinner should take on a politcal hue, but realizing that men of the character of his guests will not forego political discussion when brought together, he has yielded. The circle is constantly enlarging.

THE editor of the REPUBLICAN acknowledges the receipt of an invitation to the Ramsey dinner at the Queen City Hotel, Cumberland, tonight, but we regret our inability to be present. It will be a great gathering of the leading Republicans of the State.

OLD and NEW CARISTMAS CUSTOMS

THERE are two days of supreme importance to all christendom when, no matter what the difference in creeds, the whole Christian world unites in the observance of what are rightly regarded as the most significant anniversaries in the year. On Easter and Christmas all the churches are at one.

The story of the first Christmas is so universally known that it needs no repetition, and one hesitates to repeat it for fear of marring the beauty and simplicity of the original narrative The story of the origin of the observance of Christmas is quite another thing, however, and may be approached in a more mundane spirit. We take part in the time honored customs which are so intimately associated with the day without stopping to consider whether they had their inception in the Christmas idea or whether they ever had any other significance than they now have. We trim the Christmas tree, distribute our present, decorate with holly and mistletoe and sit down to a big dinner, and if we ever stop to think why we do these things (and it is more than likely that we don't) why, it is just the Christmas custom and that's all there is to it.

But it is very far from being all. The customs which seem such an integral part of the festival are inextricably tangled up with Roman, Scandinavian, German and Celtic ceremonials, in which very many of them had their origin. Our Christmas, when we investigate it, is found to be a melting pot of pagan traditions and practices without number, purged of their old significance and adapted to the higher faith

The observer halts before the contemplation of the countless variety of customs associated with Christmas in all lands, both in the past and the present day. To describe them all would fill a good sized book, so we can only refer briefly here to some of the most prominent of them.

The early fathers of the church, however much they might have desired to banish all pagan practices from the exercises of religion, were perforce obliged to allow their converts to retain part of the old usages. It was an impossibility to put an end to them, so they wisely decided that it was better to let the people follow their bent along certain lines rather than to antagonize them by insisting too strongly on a course which they were bound to oppose. The more glaringly heathenish rites were eradicated, and those which remained were purged of their more objectionable features and infused with a new spirit.

Christmas was not observed at all, so far as we can find any record, for 200 or 300 years after the birth of Christ, and as the event had occurred in such an humble fashion men were quite unable to determine its date when they began to interest themselves in keeping the anniversary. There is not a month in the year for which some authority has not claimed the honor of the nativity. One thing is certain, and that is that it could not have occerred on the 25th of December, as this date is the height of the rainy season in Judea, as in California, and it is quite unlikely that the shepherds could have been watching their flocks by night under those conditions.

The first attempt on record to assign any date for the nativity was made in Egypt about 200 A. D., when May 20 was the date mentioned. From that time forward claims were made for various dates, January 6 and December 25 being the most in favor up to the time of Chrysostom in the fourth century, when the latter gained the preference.

This date was not chosen entirely without reason. The celebration of the winter solstice was one of the chief festivals of Rome, and among the Celts and Germans it was regarded with even greater significance. The sun, as the giver of light and heat, and consequently of life, has been an object of worship and adoration from the remotest times down to the present day; therefore the period of the winter solstice as marking the renewal of the power of the sun was a time of rejoicing among all peoples who either worshiped the sun directly or who regarded it as a manifestation of one of their deities. The 12 days between December 25 and January 6 were regarded as extremely important by the Teutonic races, who believed that at that time the influence of the gods was more powerfully directed toward the earth than at any other. Nothing could be more natural, therefore, than that these peoples, on turning to Christianity, should fix the commemoration of the appearance of the Saviour on the earth at the same time of year they had been accustomed to acknowledge the glory of the sun The significance of the two events is parallel; the one heralds new life to the physical world and the other the deliverance of the human race from the powers of evil.

It has been pointed out that in the early period of the church it was considered wise to allow the converts to retain some of the old customs. The observance of Christmas was therefore encouraged as a substitute for the pagan festivals, in particular for the Roman saturnalia, which occurred in December and which was so popular that while it originally lasted for one day only (the 17th), it was first extended to three days and later, under the Emperor Claudius, to seven. The festival was opened by public sacrifice before the temple of Saturn, followed by a great public banquet, in which all classes participated. From this time all the people seemed to go mad; the completest liberty prevailed and it was a time of universal festivity and merry making. Crowds swarmed through the streets shouting "To Saturnalia," a form of greeting similar to the modern "Merry Christmas." It was a holiday time in the widest sense; schools and law courts were closed and the senate adjourned; no criminal was executed and no war was proclaimed. The slaves enjoyed an equality with their masters, and even served them at the table. The people occupied themselves in calling on one another, in exchanging presents and attending banquets. There was always one day especially devoted to the children, a custom to which we may trace the particular significance of Christmas to children down to the present time

Certain other practices of the Saturnalia which Christmas has preserved related to candles, images and cakes. Candles were always in evidence at this time, as were small images made either of baked clay or dough. The Germans today always make a practice of baking great quantities of all kinds of Christmas cakes, which are an important and indispensable adjunct to the occasion.

The custom of decorating with evergreens at Christmas has the tradition of ages back of it. As far back as history goes people have been in the habit of using flowers and greens in all sorts of festivals. The use of the mistletoe, however, is a survival from the ancient Celts and Scandinavians, to whom it was an object of particular veneration at all times and especially when it grew on an oak. When found growing on this tree the Druids cut it with solemn ceremonies and used it in their sacrificial rites. It was believed to possess magic qualities of potent power. It is still potent, but only in the matter of conferring privileges.

The first historic mention of a Christmas tree was made in Strasburg in 1605, but the Danes go farther back than that They have a sweet old legend relating to the time when Ansgar first preached Christianity to the Danes, wherein is told how the Lord sent his three messengers, Faith, Hope and Charity, to help light the first Christmas tree. They sought for one that should be as high as hope and wide as love, and that bore the sign of the cross on every bough and they finally found it in the balsam fir

Beliefs which have been cherished for ages generally die hard, and the church, realizing this, introduced other practices into the old customs which survived from paganism. Such were the miracle plays and dramatic representations of early events in Christ's life, which received great attention during the middle ages and of which the Christmas carols may be considered an offshoot. These enjoyed great popularity throughout all Europe, but particularly in England, where in many villages today it is customary for troops of men and boys, called the waits, to go from door to door singing carols for several nights before Christmas.

Similarly in some of the country districts in France the children make the rounds of the village, carrying a little cradle on their backs and singing carols for pennies.

Santa Claus is not as familiar a figure in France as he is among us. There, instead of hanging up their stockings to be filled by him, they place their shoes in front of the fireplace on Christmas eve, so that the Christchild may leave their presents in them.

In north Germany, however, it is not the Christchild who gives the presents, but his servant, Knecht Ruprecht. This individual is usually represented by a man who clothes himself in a white robe and high buskins, a mask and an enormous wig. So attired he presents himself at the door and announces that he is sent by the Christchild to distribute gifts among the children. The parents receive him ceremoniously, and he inquires whether each child has been good, and if the answer is in the affirmative the child receives his presents; but if not, Knecht Ruprecht gives the parents a stick with the advice to use it often

In Belgium the children go about carrying paper stars with a lighted candle in the center from Christmas to Epiphany, to commemorate the appearance of the star of Bethlehem. There is a similar practice among some of the natives of Alaska belonging to the Greek church. A procession of men, women and children is formed, at the head of which is carried a large figure of a star covered with brightly colored paper. Two men also march at the head, carrying lanterns on long poles. The procession makes the rounds of the village stopping at each house, where the marchers are invited to come in and take refreshments. They always accept and after singing a carol or two they march on to the next house. This performance is kept up through Christmas week, but after the second night it is varied by the introduction of a new feature. The star bearers are pursued by men and boys, who try to catch them and destroy their stars, and while the significance of the game is supposed to lie in the fact that it is a representation of the soldiers of Herod killing the children of Bethlehem, the players are mainly concerned in the opportunities for a frolic which it affords and bother themselves little about the event it is supposed to commemorate.

The old custom of burning the yule log still endures in certain parts of Europe. It is an outgrowth of the feast of Jul among the ancient Scandinavians, when every winter at the solstice they kindled enormous fires in honor of the god Thor. Among the Slavonians of southeastern Europe the bringing in and burning of the yule log is an elaborate ceremony. Some time during the week before Christmas, or on the day before, an oak or beech tree is selected, but on account of the superstition that such trees are endowed with souls it is necessary to observe certain precautions while cutting it down. The hewers must wear gloves throughout the whole proceeding and before they dare lay an ax to the tree they must face the east and cross themselves three times, and in felling it thy must take care that it falls toward the east. Evil consequences will follow if they do not chop off a chicken's head on the fresh stump, using the same ax with which they cut down the tree. The first chip is the prize of the housewife, who preserves it to put under the cream dish, so that the cream will be rich and abundant during the year.

After sprinkling the newly hewn log with barley to insure good crops for the coming year it is ready to load on the ox wagon and the homeward journey is so timed that the house is not reached until after twilight falls. The housewife is on the lookout for it and as soon as she sees it coming she hastens to hide the table, the spoons, the fire shovel and the dining chairs, which are not brought to light again until the log has been kindled.

It is generally about midnight when the log is brought into the house, and it is received at the doorway by the father, who wishes his family a "Good morning and merry Christmas" three times. They, on greeting him in turn, shake over him some barley and, this ceremonial having been observed, he drags the log up to the hearth by means of a chain wound around it. In case the log is brought into the house before evening three sticks are cut from it and leaned against the eastern wall, where they remain, crowned with ivy, until the log is burned out.

The log must be paid marked respect by everybody up to the very last if good luck is to be enjoyed during the year, and no one had better approach it barefooted unless he wants to condemn himself to a whole year's suffering with sore feet.

Christmas eve is distinguished by feasting and if a visitor appears he is sprinkled with grain from a sieve by the master of the house, in return for which greeting he places three candles wound around with gold and silver thread in the bottom of the sieve. These are lit at the beginning of the meal and when everybody has had his fill the master of the house extinguishes them with a bit of bread dipped in wine.

Much more could be told concerning the way Christmas is observed in different localities and many curious beliefs and practices would thus be brought to light. Some can be traced directly to a purely Christian source; the origin of others is unexplainable, and very many prove to be relics of the ages preceding the introduction of Christianity. The features briefly touched upon above are only the skimmings of innumerable usages relating to this one day. There is no other day in the year about which such a great variety of traditions and observances cluster, for there is no other day which people so delight to commemorate and none which is regarded with such deep and universal veneration.

THE FAVORITE CHOCOLATE.

A quick dessert is Dresden crumbs. Mix a cupful of bread crumbs with half a cupful of grated chocolate, two tablespoonfuls of sugar and a pinch of salt. Put in a moderate oven and bake until the crumbs are hot and the chocolate melted. Serve with sweetened whipped cream.

Chocolate Cream Filling.—Mix in a bowl one cup of thick cream, half a teaspoonful of vanilla and two tablespoonfuls of grated chocolate and four tablespoonfuls of sugar.

Chocolate Pancakes. — Beat two eggs, add four tablespoonfuls of chocolate grated, half a cup of milk, half a cup of flour and two tablespoonfuls of sugar. If sweet chocolate is used the sugar may be omitted. Beat well and fry. Roll up and sprinkle with powdered sugar. Serve at once.

Chocolate Bread Pudding.—Soak a cup of bread crumbs in a quart of milk, add a cup of sugar, two squares of grated chocolate and the well beaten yolks of three eggs. Pour into a buttered pudding dish and put into the oven to bake, stirring often to keep the chocolate from rising to the top. When baked, spread with a meringeu made of the stiffly beaten whites of the eggs and three tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar.

Chocolate Pie.—Melt in a saucepan four ounces of grated chocolate. When it begins to soften, add a half cupful of hot milk, the yolks of three well beaten eggs and a half cup of sugar, one teaspoonful of butter and one tablespoonful of cornstarch dissolved in a little cold milk. Bring to the boiling point, stirring constantly, then let it cool. Stir in the stiffly beaten white of one egg and pour into baked crusts Whip the other two whites, add two tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar, pile on top apd brown slightly.

Chocolate Cake. — This is fine enough for any company. Cream one and a fourth cupfuls of butter, add a pound of brown sugar, one cupful of white sugar, the well beaten yolks of six eggs, one cupful of sweet milk, two cupfuls of flour sifted with three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, a third of a cake of chocolate grated, one whole lemon grated, one teaspoonful each of cloves, allspice and cinnamon One pound of chopped raisins, a fourth of a pound of blanched and sliced almonds and the stiffly beaten whites added last.

The art of seeing things is not something that may be conveyed in rules and precepts; it is a matter vital in the eye and ear, yea, in the mind and soul of which these are the organs. I have as little hope of being able to tell the reader how to see things as I would have in trying to tell him how to fall in love or to enjoy his dinner. Either he does or he does not, and that is all there is about it.
—John Burroughs.

SOME "BEST" RECIPES.

These dishes are all successful ones and will be highly satisfactory if made according to directions.

Lemon Milk Sherbet.—The juice of three lemons, a pint of sugar and a quart of rich milk frozen, will make a smooth and delicious frozen dessert A little of the grated rind of a lemon may be added if the flavor is liked.

Rice Pudding.—Put a quarter of a cup of rice with a half cup of raisins and a quarter of a cup of sugar into a quart of milk in a baking pan. Put into the oven and bake for three hours. A little cinnamon or nutmeg may be added, if liked, but this is a pudding that is hard to spoil. Stir for the first hour of cooking, so that the rice is well mixed in the milk.

Boiled Loaf Pudding.—Cut the crust from a pound loaf of bread and press as many raisins into the loaf with the fingers as it will hold without breaking. Make a custard of a pint of milk, a quarter of a cup of sugar and two eggs, and lay the bread in this uncooked custard. When it is all absorbed, put the loaf into a floured pudding cloth and drop it carefully into boiling water, for twenty minutes' cooking. Serve with a sauce made of two tablespoonfuls of butter, a cup of powered sugar, a little vanilla and a few tablespoonfuls of milk, or, better, cream. Melt the sauce over hot water, stirring constantly.

Chicken Jelly.—Chop a fowl, bones and all, until fine, cover with two quarts of water, and let simmer for six hours, then strain, skim off all the fat, when cold, and the jelly may then be seasoned and served in a number of ways. Mace or parsley, with salt and pepper, may be added while cooking, to the fowl, if so desired.

The honor of our life
Derives from this: to have a certain aim
Before us always, which our will must seek
Amid the peril of uncertain ways.
Then, though we miss the goal, our search is crowned
With courage, and along the path we find
A rich reward of unexpected things.
—Henry Van Dyke.

GOOD THINGS, OLD AND NEW.

The following is an old recipe:

Honey Cakes.—Take one quart of strained honey, add one-half pint of sugar, the same amount of melted butter, one teaspoonful of soda dissolved in one-half cupful of hot water, half a grated nutmeg and one teaspoonful of ginger. Mix all together and add enough flour to roll out. Cut with a cooky cutter and bake in a moderate oven.

Tomatoes and Chipped Beef.—Brown a tablespoonful of butter in a frying pan. Peel and slice two ripe tomatoes, fold in flour, season with salt and a sprinkling of cayenne, and fry five minutes in butter, turning to cook both sides. A little sliced onion can be added if desired. Over this spread evenly one cupful of chipped beef; cover closely and cook twenty minutes without stirring.

Cottage Soup—Put into a saucepan a tablespoonful of sweet drippings, when quite hot add a half pound from the neck of mutton, cut in small pieces. Put them and the bones into the fat and fry, turning until well browned. Cut up one carrot and one turnip into small pieces, two large onions cut fine, added to the meat. Keep turning until all are well mixed, then add a cupful of rice and a teaspoonful each of sugar and salt. Cook for five minutes, then add two and a half quarts of water. Put on the lid and boil for an hour. Add pepper and salt when ready to serve.

A Pretty Salad.—Lay a half of a pear on a crisp leaf of lettuce, put eight maraschino cherries and four small cream cheese balls around the pear, and cover with French dressing.

English Dessert. — Cut bananas lengthwise into halves, spread with jam, put together again and lay on a plate; cover with whipped cream and serve.

The jam roll takes the place of the jelly roll and is equally as good.

Pork chops baked with potatoes makes a most tasty dish. Put sufficient sliced potatoes, well salted, in a baking dish, pour on water and lay on the chops. Turn chops once while baking. The drippings season the potatoes.

Stand upright, speak thy thoughts, declare
The truth thou hast, that all may share;
Be bold, proclaim it everywhere;
They only live who dare.
—Lewis Morris.

ECONOMICAL RECIPES.

Buy beef ribs, cover them with a quart of water, a half can of tomatoes, a sliced onion, a red pepper minced and five whole cloves. Season with salt and cover closely. Simmer for three hours.

Gingerbread.—Mix together a half cup of lard and a cup of brown sugar; add a half teaspoonful of cinnamon and one teaspoonful of ginger. In a cupful of boiling water dissolve a teaspoonful of soda. Sift three cupfuls of flour with a teaspoonful of baking powder. Add the boiling water and soda the last thing.

Baked Cheese Puff.—Grease a pudding dish and put into it a layer of sliced bread with a slice of cheese on each slice. Beat one egg light, stir into it a pint of milk, salt slightly and pour the milk over the bread and cheese. Set in the oven and bake until lightly browned, then serve at once This is a simple, wholesome dish and makes a nutritious one to take the place of meat.

Coffee Tapioca Pudding—Soak a cupful of tapioca in water and put over the fire in a double boiler with a pint of coffee left from the last meal Cook until clear, then stir in sugar to taste. Serve hot with sugar and cream.

Codfish Rolls.—Mix together mashed potato and shredded codfish, season with butter, pepper and salt, if needed. Form the mixture into rolls the size of the second finger and three inches long. Roll in flour and fry in hot fat. Serve with a white sauce garnished with parsley.

HE VENTURED HIS LIFE

By S. V. LEVIS.

There wasn't a thing against Bessie Hicks, excepting the fact that her aging father was only a flagman at the railroad crossing, and he was rather a forlorn figure in his shabby coat with its one empty sleeve.

At any rate, four or five of the girls who attended the village school evidently considered it obligatory to ignore Bessie in their recess games, judging from the slights they thrust upon her.

However, Bessie's deportment was something to be emulated with profit; moreover, she was an apt pupil; and even in a school yard may be found a goodly percentage of young people to whom qualities of heart and mind appeal before mere externals.

"Shucks!" ejaculated Lena White, "Edna Larkin needn't consider herself so superior to Bessie. She's way below her in class—always is, dear knows; besides, she hasn't half her good manners."

The four or five "best dressers" had a most exclusive time of it, so it was not the flagman's little girl who had cause to complain of loneliness, by any means.

With the older children at school, the tots at home were sometimes permitted to play in a neighbor's back yard. They required watching, too, sometimes more than they got, for the straying instinct is particularly strong in some wee ones.

That this was true of at least two playmates, the small maids in question were to demonstrate soon, for, hand in hand, they managed to elude their elders, and were heading straight for the "railroad track," as Dotty pronounced it.

The screech of a locomotive whistle was sufficient to prevent Dotty's companion from venturing further, so Maizie prudently turned back in the direction of home.

The next minute there was a tiny white-garbed figure in the very middle of the track right above the watch box of the old flagman.

The child, bewildered by fright, was uncertain which way to go to get out of the way of the oncoming train.

It took but another moment for the flagman to comprehend the little one peril, and in the same moment h racing from his box with the eng well nigh at his heels.

Leaping on the track with the belching monster horribly near he had barely time to seize the paralyzed toddler by the back clothing, and to swing her aside his one arm, before the train wh by on its thunderous path.

A few pedestrians who had nessed the spectacle groaningly tu away their heads to avoid seeing mangled body of the helpless baby

Great was their relief, great as their amazement, when their daz eyes could assure them of the truti that the almost-victim had escape any worse injury than a few bruises

Excitement ran high among th group of spectators, and while one who recognized the child was taking her to her home, the little knot was presently augmented by the pupils from the school house.

"Who's hurt? What's the matter?" demanded the nowcomers, in alram.

"Couldn't be our Dorothy, could it!" almost screamed Edna Larkin, without waiting for a full account. Her fear-winged feet never halted until they bore her to her home.

"Then she isn't injured. They told the truth. Oh! I thought—"

"Yes," interrupted the neighbor who had carried in the object of solicitude, her escape was miraculous; but even more so was the escape of her rescuer. A braver deed never was performed than his, and physically handicapped as he was, too."

"Her rescuer? I never waited to—"

"Flagman Hicks," announced Mrs. Larkin. "I've just been told. Such heroism as his can be repaid never! To him we owe the life of our pet"

Edna went to her room where she might weep unseen. The debt was too much for words!

Give Fruit to Mayor of London.

An ancient city privilege was witnessed at London a few days ago, when the lord mayor, Sir David Burnett, was presented by the printers with a fine collection of luscious fruit. The gift marked the continuance of a custom which has existed for many years and is a survival of the days when the lord mayor was entitled to sample all the fruit that came into the city. All the fruit presented recently was grown in England, most of it came from Kent. Perfect-shaped pineapples, velvety peaches apples, pears and melons, and, indeed, almost every variety of fruit England can produce were to be seen in the overflowing cornucopia and three large baskets, decorated with carnations and blue silk ribbon in which the gift was contained.

Waterproofing a Raincoat.

The following process is recommended for waterproofing tweeds and woolens, and should give good results when applied to a closely woven fabric such as is used for raincoats. Make solutions of equal parts of alum and lead acetate in separate vessels, and then mix them together. Lead sulphate will be precipitated, leaving acetate of aluminum in solution. This is decanted off, and the material to be waterproofed is soaked in this solution, and then withdrawn without being wrung, and dried in the air.

Episcopal History Repeated.

It's almost forgotten now, but the election of Phillips Brooks to the episcopate stirred up a sudden commotion in ecclesiastical high places that was lively while it lasted. One scholarly prelate, of pronounced views, filed a formal and solemn protest against the great preacher's consecration, alleging that he was unsound in doctrine and a "fautor" (favorer) of Unitarians. When sermon time came in the cathedral on Morningside Heights Brooks' likeminded successor in the see of Massachusetts who was conducted to the pulpit, and a few hours later the house of deputies elected to its chair the present rector of the Boston church that is Phillips Brooks' memorial.

The Difference.

Maizie's new doctor says she is suffering from a mild form of cutaneous affection."

"And that other doctor declared she had nothing the matter with her but a little skin trouble."

Little Red Schoolhouse.

The term, "the little red schoolhouse," originated some five years ago, when an attempt was made by the state legislators to suppress the German national schools in Wisconsin. The Germans considered the proposed legislation an infringement of their rights, and as the Republican party was responsible for it, they gave their support to the Democrats and contributed in a measure to their victory at the next election. "The little red schoolhouse," typifying the public schools of the United States, became the watchword of those favoring the suppression of the German schools.

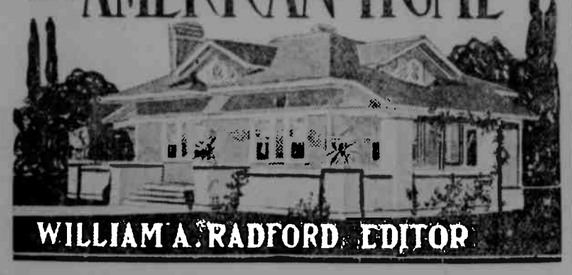
TIME OF ALL GOOD THINGS

Writer Speaks of Happiness Ushered In With the Coming of the First Frost.



With the coming of the first frost, when a wind of icy freshness blows across the fields, comes also the true realization of what "home" means. With supper ended, an intermittent clatter of knives and dishes comes from the hidden regions of the kitchen, where Lissie is manipulating a tea towel with all the vigor of her eleven years in the hope of earning the "extra nice present" which Brother Bob, writing from Chicago, has promised her at Christmas for lending mother a hand. Father pulls out an old, blackened cob, and having filled and lit it, props his feet up on the hob From now till bedtime, save for sundry interruptions, he is buried to his eyebrows in the weekly paper, and neither Nero's growlings at the rumble of a distant wagon nor the continued mutterings of the kettle which steams and sputters on the stove, can disturb his meditations.

And while father reads and mother mends, with Lizzie frowning over her lesson at the table, an invisible white brush paints all the countryside with the sparkling rime of the first frost. It sparkles from the cobweb under the eaves like drops of molten silver; it gleams from grass and stubble, and glitters from every tree, so that when the moon comes over the barn, grass and tree and stubble scintillate with soft, sugdued brilliance.

Now is the time of all good things that delight the heart of man at the passing of summer. Hickory nuts, fresh molasses, apples, sweet cider and "punkin" pie, are all ushered in with the approaching vanguard of winter, and until the April rains return we shall be basking in the warmth and comfort, the cheer and delight of home—Paris, Mo., Appeal.

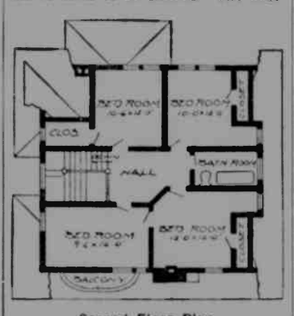
THE AMERICAN HOME

WILLIAM A. RADFORD, EDITOR

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 173 West Jackson boulevard, Chicago, Ill., and only enclose two-cent stamp for reply.

The accompanying illustrations show a house design especially adapted to the needs of suburban or country building. The requirements for a dwelling house for such a location are different in a good many respects from those in a city. More attention should be paid to the matter of making the house as nearly fireproof as possible; for in the country, as well as in our smaller towns and suburbs, there is little or no fire protection. Accordingly, if a building once takes fire, nothing, as a usual thing, can be done except to watch it burn. Of course, the fire risk from adjoining buildings is much greater in thickly settled communities; but the fire fighting apparatus which is quickly available more than makes up for this extra hazard.



The only wise and logical thing for a man to do when he plans to invest a large amount of money in a suburban or country home, is to build it fireproof. With the modern building materials now available, it is very easy to do this; and the cost, although considerably more than for frame, is certainly not excessive when the fire protection, the enduring character of the house, etc., are taken into consideration.

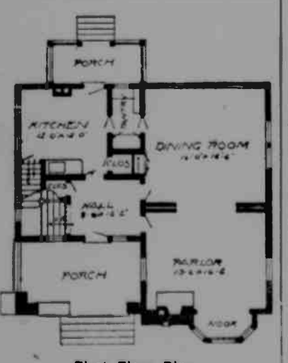
For the accompanying design, a thoroughly fireproof construction is employed. The beauty and home-like atmosphere of this house make any expenditure, however large, seem worth while that will make it absolutely safe and enduring, no matter where it is built.

The walls of this house are formed of two by six-inch studding, well braced; but they are covered both inside and out with expanded metal lath. The outside is plastered with cement plaster applied in three coats; thus there is fully one inch of nature's most fire-resistant material—cement—filling the corrugations. This method would certainly make a fireproof roof, and the cement could be easily colored to make an effective contrast with the side walls.

Native square stone is used to very good purpose in this design, for the large chimney and for the porch piers and arch. This stonework gives the house an added appearance of stability.

The arrangement of the house leaves little to be desired. The floor-

Second Floor Plan.



plans show a large parlor or living room, dining room, kitchen and reception hall on the first floor. Upstairs there are four bedrooms and a bathroom.

The cost of this house is estimated at $4,000, using a good grade of materials and most thorough construction. The size of this house, 34 feet 6 inches wide, by 35 feet 6 inches deep from front to back, makes it very suitable for the ordinary suburban 50-foot lot.

on the outside of this house, completely surrounding the steel reinforcing and thus protecting it against rust. The inside surface of the walls, and the surface of all the interior partitions, are composed of one coat of cement plaster on expanded metal lath, with a finishing coat of hard wall plaster.

The floors of this house are formed of hollow terra-cotta tile made in narrow flat panels, between reinforced concrete beams. The concrete beams are four inches square, reinforced with twisted steel rods. On top of this concrete and terra cotta floor, a one-inch coat of cinder concrete is laid on these strips, being nailed down securely. For the ceiling finish, the wall plaster is applied directly to the underside of the concrete beams and the tiles. This makes a floor that is thoroughly fireproof, very warm, and not excessively heavy.

The roof of this house may be constructed in a number of ways; yet it should be made fireproof, since the roof is really the most vulnerable part of the house. Green slate would be very appropriate, and would make a beautiful contrast with the cement walls. The roof in this design is rather prominent, and, all things considered, slate would probably be the most satisfactory.

One of the newer forms of roof construction that might be used, consists of corrugated steel sheets resting on a light steel framework. The corrugations are deep enough to prevent any bending of the sheets between supports. Waterproofed cement plaster is spread over the sheets in a coat about one inch thick, completely

AN IDEAL JOB.

The talk turned to office-seekers in the lobby of a Washington hotel the other evening, and this one was contributed by Senator Shively of Indiana:

Two men, according to the senator, were sitting on a park bench one afternoon, listening to the sparrows sing, when the delight of holding public office was incidentally mentioned.

"Look here, Jim," exclaimed one of the pair, suddenly looking up, "you are not thinking of seeking an office, are you?"

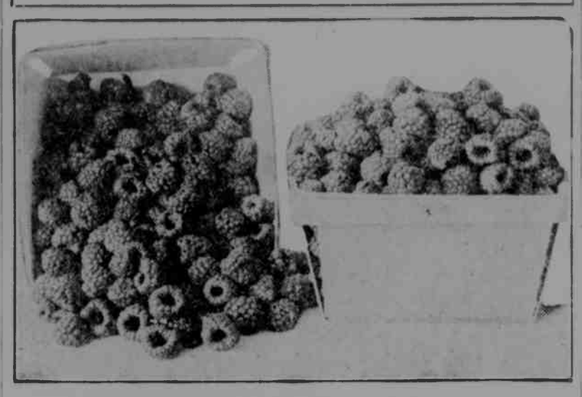
"No, I can't say that I am," replied Jim reflectively, "and yet if I got one to my liking I might take it."

"I see," responded the other, "what kind of a government job would be to your taste?"

"Well," replied Jim, "I wouldn't mind getting a couple of thousand a year for filling fountain pens for the assistant secretary of the treasury."—Saturday Evening Post.

What Indian Summer Is.

Indian summer is a name used to describe a short season of pleasant weather in the Central and Atlantic coast states. It usually comes either in October or November. There is no definite time for Indian summer, but as a rule it comes after the first severe frost or series of frosts and storms. It is the season that is welcome because it comes after everyone has settled down to expect real winter, and Indian summer always holds winter off for a few more weeks. The season is characterized by almost cloudless skies, calm or light airs, a hazy atmosphere and mild temperature in the daytime, but rather cool at night.



In Need.

"I noticed you applauded that armless wonder at the show last night." "Yes, I thought he deserved a hand."

Puritans and Greeks.

The reader of the Scarlet Letter gets a vivid idea of the Puritan conscience; it had its strength, but that book principally shows its narrowness and its cruelty. What a different thing was the attitude toward life of the most gifted people in history. The Greeks in their great period had nothing of what we call a sense of sin. Whey they did anything wrong, they called it "a bad shot"—something that was bound to happen from time to time and was best forgotten. As Livingston puts it, it was useless to spend thought and remorse on bad shots; it was better to go forward and improve the aim for next time. Many a person of Puritan descent, tortured needlessly by remorse, could gain much by acquiring the habit of looking at any transgression as a defective aim, and making up his mind to get nearer the bull's eye next time.—Harper's Weekly.

COMMERCIAL IMPORTANCE OF RASPBERRY

Fruit Demands Care in Picking and in Handling Thereafter—They Should Never Be Picked When Wet—Of an Exquisite, Delicate Flavor.

(By R. S. HERRICK and E. R. BENNETT, Colorado Agricultural College.)

The raspberry is one of the best known small fruits. In its wild state it has been used as food since the beginning of history. This fruit belongs to the family of brambles of which there are many hundred species. The raspberries of commerce are mostly included in three species. These three species are divided between two quite distinct types, the reds and blacks.

The European red raspberry, Rubus Idaeus, is little grown in this country. The fruit is similar to the American red raspberry in appearance, of better quality, but the plants are less hardy. The early attempts at red raspberry culture in this country were largely confined to the development of this species but these have never succeeded because the species is not adapted to our climatic conditions.

The American red raspberry, Rubus strigosus, is of comparatively recent domestication. In the wild state it is found more or less over the northern and eastern United States. One variety of this species is native in the higher altitudes of the Rocky mountains. This wild raspberry of the mountains is far superior in quality to the domesticated berry or to the wild berry of the east. Up to the present time, however, nothing has been done to improve or acclimate the berry to cultivated conditions.

The black raspberry, Rubus occidentalis, is also native to the northern and eastern United States. The black raspberry of commerce is practically the same as the wild berries of the fields. This species is commercially the most important of the raspberries.

Another species, Rubus neglectus, is a hybrid of the American red and black raspberry. This species is relatively unimportant. It is represented by what is known as the purple cane berries.

The raspberry has reached its greatest commercial importance in the northeastern states. This is because the fruit demands a cool climate and a loose, moist soil with an abundance of humus. In a wild state both the red and black varieties are found at their best on newly cleared timber lands of the eastern and central states. Land from which timber has been removed in the east is nearly always first occupied by the raspberry brambles. After the surface humus becomes more or less exhausted these bushes disappear.

The great drawback to raspberry growing either in a wild or cultivated state is the droughts that are apt to occur at time of ripening.

Propagation of the raspberry varies according to which species it belongs. The red raspberries are propagated from the suckers which come up from the parent root. As a rule most of the red varieties throw up enough suckers to insure plenty of young plants. For this reason careful cultivation has to be resorted to in order to avoid injuring the root system of the old plant. For when it is injured it acts only as a stimulant to throw more shoots and often requires a severe pruning to keep them down. The old plant can be separated by division thus obtaining extra plants for planting purposes, but as a rule this is not as good a plan as to use the young shoots with the roots attached.

The black raspberry is propagated by the tip layerage. This is done by covering the tips along the latter part of July or the first of August. They take root at this point and generally establish themselves well enough so that the next spring they can be separated from the parent stock by cutting the cane off near the ground.

The purple cane varieties vary somewhat in their mode of propagation according to the variety. The most of them however resemble the black-cap in this respect and are propagated by tip layerage.

COLD-FRAMES FOR WINTER GARDENING

The Long Island Home Hampers—Hampers being prepared for shipment to New York. Mr. Hal B. Fullerton, manager of the Long Island experiment station, says he can scarcely supply the demand for fresh fruits and vegetables carefully selected and packed and shipped as they ship them from Medford. This line of profit is open everywhere.

(By J. H. HAYNES.)

Successful gardening depends on early production. Cold-frame plants are more certain to live than hot-bed plants, and give a large per cent of good stuff than do the more tender hot-bed plants.

In constructing such we use two frames instead of one. The larger frame is 4½ feet by 7½ feet and 1 foot deep. The inner one is one foot smaller each way and only eight inches deep.

The space around the inner frame, six inches wide, is filled with dry sawdust well packed down.

The covering for the inner frame is a glass-covered sash made to fit quite close to the frame to exclude air.

The outer frame is covered with an oiled convassed frame so as to be water-proof.

A strip of carpet, or other good material, is kept over the inner sash in severe weather.

We prefer shallow frames to keep the plants from growing spindling.

We choose a location free from cold winds and where a good exposure to the sun can be had. If it is a little rolling so much the better.

Frames and sash should be well painted to preserve them. There are 3,275 square inches in such a frame, and allowing three square inches to the plant, one can have over 1,000 plants per frame.

Good rich soil is used, and the under soil is made quite loose to give a chance for root growth. It is best to grow the plants in the open and transplant on the approach of severe weather.

Frames of a larger size are not so easily handled, nor can the same protection be given in them. On mild days we give light to the plants by removing outer sash, and if safe, we raise the inner sash to admit fresh air.

These frames are not expensive where one can do his own work, and they add a good per cent to the investment.

Building Up the Dairy Herd.

Buying cows and selling them as fast as they stop milking never built up a high-class dairy business. The city milk producer is not a true dairyman, he is more a speculator in feeds and cows.

Feeding Dry Cows.

During the eight or ten weeks that cows go dry their food should be chiefly roughage. A daily allowance of two pounds of bran or oats, or a mixture of two parts each of bran and oats and one part of linseed meal or corn oil meal, makes a proper feed for a cow near calving.

Notes of the Cow Lot.

Calves well fed and taken care of, with a quart or two of meal daily in late fall or winter, will be double the size at two years they would have reached with common treatment.

Heifers thus treated may come in at two years old, and will be better than neglected animals at three years, and one year of feeding saved.

Protect Apple Trees.

The time is at hand when young apple trees must be protected or the owner will find that he has provided a very expensive winter feed for the rabbits.

EASIER TO WRITE IT

YOUNG SUITOR EVIDENTLY A LITTLE EMBARRASSED.

Ordeal of "Asking Papa" Was Too Much for Him, but There Have Been Many Others in Just the Same Fix.

Prior to the epoch-making moment when his love triumphed over his native bashfulness young Mr. Askam would have maintained against any odds that the hardest thing in life was to propose to the girl you worshiped. Afterwards, however, he decided that the proposal was simply child's play compared to asking the consent of his father-in-law elect, although that estimable old gentleman was a great friend.

Flushed with success with the daughter, he felt filled with the spirit of a hundred conquerors, and recklessly insisted upon seeing the father at once. But upon reaching the library the spirit of the hundred conquerors suddenly evaporated and left him with pale face and trembling knees and chaotic mind.

"I—er—er—" he stammered insufficiently.

"Indeed!" observed the old gentleman, chuckling. "Then you're no more than human."

"Ah, ha!" gasped Mr. Askam, hysterically, pretending a hilarity he was far, far from feeling.

"How is your mother?" asked the old gentleman, after an awkward pause, with the kindly intention of setting his caller at rest.

"I love her. I—I passionately adore her. She—she has promised to marry me if you consent,' announced Mr. Askam, in a wild burst of eloquence.

"What! Your mother?' cried the old gentleman, aghast.

"No, no," explained the thoroughly confused Mr. Askam. "Yours."

"My mother! Are you crazy?" demanded the old gentleman, excitedly.

"I shall be in a minute," moaned the wretched Mr. Askam. "Sir,' he continued, the words falling slowly and cautiously from his agitated lips. "I—came—here—to ask—your—consent—to marry—me.'

"Eh?" cried the old gentleman.

"I'll—I'll write it!" shouted the unhappy Mr. Askam, struck by a happy thought as he burst madly out of the room. And in that way matters were at last straightened to everyone's satisfaction.

Famous Riddle.

The following ingenious riddle is attributed to Dr. Samuel Wilberforce, who during his life was bishop of Oxford, and afterwards of Winchester, England. It is known as the "Bishop of Oxford's riddle":

I am a trunk with two lids, two caps, two musical instruments; a number of articles a carpenter could not dispense with; two lofty trees two good fish and a number of shellfish; a fine stag and a number of animals of less noble breed; two playful animals; a number of weathercocks; two established measures; two implements of war; whips without handles; the steps of a hotel; result of a vote in the house of commons; fine flowers and fruit; two scholars; two places of worship; ten Spanish grandees to wash on you, a way out of difficulty; a poor bed, a desert place; a probable remark of Nebuchadnezzar when eating grass.

The answer to this puzzle is the human body. Here are the various parts indicated: Knee-caps, ears drums, nails, palms, soles and muscles, heart and hairs (hares), calves, veins (vanes), feet, arms, lashes, (in) steps, eyes and nose (eyes and noses), tulips (two lips) and apples, pupils, temples, tendons, cheek, palate (pallet), waist (waster), eyebrows (browses).

Meaning of Women's Names.

According to Charlotte M. Yonge's History of Christian Names" and other good authorities, the following women's names have the meaning attached to them, the original form and the language in which that form occurs are in brackets. The names are alphabetically arranged: Agnes (from Greek), pure or sacred; Anne (Hebrew, Hannah), grace of Jah; Caroline, or diminutive, Charlotte (German), manly; Edith (English), rich gift; Elizabeth (Hebrew, Elisheba), God my oath; Ellen (Greek, Helene), bright; Emma (German), grandmother; Gertrude (German), spear maiden; Isabella (perhaps Hebrew), oath of Baal; Jane (Greek, Joanna, from Hebrew), Jah's grace; Julia (Latin), soft-haired; Louisa (German), bold warrior; Martha (Aramaic), lady, mistress of house; Mary (Hebrew, Miriam), bitter sea; Matilda (German), mighty battle maiden; Olive (Latin) olive tree; Paulina (Latin), little; Phoebe (Greek), shining; Rebecca (Hebrew, Rabkah), ensnarer; Sarah (Hebrew), princess.

Presidential Appetite.

In the course of his presidential journey, M. Poincare has been dined and wined uncommonly well, but the meal provided by the patriotic inhabitants of Toulouse is probably the most colossal. Indeed, it is gargantuan. The hors d'oeuvres included such trifles as 50 kilos of sausage a barrel of olives and 40 kilos of butter, followed by 350 kilos of salmon and 300 kilos of assorted pates, galantines, and the like. Then come 500 kilos of "filet de boeuf," 800 head of poultry, 100 kilos of salad, and twice that amount of ice cream, besides 9,000 assorted cakes. After this last item, 60 kilos of coffee, and 200 kilos of fruit seem insignificant. Last, but by no means least, come the liquid refreshments, 6,000 bottles of red and white wine, and 700 of champagne.

His Follow-up.

The life insurance man was jubilant.

"I wrote thirty thousand dollars' worth of insurance on a man's life the other day and the following week he died."

"Hard luck," said his friend commiseratingly.

"Not at all. Yesterday I married his widow."

MUST RESTRAIN HIS GRIEF

Everybody Except the Clergyman Is Privileged to Weep During Wedding Ceremonies.

A peculiarity of bridegrooms was pointed out by the curate, who asked asthmatically for a medical certificate showing that he had a cold in the head.

"But that is self-evident," said the doctor. "You don't need a doctor's word for that. You are all choked up and your eyes are watery."

"It is those very symptoms that make a certificate necessary to placate the bridegroom," said the curate. "Without that, he will think I am crying, and will take my tears as a personal insult. Copious weeping is the privilege of everybody at a wedding except the parson.

"Bridesmaids may sniffle, mothers sob, and bride and bridegroom falter, but the man who ties the knot must remain dry-eyed and clear-voiced. Emotion on his part is construed as grief over the bride's bad bargain, and the best-natured bridegroom on earth resents it."

Figgerative.

"A schoolboy of eleven," said Prof. Thomas R. Lounsbury, Yale's authority on English, once gave an apt illustration of figurative usage. He gave it in a composition, writing:

"'A figgerative saying is, "to keep the wolf from the door." It does not mean to keep a real live wolf from the door. A good instance is when the landlord comes for the rent. He knocks at the door and you keep awful quiet, in the hope that he will think there is nobody in and go away."

Best Sign of Genius.

"My son," said the Old Philosopher, "when you hear a feller talkin' night and day about 'the fire of genius,' just trail him to where he lives at and you'll very likely find a cold hearth and the wind whistlin' through the cracks in his dwelling-place. I much prefer to hear 'em talk about the 'strength' of genius, and see 'em give an example of it by swingin' an axe and choppin' trees stove-length. THURSDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1913.

COMMENCING with Januayy first there will be a reduction in parcel post rates and an increase in the weight of all parcels.

LAST Saturday Robert W. Wells, of St. Mary's county, announced himself as a candidate for Congress in the fifth Maryland district. This is the first announcement for the campaign of 1914.

THE REPUBLICAN was the only Garrett county paper that published President Wilson's message to Congress, If you want the news of the day you will subscribe for The Republican. It is what it professes to be—a NEWSPAPER.

THE Postal Saving bank has had a very successful year. The deposits for the year ending June 30, 1913, were $33,818,780, an increase over 1912 of $13,581,696. This is a very encouraging statement and shows that the public appreciates this branch of the post office service. There were at the close of the year 331,000 depositors.

ACCORDING to Senator Lee's statement of pre-election expenses, filed along with the certificate of election, more than half of the money expended was paid to the United States Government in the form of postage for mailing campaign literature. His total expenses, according to this statement, amounted to $7072.96, of which $3632.01 was for postage.

"COUNTY Schoolteachers," said Rabb Harrison, of St. Louis, "are the moral leaders of mankind. They give more and receive less than any other professional workers in the world. They are the most unselfish and self-sacrificing people of the United States." Especially is this true of the school teachers of Garrett county.

DURING the first week the United States tariff of 1913 has been in effect over 70 car loads of cattle are stated to have been shipped from Western Canada, 24 of which containing 690 head of stock valued at $31,947 were shipped from Winnepeg alone. Notwithstanding this fact and that tens of thousands pounds of dressed beef have been received from South American countries, the price of beef to the consumer has not decreased one cent.

THE Baltimore and Ohio Railroad will pay the State of West Virginia the handsome sum of $678,601.87 in taxes for the present fiscal year. This sum is due next January. Of this amount the state will receive $42,632.86; the counties and districts, $572,075 60, the municipalities $60,893.41, West Virginia also has a two cent mile rate for passenger traffic. Maryland pays three cents per mile, and receives as taxes, $000,000.00.

THE REPUBLICAN is the best advertising medium in Garrett county. Advertisements placed in The Republican bring results. The actual circulation of The Republican is the largest of any newspaper in this county. A large number of papers may be printed, of this number many may be so spoiled in the press work that they cannot be used, except as waste paper. That is not circulation. That is loss. By circulation, we mean papers mailed to actual subscribers.

IT'S pretty tough to be a member of Congress these days. It was hard enough when it became known recently that there would be no mileage appropriations this session and that the exigencies of the public welfare required Congress to cut out the Christmas recess. The crowning indignity, though, was thrust upon members today when it was learned that the disbursing officers of Congress hold that under the income tax the tax to be paid by statesmen would be "collected at the source." In other words it will be deducted from members' compensation before they are paid off.

THE Philadelphia Press says:

Last year when the Democrats were deluding the people with all sorts of promises they put into their national platform a condemnation of what they called "the profligate waste of money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation through the lavish appropriations of recent Republican Congresses." They demanded, also, a return to simplicity and economy and a reduction in the number of useless officers.

Now what do we see?

The administration is Demacratic, Congress is Democratic, all elected on on the national platform, and now comes the demand for appropriations for the support of the government for the next fiscal year of $1,108,861,777, an amount $61,[illegible] asked for last year by a Republican administration. The way of Democratic simplicity leads to the porfligate waste of money wrong from the people.

What reduction has there been in the number of useless officers? None whatever. On the contrary, many new offices have been created partly to satisfy the clamor of Democrats for jobs and partly to carry out new schemes of taxation to wring some more money from the people. There have been lavish and profligate expenditures by a Democratic Congress on useless investigations that have accomplished nothing but the waste of the peoples' money.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

A Rift in The Cloud of Mythology.

To the Editor of the Republican:

No one could question the act that there are miracles performed in the world as mysterious as those of our Lord Jesus. The ones preforming them not being men of God, the question naturally arises, by what power are such miracles wrought.

Taking the bible we learn that Adam and Eve were turned out of the Garden of Eden because of disobedience. In the garden God had placed life conditions, but outside, in the unsubdued earth, there were no life, trees or hopes of eternal life, Gen, 1:28. Starvation was the inevitable result of the fall, so the scriptures show that physical death was the wages of sin, Rom. 5:12, Gen. 3:1,7-19.

The angels in heaven seeing this deplorable condition, and that the race which God had designed should enlarge the Garden of Eden until it covered the whole earth were dying, desired permission to try to arrest the downward course of sin. They were permitted to try, but Gen. 6: shows their utter failure, and how they themselves, even, became sinners, married the daughters of men, raising children from them and thus bringing a hybrid condition into God's creation. God's purpose in bringing the flood was to purify the race from the angelic stock. Noah, his three sons and their wives being pure, adamic blood, started the world Amen on this side of the flood. The fallen angels were not afterward permitted to go back into their heavenly condition, or to again assume human bodies, but are restrained to this extent until the judgment day, and therefore have been associated with satan, the prince of demons, in all his invisible works of darkness and deception in bringing damnable heresies among God's people by reason of whom many have followed his pernicious ways, (II Peter, 2:1-3) by reason of whom, also, "the way of truth shall be evil spoken of."

Should we then be ignorant of the strange power we see manifested in various ways, hypnotism, spiritism with its socalled "divine healing" haunted houses, mesmerism, the speaking with tongues, none of which has ever yet been of any avail to the poor sin-sick, dying race. Does not the world need Jesus the great physician, who healeth all our diseases?

Noah's three sons were named Ham, Shem and Japeth. Shem was a man who stood for truth and righteousness; Ham was a man who stood for evil, his course was evil continually, and his descendants to this day take the side of all the evil in the earth.

From Shem's side came Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses, Joshua, David and our Lord Jesus Christ. From Ham descended a spirit of evil. From Shem a spirit of good. These two great powers—spirits—have dominated more or less the minds of all mankind, which might be represented in Noah's third Son Japeth. So we see the world divided into two great camps, Ham's camp of evil, and Shem's camp of good. The great battle of life has swayed from side to side between these two armies of "darkness" and of "light" from the time of the flood to the present time, which the bible describes as the present evil world over which satan is the prince, the god. John 14:30. II. Cor. 4:4

Noting the course of Ham's descendants we see his son Cush was black, possibly as a part of the course pronounced against Ham for his sin of shame. Cush had a son, Nimrod, who also was black, as ancient history pictures him. This Nimrod was the first great King after the flood. He married his own mother, a young ambitious, depraved woman, back to whom the Chaldean mysteries or Black Art is traced, and all the mysterious miracles and oracles of pagan Rome, Greece, Egypt, India and other heathen nations, of early times find their beginning in her.

Nimrod is celebrated as "a mighty hunter before the Lord," Gen. 10:8 12. Not that he was the Lord's hunter but he was competing with God for the worship and admiration of men. When the animals were released from the Ark they increased in numbers much more rapidly than did men in the earth, and in Nimrod's day became so ferocious that they were a menace to human life Nimrod became so expert in destroying these wild beasts that men looked up to him as their saviour with a sort of reverential worship which his wife-mother, Semeramis, encouraged and fostered until he became a real object of worship as a man-god.

The capitol of Nimrod's Kingdom was Babylon whose walls 365 feet in height and 86 feet in thickness constituted it the mightiest as well as the first city of ancient times, its beautiful hanging gardens being counted as one of the seven wonders of the world.

It is believed that Semeramis was in league with satan, and when satan suggested that her son Nimrod was really the "seed of the woman" who was not merely to bruise the serpents head, but, also, to bless all the families of the earth, she laid hold on the suggestion and finally convinced the followers and courtiers of the King that he was the veritable savior who ultimately would deliver mankind from the power of satan. God mentioned the blessing from "the seed." It was satan substituted a fraud, a decepton. Daniel 12:11 calls this false "seed" the abomination that maketh desolate and Jesus agrees to it. Matt. 24:15.

This idolatrous religion magnified Nimrod's powers. He is represented as slaying a bull empty handed after which he placed the horns of the bull upon his own head showing thus that he should wear the crown horns being a symbol of power. He is shown also as slaying a lion. He wears the horns with the bull's hide down his back including the tail and his legs encased in the hide of the bull's hind legs, hoofs, etc., and thus arrayed we see the devil as portrayed today, horns, hoofs, tail and all.

In the Chaldean tongue, Nimrod from a religious standpoint was known as Zoroaster a compound from Zero, seed, and Ashta, woman, Under the name of woman and the "seed" the madonna and the child this Babylonian religion was introduced into all nations of that early date, even while Nimrod was still living.

Shem, Noah's son, the brother of Ham lived 502 years after the flood. The scriptures indicate him as the Melchisedec to whom Abraham paid tithes. He was the "King of Salem and priest of the most high God." Paul in Heb. 7: represents him as the type of the "new creation," the "royal priesthood;" receving a kingdom, but not inheriting it from earthly parents, and being an everlasting kindgom it will not be left to others. Bible students agree that it was Shem whom God sent into Egypt to build the great pyramid, Cheops. This massive building covers thirteen acres of ground, indicates its own weight. The distance to the sun, its own age and many scientific truths as well as indicates the "Divine Plan of the Ages" in its hitherto sealed interior chambers and passages.

The history of Egypt records the fact that Egypt was invaded by a peaceable people whom history denominates Hyksos. (i. e. Shepherd Kings.) These invaders did not seem to disturb the general government of Egypt and tradition says they left as peacefully as they came. Manetho, an Egyptian priest and scribe is quoted by Josephus and others, as saying. "We had formerly a King whose name was Timans. In his time * * * there came up from the East in a strange manner. Men of ignoble race (not warriors) who, when they had our rulers in their hands, demolished the temples of the gods." This agrees with the fact that Melchisedec, or Shem (Sem) knew who Nimrod was, being his own relative, the grandson of his brother Ham. Shem, a mighty man of God, convinced the seventy two supreme Judges of Egypt that the religion of that country was idolatry of the worst type, being the worship of a living man, and he a relative of himself. Nimrod was taken by force, his body torn into fourteen pieces and distributed thrughout Egypt as a warning to whosoever should do as Nimrod had done should be punished likewise, in like manner. This was a legal custom throughout eastern countries in that day.

A pig being a symbol of evil in Egypt, the godly Shem was named Typho by Nimrod's followers and symbolized by a pig having in its mouth a bundle of tusks showing that Typho's power was in his persuasive qualities, and he was the great emeiny of the gods (practically of the devil which was true). Gemeramis, Nimrod's wife, saw her power and influence was over unless she changed her course to retain her hold. "The religion of the gods" now became a secret work in the minds and hearts of men, rather than a bold, open institution, because of the fear of persecution by Shem and the supreme powers of Egypt. She gathered the parts of the body of her husband and at the funeral performed a mysterious, miraculous ceremony, using her powers of magic to awe the people, claiming now that the mighty Nimrod, while put to death as a saviour, was resurrected and deified as the sun, the great light of heaven. A great change now took place in that religion and the priesthood reorganized were given an intoxicating draught from the royal golden cup which caused the intoxicated ones to see and hear wonderful sights and sounds to impress them with the solemnity of the occasion, and then the visions concluded by their being shown the glorified, deified Nimrod as the great "Baal," the "Lord of Heaven." The mysteries were now given to this priesthood under pain of death if ever revealed. If the mysteries could resurrect and deify one, it could another so when Gemeramis died she resurrected and deified as the lesser light of heaven the moon. Her deified husband being now the King of heaven she was known and worshiped as "The Queen of Heaven." Even to this day, each member of this priesthood being deified also at death, we do not wonder that, as the Apostle expresses it, there be Lords many and Gods many, but to us christians there is one God, one Lord, one faith, one baptism.

The natural man cannot comprehend a spirit condition, therefore he requires an idol and image to look at representing his god. Instead of praying to the Father Jehovah as Jesus taught us, "Our Father which art in heaven," the heathens pray to their patron saints and to Gemeramis, the "Queen of Heaven." Their prayers are chiefly said to "The Woman," the mother of their god, "Baal." Baal is never worshiped as Nimrod, but as "the seed," and it is noticeable that the woman is always mentioned first. In Egypt it was Isis and Osiris, the woman and the seed, also in India they appear as Isis and Iswara. In Greece we find Ceres and the babe in her arms, or Irene, the goddess of peace and the boy Plutus. In China Cybele and Deoius. Pagan Rome, Fortune and Jupitur, &c.

The "seed" and the "woman" were known by many other names. As the god Baal now was the light of heaven, his symbol was the sun, which is the great light of the earth. Therefore there were sun worshipers from whom came our "Sunday." As fire was the earthly representative of the sun, there were "fire worshipers," who kept the sacred fire ever aglow on their altars. The idol Moloch, which means "King" in the Chaldean language, was where they passed children to Baal, through the red hot hands of this image. Baal was known to them as "Tammuz" from Muz to burn, Ezek. 8:14 and "Tam" to purify by fire. Baal was known as Saturn, and the followers of Nimrod as Satyrs, probaly from Saturn "the hidden one." He was also known as Pan, and Baochus, Zoroaster, Nejros, and Nebras, spotted. Nimrod's name came from the fact that he subdued a leopard using it in his hunting of animals much as a hunter of today uses a pointer or setter dog. This is why the insignia of rank of his priesthood was a spotted apron skin. The wife of Nimrod the "Queen of Heaven" is worshiped through the Sacred Cow of Asthor, which was a spotted cow. She also has numerous names, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians whom all the world worshipped," was that peoples boast and Diana has her symbol at her feet, a crescent, indicating her as the "queen of heaven," the lesser light. The Ashteroch of Judges 21:12,13, and Astarte of the Greeks, Aphrodite, Venus, etc. etc., all having the crescent as her symbol. This symbol is often found near the feet of the Virgin Mary as she is represented in the images of the Roman church and is also worshiped as the "Queen of Heaven."

The Jews were continually warned against making any idols of the woman, Gemeramis or of the gods of the heathen about them, or of Baal. "Take heed unto yourself (for ye saw no manner of similitude, idols, on the day that the Lord spake unto you in Horeb) lest ye corrupt yourselves, and make you a graven image (idol) the similitude of any figure, the likeness of male or female," &c. Deut.: 4 18. So we see that all religions, according to this command of God, which make images, which really are idols, have corrupted themselves however good their intentions. Religions which have repudiated images in their worship have been captured by higher criticism. Evolution, the doctrine of Buddah, spiritism, occultism, &c., &c. It is natural for men to worship superior beings, or to reverence the mysterious, because it savors of the spirit-life, and satan laying hold of this tendency in man has, as the Apostle declared, "blinded the minds of them which believe not lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ * * * should shine unto them." Jesus preached the gospel, the glad tidings of his kingdom, which is the restitution of our race to human perfection during Christ's reign. Matt. 4: 23. Acts 3: [illegible]

So we see the Ham side of the human race to be in the shadow, while the Shem side to be in the sunlight. Ham is presented to us as the source of all idol worship and his descendant Nimrod was a spurious "seed" palmed off on the world as the Lord, the light of heaven—"darkness for light"—as Typho,—"light for darkness." It was Babylon of old, the source of satan's religion of the spurious seed from which the intoxicating cup was sent forth making the nations mad. Jer. 51: 9-8. Compare Rev. 17: 4.

The Scriptures are very plain that Jesus kingdom was "not of this world," as he declared, but "the world to come in which dwelleth righteousness" where all the families of the earth are to learn righteousness, Isa. 56: 9, not in a world where "darkness shall cover the earth and the gross darkness the people." Isa. 60: 2.

If we can recognize the two gods having separate, distinct kingdoms, one being a kingdom of darkness and the other filled with light, the knowledge of God as the waters cover the sea, Isa. 11: 9-16; then we should be able to recognize the two spirits proceeding from them. The spirit of the Ham class proceeding out of the darkness is described in Gal. 5: 19-21 as showing forth the evil fruits of darkness, envyings, murders, revilings, idolatry, spiritism, hatred, variance, emulation, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, evil speaking, adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness and this covers every phase of sin. The spirit of the Shem class proceeding from the side of light, sunshine, is shown in verses 22, 23, the fruits of the Holy Spirit, love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, kind in speech, no reviling, no criticising of others personal character. It obeys God. "Speak evil of no man."

The Scriptures point out that the "Prince of Darkness," from the house of Ham, has given us the "present evil world" full of wars, murders, sin, selfishness and every vile passion under the sun, but that when the great Prince of the house of Shem shall reign the earth will be filled with holiness, purity, truth and that Jesus Christ the true "seed" of Abraham "shall bless all the families of the earth." Then shall the house of Ham with its sin, its hatred of all that is good and pure and holy, its slander and its falsehood, misrepresenting, all shall go down in defeat, oblivion never to rise again. Psalm 72. SHEM.

Prohibition Now Anti-Saloon Goal.

State-wide prohibiton, not local option, is the goal toward which the Anti-Saloon League of Maryland will strive from this time forth. The headquaters committee of the league at its meeting decided to drop the issue of local option and concentrate all its efforts toward putting through a prohibition amendment to the State Constitution, and this will be attempted in the coming Legislature. The official statement was made that the general local option bill will not be introduced.

If the Legislature fails to pass the prohibition amendment, it was decided to start a systematic campaign on April 1 next to force the following Legislature to take such action. In furtherance of the plan the committee proposes raising at once a "prohibition forward march fund" of $50,000 for education and agitation.

If adopted by the Legislature, the amendment will be voted upon in the fall of 1915, and if ratified by the people, will go into effect on May 1, 1917.

CONSOMPTION'S HEAVY DEATH TOLL GROWING

20,000 Cases in the State of Virginia
Over 5,000 Dead Last Year

Consumption Can Be Cured if Treatment Begins in Time—Watch The Republican for Important Information

There are 20,000 cases of consumption in the State of Virginia. There were 5,000 death from consumption alone last year.

Ten people die from it to one of any other disease. What are you doing to keep it out of your family?

There are ten cases cured that are taken in early stages to one that is cured when taken later. Has any member of your family got a cough which does not yield to treatment? Have they night sweat? These are all good symptoms. Don't wait. You cant afford to. The Virginia State Bulletin says:

"Consumption can be cured by taking it in time. You will say how can I take up the treatment of consumption in time?

By the kindness of the Sturgiss Pharmacy we will try and explain in the next serial issue of this paper how it can be done and will give you the names of people in different parts of the country who have tried it and are recommending it. Dr. John D. Bear & Bros. Elkton, Va.—Advertisement.

CHRISTMAS AND THE DARKEST DAY

* * * * *

By JOHN E. DOLSEN

Copyright, 1913, by American Press Association

* * * * *

EVERY day the sun grows colder,
Riding lower through its arc.
Will it, as the year grows older,
Leave us always in the dark?

But we know that science teaches
'Twill begin its upward climb
When its lowest point it reaches,
At the solstice—Christmas time.

Earth to all her utmost regions
Shuddered 'neath the march of Rome,
Whose triumphant, pagan legions
Dragged their loot and captives home.

Must her rule go on, unceasing?
Would her armaments be hurled,
With an insolence increasing,
'Gainst a servile, helpless world?

Were Rome's gods alone undying?
And must other nations crook
To her Caesar, deifying
Him with suppliant word and look?

When it seemed her ruthless power
Nothing on the earth could stem,
In that saddest, darkest hour
Christ was born at Bethlehem.

STATE ROADS COMMISSION WINS SUIT HERE

Judge Henderson Upholds Decision of the Lower Court Against Frostburg Water Company.

Before Judge R. R. Henderson Monday, the case of the Maryland State Roads Commission against four employes of the Frostburg Water Company came up on appeal, the lower court having fined the four defendants $25 each for tearing up the State road without a permit at a point west of Frostburg just beyond the county line to lay water pipes. The water company had appealed to the circuit court against this decision.

Judge Henderson sustained the lower court and imposed the original fine of $25 on each defendant—$100 in all, with costs.

This case established a precedent and is considered most important by the State Roads Commission. It practically carries with it the higher court's decision that the state roads cannot be torn up without a permit and that the commission has a right to superintend the laying of pipes on its roads in every case.

For the appellants, Attorney Watson, of Frostburg, contended that the State couldn't show title to the roads, but Judge Henderson decided that this had no bearing on the case.

The case was pushed on behalf of the State Roads Commission by Mr. Andrew Ramsay, a member, Mr. L. T. Downey resident engineer for the commission. Other witnesses who appeared for the commission were J. A. Lammert, state roads patrol, and George Townsend.

Christmas Suggestions.

It isn't a bit too early to get right down to the serious part of one's Christmas shopping.

The crusade for early shopping has, in most cases, been observed even by the most well-meaning and best-intentioned of us simply in spasmodic fits and starts.

Now the great day is approaching fast and there is no time to lose. The plan to shop early is really one that is for the co-operative good of all concerned. The shopper who is shopping now will find a much better and fresher assortment of things to buy than will her sister who puts off the garnering of gifts until the week before the feast.

LIST WILL PROVE MIGHTY HELPFUL.

And the first aid to the forehanded Christmas shopper is the Christmas list. There is something homely and rather useless-seeming in the list, but, as a matter of fact, it is a joy to its possessor in the last hours of the pre-Christmas rush, and there is always rush enough without the shopping.

To be able to glance over the list containing the name and the gifts chosen for them, of all whom one wishes to remember, and to feel sure that not one is forgottrn saves the busy woman much needless worry and wrinkling of brows.

Attention Young Men.

I have just received word from Charles A. Little, Colonel First Infantry, Maryland National Guard, stating that he would like very much to organize a Company in Oakland, and asking me if I could get the proper number of able bodied young men to enlist in the service. Having served for three years in the Regular Army, two of which was spent in the Philippines, I think I know something about the service, both National Guards and Regulars, and I will be glad to give any young men who considers enlisting all the information I can on the subject and will be glad for all those who are interested in a company here to write me as soon as possible. Remember this Company will be in the National Guard and belong to the First Maryland Infantry. Kindly call or write as soon as possible and if we do not get the required number here to join the Company will be organized in some other town in the state.

Temperance People Visit President And Congress Yesterday.

At the recent meeting of the Anti Saloon league, held at Columbus, Ohio, a committee of 1000 was appointed to go to Washington, D. C, on Dec. 10th (yesterday,) to call upon the President and Congress and urge the submission to the several states an amendment to the federal constitution prohibiting the sale of liquor. Among the 100 Maryland delegates appointed were: Rev. J. C. Ely, S. T. Jones and A. D. Naylor, Oakland. Rev. Henry P. Hamill, of Gaithersburg, Md., formerly of this county, was a delegate.

Maryland's delegation was limited to one hundred. This large delegation of temperance folk will call upon Congress in the morning and after lunch they will call upon the President. At night there will be a mass meeting in the D. A. R. hall.

At a meeting in the Courthouse at Elkton local legislation for the county was discussed and the repeal of the present Road Engineers' law was decided upon, all the members of the Legislature from Cecil having been pledged previous to the election.

The Washington County Commissioners received plans from the State Roads Commission for the construction of three and a half miles of highway from Smithsburg to the State line, where it will join the Pennsylvania State road.

Caleb C. Magruder, re-elected Clerk of the Court of Appeals, entered upon his second term of six years last Thursday. Mr. Magruder appeared before the Governor and took the oath, the administration of which was witnessed only by members of the clerical force of the executive offices.

After 44 years of married life, William C. Beall, of Frederick, has filed a bill for divorce. His wife was formerly Miss Theresa Catherine Eaves. They have 13 children, all of age except one, who is 19 years old. In his bill Mr. Beall charges that his wife deserted him and that the separation has continued for more than three years.

Frank Beard, a resident of the South River section of Anne Arundel county, five miles from Annapolis, was killed under peculiar circumstances. He had been drinking and was locked in the house by a brother. Escaping, he took a gun and started toward the river. His body was found some time later, his head in the water. One barrel of the gun was discharged, but no shot had entered his body. It is believed that he was either killed by the fall or was drowned and it is not known whether it was a case of suicide or accident.

ANNAPOLIS NEWS

GOVERNOR PARDONS FIVE.

Longest-Term Prisoner Is Among Them.

After spending more than 25 years behind the bars of the Maryland Penitentiary, John Shelley Hudson, colored, the longest-term prisoner at the institution in point of time served, was pardoned by Governor Goldsborough. Hudson was sentenced to a life term for murder in the first degree by the Circuit Court for Worcester county in May, 1890. He killed another negro man. The sentence originally imposed was hanging, but this was subsequently commuted to life imprisonment by the late Gov. Elihu E. Jackson.

The Governor also pardoned William E. Penning, serving a term of three years in the penitentiary for forgery. A number of citizens of Harford county had urged the Governor to pardon Penning, among them being State Treasurer Murray Vandiver and John B. Hanna, chairman of the Republican State Central Committee.

Three other pardons were issued by the Governor. They are:

Walter Lewandowski, convicted at the September term, 1908, of the Criminal Court of Baltimore on three charges of burglary and sentenced to 15 years in the penitentiary.

Moses Feinberg, convicted before the same court last January in two cases of receiving stolen goods; sentenced to four years in the city jail.

Benjamin Cromer, convicted before the Circuit Court for Charles county on November 26, 1912, of assault to kill, and sentenced to 18 months in the penitentiary.

J. H. TRUITT TO KEEP OFFICE.

Court Of Appeals Decides Worcester Supervisor Case.

The Court of Appeals, by Judge Burke, decided that John H. Truitt is entitled to hold the office of Supervisor of Elections of Worcester county. The action to oust Truitt was brought in the lower court by Samuel J. Price, a former member of the board. Price claimed that his term in that office had not expired, that he had not resigned or been removed, and that consequently there was no vacancy to which Truitt was appointed. In affirming the order dismissing the petition the court held that an injunction is an equitable remedy, and the point is well settled that title to an office cannot be settled in equity. The opinion points out that mandamus is the proper proceeding.

MAGRUDER SWORN IN.

Clerk Of the Court Of Appeals Begins Another Six-Year Session.

Caleb C. Magruder, re-elected Clerk of the Maryland Court of Appeals at the election of November 4, appeared before Governor Goldsborough in the Executive offices here, qualified as required by law and entered upon his second term of six years. Only members of the clerical force in the Executive offices were present when the Governor administered the oath.

New Deputy Game Wardens.

The following deputy game wardens have been appointed by the Governor: D. Clinton Smart, Earle Lovell, James B. Ayres, Clif E. Fisher, William B. Wade and William Heilboch, Baltimore city; Maurice E. England, Montgomery county; Henry A. Minner, Cecil county; James C. Baldwin, Howard county; William R. Linthicum and Roland T. Carpenter, Charles county.

PACKING PLANT BURNED.

Chesapeake Company's Property In Talbott Destroyed.

St. Michaels.—The oyster and fruit packing establishment of the Chesapeak Packing Company, at Lewes Wharf, Sherwood, Talbot county, together with its contents, including 1,000 bushels of oysters, was destroyed by fire. The plant of the Sherwood Packing Company, which is located on the opposite side of the wharf, was saved with great difficulty. Raymond Harrison, one of the proprietors of the latter company, was badly burned about the face and head while fighting the flames away from his plant. The fire started in one of the upper rooms of the building, which was occupied by negro oyster shuckers as living quarters, and a 7-months-old negro baby daughter of Sherman Whittington, which was asleep in the room in which the fire started, was burned to death before its parents, who were shucking oysters, on the lower floor, were aware that the building was in flames. The loss to the Chesapeake Packing Company will be about $3,000, partly covered by insurance.

At a congregational meeting the Rev. W. D. Quatflebaum resigned as pastor of the Baptist Church, Havre de Grace, to engage in work under the direction of the Baptist Church Extension Society. His resignation takes effect in February.

The Hagerstown Securities Company has been organized by H. J. Lipper, of Baltimore, and S. A. Roth, of Hagerstown.

According to a report recently issued, the total value of our agricultural products in 1913 will be $5,000,000,000 or $296,000,000 more than 1912.

Increased Russian emigration to America from the Vilno and Kovno governments has caused a scarcity of farm laborers, and Vice-Counsul General Smith reports that agricultural associations petition for reduced railway rates for such workmen.

China's railway history began in 1876, when the Woosung line, built by foreign enterprise, was opened. In 1877 the road was redeemed by the Chinese and the rails torn up and the equipment shipped to Formosa. In 1887, however, a railway was in operation between Tientsin and Tongshan.

TO REORGANIZE THE DEPARTMENT

Intention of the Secretary of Agriculture.

HOUSTON'S FIRST REPORT.

Secretary Wants Authority To Study Domestic Conditions—Federal Aid For Roads Urged.

Washington.—Reorganization of the Department of Agriculture is foreshadowed in Secretary Houston's first annual report presented to President Wilson. A plan, to be submitted to Congress in the fiscal estimates of 1916, proposes to carry out the work of the department in five or six main groups, such as research, State relations, rural organization, forest service, weather and regulation. Such a plan, Secretary Houston believes, will promote co-ordination.

Plans for redistricting the country for the enforcement of the Pure Food law are announced, and the Secretary makes public his intention to ask for authority to prepare amendments to the Pure Food law to improve the food supply, protect the public health and promote uniformity in food legislation.

Free distribution of seeds by Congressmen should be discontinued, the Secretary recommends. He would conduct in its stead a constructive work in securing and distributing new seeds and plants.

Financial Help For Farmers.

Conditions vary widely in the United States, says the report, because farmers do not equally need better credit arrangements, and all sections are not similarly circumstanced. It contends that when all necessary allowance has been made for fundamental factors it is probably clear that the rural communities are not as efficiently served as they should be by existing financial arrangements. The Secretary believes there does not appear to be need for unique or special legislation or for legislation which shall aim to give the farmer credit on easier terms than other members of society. What is needed is the creation of conditions and machinery which shall enable him on similar credit foundations to secure money at the same rates as those that prevail for other classes and for other sections.

"Good roads are prerequisite for better marketing, for better schools and for more comfortable rural living," says the Secretary. "Better sanitation and hygiene in the home, in the school and in the community are just as vital for the rural community as for the urban," says the report.

Would Help the Housewife.

To gain information to enable the department better to serve rural women the Secretary has addressed letters of inquiry to the women of 57,000 selected farms covering every county. Analysis of the letters shows that farm women desire assistance as to ways of securing running water, introducing household power machinery and labor-saving arrangements and providing better hygienic and sanitary conditions. Many seek advice as to the better marketing of the articles they produce.

TRAMPS HAVE NEW GRAFT.

Given Free Railway Transportation By Army, Then Refuse To Enlist.

Washington.—A new scheme adopted by tramps to beat their way on railroads was revealed by the army judge advocate-general. The grafter applies for enlistment at a recruiting station, is given railway fare and subsistence to carry him to the recruiting depot—and when he gets there he changes his mind and refuses to enlist.

FOR LITERACY TEST.

Burnett Will Urge Immigration Bill Vetoed By Taft.

Washington.—Representative Johnson, of Washington, reintroduced the Dillingham immigration bill, omitting the literacy test. Chairman Burnett, of the Immigration Committee, has announced he will urge as a Democratic majority measure the bill, but with a provision imposing the literacy test. Such a bill was vetoed by President Taft.

ANTI-TRUST MESSAGE SOON.

President To Present Views To Congress After the Holidays.

Washington.—President Wilson's special anti-trust message will be presented to Congress immediately after the holiday recess. Attorney-General McReynolds is expected to testify before the House Judiciary Committee regarding legislation he deems necessary to supplement the Sherman law.

EXPRESS REDUCES DIVIDEND.

American Company Feels Effect Of Parcel Post.

New York—Rivalry between the parcel post and express companies was reflected in the reduction of the quarterly dividend of the American Express Company to 2 per cent. Previously the quarterly dividend had been at the rate of 3 per cent.

TWO PEACE PACTS ARRANGED.

Nicaraguan and Dominican Ministers Agree To Treaties.

Washington.—Secretary Bryan has completed the preliminaries with the Ministers from Nicaragua and the Dominican Republic for peace treaties between those nations and the United States. Portugal and the Netherlands are giving favorable consideration to the proposals made by Secretary Bryan several months ago, and the early consummation of similar treaties with those countries is expected.

IN DEADLOCK WITH JAPANESE

Resources of Diplomacy Exhausted on Alien Land Law.

TOKIO NOTES NOT ANSWERED

Island Empire Maintains Treaty Rights Are Invaded; the United State Asserts the Contrary.

Washington. — The channels of diplomatic correspondence between Japan and the United States over the California Alien Land law have been exhausted, without results, and any action looking to an adjustment of the tangle must come from a new move by one power or the other.

The correspondence was exhaustive and the last note presented by Japan many weeks ago remain unanswered at the State Department, for the reason, it is said, that, despite the numerous exchanges, the controversy remained exactly where it was at the start.

It is understood that Japan throughout maintained that its treaty rights were invaded by the law, while the United States has persistently asserted the contrary.

Jap Competition Too Much.

For years the Japanese population in California has been increasing, and Japanese immigrant laborers have become landowners and farmers.

The remarkable advance of the Japanese from peon to producer is responsible for the strenuous efforts of the Californians to get rid of them. The Japanese have displaced the whites first from the jobs and then from the land. The white farmers cannot compete with the Japanese; they are being driven out of their homes by the Japanese; the Japanese are acquiring some of the best farming lands of the State, and already they are said to control 90 per cent. of its agriculture.

TO HAVE COMMUNITY TREE.

Government Officials To Attend Festivities In Washington.

Washington.—There will be a community Christmas tree on the broad plaza at the east front of the Capitol Christmas eve, with high government officials participating in the festivities and the United States Marine Band furnishing music. Vice-President Marshall and Speaker Clark signed permits suspending Capitol rules to allow the erection of the tree.

BRUTAL SLAYER HANGED.

Rosario Gygliotti, Who Killed Girl and Sweetheart, Pays Penalty.

Smethport, Pa.—Rosario Gygliotti, perpetrator of one of the most brutal double murders in the criminal history of Western Pennsylvania was hanged here. Gygliotti shot and killed Grace Bigler and her sweetheart, Anthony Kohnen, on the night of December 10, 1911. Jealousy prompted the crime.

36,000 RUSSIAN EGGS.

Importation Admitted Free Of Duty May Cause Lower Prices.

Philadelphia.—Thirty-six thousand eggs were imported here from Russia. They comprise the first of what is expected to be a big consignment to break the egg corner in this city. The shipment was admitted from the liner Graf Waldersee free of duty, and will be sent to local bakers.

50,136 ENLISTED MEN IN NAVY.

Largest Number On Rolls Since the Civil War.

Washington.—For the first time since the Civil War the enlisted strength of the navy has passed the 50,000 mark, the total number of enlisted men now being 50,136. There has been a net gain in the enlisted complement since July 1 last of 2,068.

MILLIONS OF EGGS IN STORAGE.

19,383,098 Pounds Of Butter Also Held In Massachusetts.

Boston.—There were 181,200,228 eggs in cold storage in Massachusetts on October 1, held for use as food, according to the report of the State Board of Health. Of this number 37,780,200 had been placed in the storage plants within three months. The report did not give the age of the others. The report says that 19,383,098 pounds of butter was held in cold storage on the same date.

CHEAPER RATES IN PARCEL POST

Commission Approves Postmaster General's Plan.

CHANGE IN EFFECT JANUARY 1

Fifty-Pound Limit Fixed For First and Second Zones—Twenty In All Others—Books Admitted.

Washington.—Postmaster General Burleson's proposal to increase the weight limits of parcel post packages in the first and second zones from 20 to 50 pounds, to admit books to the parcel post and to reduce rates in the third, fourth, fifth and sixth zones was approved by the Inter-State Commerce Commission.

The maximum weight of parcels to all zones beyond the second was increased from 11 to 20 pounds.

One of the reasons in raising the weight limit in the local zones is to encourage the utilization of the parcel post as a shipping agency for farm produce to the cities. After January 1 a farmer living at any point in Maryland, as far south in Virginia as Newport News, Petersburg or Lexington, Va., in one-half of Pennsylvania, two-thirds of New Jersey and all Delaware, can ship to Baltimore a "market basket" weighing 50 pounds for 54 cents.

The commission's "consent" to the proposed changes was transmitted in three letters from Chairman Clark to Postmaster General Burleson. The approved changes in rates and weights, to be in effect January 1, 1914, follow:

Cost Of Service Reduced.

To reduce the rates for the third zone from seven cents for the first pound and five cents for each additional pound to six cents for the first pound and two cents for each additional pound.

To reduce the rates for the fourth zone from eight cents for the first pound and six cents for each additional pound to seven cents for the first pound and four cents for each additional pound.

To reduce the rates for the fifth zone from nine cents for the first pound and seven cents for each additional pound to eight cents for the first pound and six cents for each additional pound.

To reduce the rates for the sixth zone from ten cents for the first pound and nine cents for each additional pound to nine cents for the first pound and eight cents for each additional pound.

Revenue Will Cover Cost.

"It seems obvious," says the commission, "that the service to the public will be promoted by these changes, provided the revenue from the service is not less than the cost thereof. Your experience and statistics seem to show clearly that the revenue will not be less than the cost of the service."

Serious objections to the proposed change in the rates on books and catalogues were made chiefly by mailers of heavy catalogues, but the commission says it feels that the changes are in the interest of the public generally.

SHE WAS FIRST WOMAN LAWYER.

Miss Phoebe Couzins Dies In Poverty In St. Louis.

St. Louis.—Miss Phoebe Couzins, the first woman lawyer in the United States and the first woman who ever served as United States Marshal, died here. Miss Couzins was 72 years old and death came as the culmination of a long illness, which she had suffered in poverty in a squalid room in a crowded section of the city. Appeals for assistance recently had been made by friends in her behalf. Frequently in recent years she had sought aid from the Federal Government and from breweries, whose cause she had championed in many campaigns against prohibitory legislation.

MARSHALL'S PORTRAIT SOLD.

Copy Of Painting Of Chief Justice Brings $1,005.

Philadelphia.—A portrait of John Marshall, chief justice of the United States in the early days of the republic, brought $1,005 at a sale of the furniture and fittings of the home of the late J. R. Barton Willing, brother of Mrs. John Astor, formerly the wife of the late John Jacob Astor. The portrait is a copy of the portrait by Henry Inman, an early American artist.

OVER FIFTY PERISH IN TEXAS FLOODS

Scores of Others Reported in Imminent Peril.

RAILROAD OFFICIAL VICTIM.

Property Loss Will Reach Four or Five Million Dollars—High Water Blocks Lifesaving Crew and Train Load Of Boats.

Bryan, Tex.—A death roll of more than 50 persons, with scores of flood refugees in imminent peril, and possibly a thousand others marooned and suffering from prolonged hunger and cold, was indicated by the latest reports from the flooded Brazos River bottoms, in this section of South-Central Texas. For over 50 miles the Brazos was three to five miles wide and running with millrace speed.

The known dead in Texas floods numbered 33 before reports from the inundated territory in this district began coming in. The late reports were brought by men on horseback, and indicated at least 20 more persons had been drowned. About two-thirds of the dead were negroes.

The courier's reports indicated that the property loss would total $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 when losses along the Brazos are added to the already heavy damage in other portions of the State.

Henry Martin, vice-president and general manager of the International and Great Northern Railroad, was drowned at Valley Junction, near here, while attempting to rescue marooned flood victims. Mr. Martin went to Valley Junction, where the confluence of the Little and Big Brazos Rivers made a swirling lake, six miles across, to personally direct the road's relief forces, and was attempting to navigate a boat alone when the frail craft was upset. His body had not been recovered tonight.

Six members of the life-saving crew stationed at Galveston and a trainload of motorboats from Houston, which started for Bryan, were stopped by high water at Navasota. The boats were launched at that point shortly before dark and started upstream over the flooded bottoms to rescue persons reported clinging to trees, housetops or occasionally standing in shallow water, cut off from shore. Bryan had 20 boats out all day, which brought to high ground several hundred persons, the majority terrified and half-clad negroes.

Prominent planters in the bottoms have refused offers of rescue, sending out their wives and children to Bryan, but themselves remaining behind in the water, tearing down portions of their buildings to improvise platforms for their stock. Anxiety is felt for the safety of several planters.

MRS. PANKHURST FREE.

Released From English Jail After a Hunger Strike.

London.—Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, the militant suffragette leader, who was arrested at Plymouth on December 4, on her arrival from the United States aboard the steamship Majestic, was released from the Exeter jail Sunday. Mrs. Pankhurst began a hunger and thirst strike immediately following her arrest. Mrs. Pankhurst was driven to a hotel. She appeared very weak and immediately retired to bed in charge of a nurse. Mrs. Pankhurst is liberated on seven days' license.

NOW THE COMMUNION CUP.

Question Of Whether It Should Pass In Age Of Hygiene.

Philadelphia.—The recent order of the advisory board of the State Department of Health, banishing the common drinking cup from all public places, including Sunday schools, has raised the question regarding the use of a common communion cup in church services in this State. Clergymen and others have made inquiries at the Health Department at Harrisburg regarding the interpretation of the recent order, but so far no official answer has been given.

WILSON SMILE FOR FUTURE.

Moving-Picture Film Put Away By Historical Body.

New York.—President Wilson's smile was sealed up in an airtight, watertight and fireproof container and locked in the vaults of the Modern Historical Record Association in the New York Public Library Building. It is proposed that the record of his facial expressions, which have been done in moving-picture films, will be kept in the vaults for a hundred years and then he brought forth the entertainment of the generations of the twenty-first century.

DEFIES U. S. SENATE.

Sutherland, Of Utah, Says He Will Not Attend Night Sessions.

Washington.—Senator Sutherland got his dander up and announced to an astonished Senate that he proposed to "play hookey" from night sessions on the currency bill. He said, in his opinion, they were designed to "wear out" the Republicans. Senator Bacon told his colleague his announcement was a "defiance of the Senate."

THINKS FINGER PRINTS WILL GO.

Photographing Veins In Hand Better, Says Italian Professor.

New York—The finger printing method for the identification of criminals may some day be supplanted by photographing the veins of the hand, according to Professor Tamassia, of the University of Paduca, Italy. He is quoted in advocacy of the new plan, declaring that the merest novice can detect variations in the veins of the hand, while long training is necessary to distinguish in finger prints.

COMMERCIAL

Weekly Review of Trade and Market Reports.

Dun's Review says:

"Complaints are still heard of the retarding influences of mild weather, which restricts retail demand for seasonable merchandise. Holiday trade, however, has opened up well.

"Apprehension of labor troubles at textile centers, notably at Fall River, has been removed, at least for the present, but scarcity of operatives keeps production below distribution. An easier tendency is manifest in cotton goods for contract delivery, but spot values hold steady and recent inventories by Western jobbing houses indicated more prosperous conditions than a year ago."

Bradstreet's says:

"Unseasonably warm weather bulks large in the trade crop and industrial reports this week. Warm, growing weather, projected into December, is also dulling the seasonable demand for coal and causing too rank a growth of winter wheat. Some farmers are being forced to mow their lands to prevent too heavy a growth, jointing, etc. Insect damage is also complained of, and real winter weather would be in a high degree acceptable throughout a wide area."

SYNOPSIS.

Scarlett, an American soldier of fortune in the employ of the French Imperial Police at the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian war, is ordered to arrest John Buckhurst, a leader of the Communists and suspected of having stolen the French crown jewels. While searching for Buckhurst, Scarlett is ordered to arrest Countess de Vassart and her group of socialists and escort them to the Belgian border. Scarlett finds Sylvia Elven of the Odeon disguised as a peasant and carries her to La Trappe where the countess and her friends are assembled. All are arrested. The countess saves Scarlett from a fatal fall from the roof of the house. He denounces Buckhurst as the leader of the Reds and the countess conducts him to where Buckhurst is secreted. German Uhlans descend on the place and Buckhurst escapes during the melee. Scarlett is wounded. He recovers consciousness in the countess' house at Morsbronn, where he is cared for by the countess. A fierce battle is fought in the streets between French and Prussian soldiers. Buckhurst professes repentence and returns the crown jewels to Scarlett. He declares he will give himself up to the authorities. Scarlett doubts his sincerity. Buckhurst urges the countess to go to Paradise. Buckhurst admits that he receives pay from the Prussians for information which he does not give. He secures passports to the French lines for Scarlett, the countess and himself. Scarlett reports to the secret service in Paris and finds Mornac, shadow of the emperor, in charge. He deposits the crown jewels and later, when making a detailed report, finds that pebbles have been substituted for the real stones. Speed, a comrade in the service, warns Scarlett that Mornac is dangerous. He also informs him that all the government treasure is being transported to the coast for shipment out of the country. Scarlett and speed escape to join a circus. The circus arrives at Paradise. An order is received by the mayor calling the citizens to arms. Jacqueline, daughter of the Lizard, offers to join the circus to give exhibitions in the character of a mermaid. Scarlett makes friends with the Lizard. Scarlett calls on the countess at her home in Paradise. He finds Sylvia Elven also there. He learns the countess has withdrawn from the socialists. They swear eternal friendship. The Lizard learns for Scarlett, through one Tric-Trac, that Mornac is head of a communistic conspiracy.

CHAPTER XV.

Forewarned.

The lions had now begun to give me a great deal of trouble. Oh, they knew, and I knew, that matters had gone wrong with me; that I had, for a time, at least, lost the intangible something which I once possessed—that occult right to dominate.

That morning, as I left the training-cage—where among others, Kelly Eyre stood looking on—I suddenly remembered Sylvia Elven and her message to Eyre, which I had never delivered.

"My son," said I, politely, "do you think you have arrived at an age sufficiently mature to warrant my delivering to you a message from a pretty girl?"

There's no harm in attempting it, my venerable friend," he replied, laughing.

"This is the message," I said: "On Sunday the book stores are closed in Paris."

"Who gave you that message, Scarlett?" he stammered.

He was so young, so manly, so unspoiled, and so red, that on an impulse I said: "Kelly, it was Mademoiselle Elven who sent you the message."

His face expressed troubled astonishment.

"Is that her name?" he asked.

"Well—it's one of them, anyway," I replied, beginning to feel troubled in my turn. "See here, Kelly, it's not my business, but you won't mind if I speak plainly, will you? I know Mademoiselle Elven—slightly. I am afraid of her—and I have not yet decided why. Don't talk to her."

"But—I don't know her," he said; "or, at least I don't know her by that name."

"Then who do you believe sent you that message, Kelly?"

His checks began to burn again, and he gave me an uncomfortable look. A silence, and he sat down in my dressing room, his boyish head buried in his hands. After a glance at him I began changing my training suit for riding clothes, whistling the while softly to myself.

"Mr. Scarlett I should like to tell you about myself; . . . I was a clerk in the consul's office in Paris when Monsieur Tissandier took a fancy to me, and I entered his balloon ateliers to learn to assist him. Then the government began to make much of us . . . you remember? We started experiments for the army. . . I was intensely interested, and . . . there was not much talk about secrecy then. . . . I made an invention—a little electric screw which steered a balloon . . . sometimes . . ." He laughed, a mirthful laugh, and looked at me. All the color had gone from his face.

"There was a woman—" I turned partly towards him.

"I know," I said.

"Somehow we always talked about military balloons. And that evening . . . she was so interested in my work . . . I brought some little sketches I had made—"

"I understand," I said.

He looked at me miserably. "She was to return the sketches to me at Caiman's—the fashionable book store, . . . next day. . . . I never thought that the next day was to be Sunday. . . . The book stores of Paris are not open on Sunday—but the war office is."

"I began to put on my coat.

"And the sketches were asked for?" I suggested—"and you naturally told what had become of them?"

"I refused to name her."

"So they sent you to a fortress?" I asked.

"To New Caledonia, . . . four years. . . . I was only twenty, Scarlett, . . . and ruined. . . . I joined Byram in Antwerp and risked the tour through France."

"You never saw her again?"

"I was under arrest on Sunday. I do not know. . . . I like to believe that she went to the book store on Monday, . . . that she made an innocent mistake, . . . but I never knew, Scarlett, . . . I never knew."

"Suppose you ask her?" I said.

His firm hand tightened on mine, then he walked away, steadily, head high. And I went out to saddle my horse for a canter across the moor to Point Paradise.

So, by strange ways and eccentric circles, like the aerial paths of homing sea-birds, I came at last to the spot I had set out for, consciously; yet it surprised me to find I had come there.

A boy took my horse; a servant in full Breton costume admitted me; the velvet humming of Sylvia Elven's spinning-wheel filled the silence, like the whirring of a great, soft moth imprisoned in a room.

The door swung open noiselessly; the whir of the wheel and the sound of the song filled the room for an instant, then was shut out as the Countess de Vassart closed the door and came forward to greet me.

"Are you troubled?" she asked, then colored at her own question.

"No, not troubled. Happiness is often edged with a shadow. I am content to be here."

Her face grew graver. "You must forget the past," she said; "you must forget all that was cruel and false and unhappy, . . . will you not?"

"Yes, madame."

"I, too," she said, "have much to forget and much to hope for; and you taught me how to forget and how to hope."

"I, madame?"

"Yes, . . . at La Trappe, at Morsbronn, and here. Look at me. Have I not changed?"

"Yes," I said, fascinated.

I picked up my gloves and riding-crop; as I rose she stood up in the dusk, looking straight at me.

"Will you come again?" she asked.

I stammered a promise and made my way blindly to the door which a servant threw open, flung myself astride my horse, and galloped out into the waste of moorland, seeing nothing, hearing nothing save the low roar of the sea, like the growl of restless lions.

CHAPTER XVI.

A Restless Man.

When I came into camp, late that afternoon, I found Byram and Speed groping about among a mass of newspapers and letters, the first mail we circus people had received for nearly two months.

There were letters for all who were accustomed to look for letters from families, relatives, or friends at home. I never received letters—I had received none of that kind in nearly a score of years.

But there were newspapers enough and to spare—French, English, American; and I sat down by my lion's cage and attempted to form some opinion of the state of affairs in France.

When, on the 3rd of September, the humiliating news arrived that the emperor was a prisoner and his army annihilated, the government, for the first time in its existence, acted with promptness and decision in a matter of importance. Secret orders were sent by couriers to the Bank of France, to the Louvre, and to the Invalides, and, that same night, train after train rushed out of Paris loaded with the battle flags from the Invalides, the most important pictures and antique sculptures from the Louvre, the greater part of the gold and silver from the Bank of France, and, last but by no means least, the crown and jewels of France.

These trains were dispatched to Brest, and at the same time a telegram was directed to the admiral commanding the French iron-clad fleet in the Baltic to send an armored cruiser to Brest with all haste possible, there to await further orders, but to be fully prepared in any event to take on board certain goods designated in cipher. This we knew in a general way, though Speed understood that Lorient was to be the port of departure.

The plan, then, was simple; but, for an equally simple reason, it miscarried in the following manner: On the 4th of September the treasure-laden trains had left Paris for Brest. On the 5th the Hirondello steamed out towards the fleet with the news from Sedan and the orders for the detachment of a cruiser to receive the crown jewels. On the 6th the news and the orders were signaled to the flagship; but the God of battles unchained a tempest which countermanded the order and hurled the ironclads into outer darkness.

So, for days and days, the treasure-laden trains must have stood helpless in the station at Brest, awaiting the cruiser that did not come.

Speed and I already knew the secret orders sent. The treasures, including the crown diamonds, were to be stored in the citadel, and an armored cruiser was to lie off the arsenal with banked fires, ready to receive the treasures at the first signal and steam to the French fortified port of Saigon in Cochin China, by a course already determined.

Why on earth those orders had been changed so that the cruiser was to lie off Groix I could not imagine, unless some plot had been discovered in Lorient which had made it advisable to shift the location of the treasures for the third time.

Pondering there at the tent door, amid my heap of musty newspapers, I looked out into the late, gray afternoon and saw the maids and men of Paradise passing and repassing across the bridge.

A few moments later drums began to roll from the square. Speed, passing, called out to me that the conscripts were leaving for Lorient; so I walked down to the bridge, where the crowd had gathered and where a tall gendarme stood, his blue-and-white uniform distinct in the early evening light.

"Attention!" cried the officer, a slim, hectic lieutenant from Lorient.

The mayor handed him the rolls,

The Man Was John Buckhurst.

and the lieutenant, facing the shuffling single rank, began to call off:

"Roux of Bannalec?"

"Here, monsieur—"

"Don't say, 'Here, monsieur!' Say, 'Present!' Now, Roux?"

"Present, monsieur—"

"Idiot! Kedrec?"

"Present!"

"Garenne!"

There was silence.

"Robert Garenne!" repeated the officer, sharply. "Monsieur the mayor has informed me that you are liable for military duty. If you are present, answer to your name or take consequences!"

The poacher, who had been lounging on the bridge, slouched slowly forward and touched his cap.

"I am organizing a franc corps," he said.

"You can explain that at Lorient," replied the lieutenant. "Fall in there!"

"But I—"

"Fall in!" repeated the lieutenant.

The poacher's visage became inflamed. He hesitated, looking around for an avenue of escape. Then he caught my disgusted eye.

"For the last time," said the lieutenant, coolly drawing his revolver, "I order you to fall in!"

The poacher backed into the straggling rank, glaring.

"Now," said the lieutenant, "you may go to your house and get your packet. If we have left when you return, follow and report at the arsenal in Lorient. Fall out! March!"

The poacher backed out to the rear of the rank, turned on his heel, and strode away towards the coast, clinched fists swinging by his side.

There were not many names on the roll, and the call was quickly finished. And now the infantry drummers raised their sticks high in the air, there was a sharp click, a crash, and the square echoed.

"March!" cried the officer. The crowd pressed on into the dusk. Far up the darkening road the white coiffes of the women glimmered; the drum-roll softened to a distant humming.

A shape slunk near me through the dusk, furtive, uncertain. "Lizard," I said, indifferently. He came up, my gun on his ragged shoulder.

"You go with your class?" I asked.

"No, I go to the forest," he said, hoarsely. "You shall hear from me."

I nodded.

"Are you content?" he demanded, lingering.

The creature wanted sympathy, though he did not know it. I gave him my hand and told him he was a brave man; and he went away, noiselessly, leaving me musing by the river wall.

After a long while—or it may only have been a few minutes—the square began to fill again with the first groups of women, children, and old men who had escorted the departing conscripts a little way on their march to Lorient.

Long tables were improvised in the square, piled up with bread, sardines, puddings, hams and cakes. Casks of cider, propped on skids, dotted the outskirts of the bowling-green.

I turned away across the bridge out into the dark road. Long before I came to the smoky, silent camp I heard the monotonous roaring of my lions, pacing their shadowy dens.

CHAPTER XVII.

The Circus.

A little after sunrise on the day set for our first performance, Speed sauntered into my dressing-room in excellent humor, saying that the country was unmistakably aroused to the importance of the Anti-Prussian Republican circus and the Flying Mermaid of Ker-Ys.

I had had an unpleasant hour's work with the lions, during which Marghouz, a beast hitherto lazy and docile, had attempted to creep behind me. Again I had betrayed irritation; again the lions saw it, understood it, and remembered. Poor devils! Who but I knew that they were right and I was wrong! Who but I understood what lack of freedom meant to the strong—meant to caged creatures, unrighteously deprived of liberty!

I mentioned something of this to Speed as I was putting on my coat to go out, but he only scowled at me, saying: "Your usefulness as a lion-tamer is ended, my friend; you are a fool to enter that cage again, and I'm going to tell Byram."

"Don't spoil the governor's pleasure now," I said, irritably. "I'm going to give it up soon, anyway—not now—not while the governor has a chance to make a little money; but soon—very soon. You are right; I can't control anything now—not even myself. I must give up my lions, after all."

"When?" said Speed.

"Soon—I don't know. I'm tired—really tired. I want to go home."

"Are you really going home, Scarlett?" he asked, curiously.

"I have nothing to keep me here, have I?"

"Not unless you choose to settle down and . . . marry."

After a moment's thought I said: "Speed, what the devil do you mean by that remark?"

"Oh, what do you imagine I mean?" he retorted. "Do you think I'm blind? Am I an ass, Scarlett? Be fair; am I?"

"No; not an ass," I said.

"Then let me alone—unless you want plain speaking instead of a bray."

"I do want it."

"Very well, my friend; then, at your respectful request, I beg to inform you that you are in love with Madame de Vassart—and have been for months."

"You are wrong," I said, steadily.

"No, Scarlett; I am right."

"You are wrong," I repeated.

"Don't say that again," he retorted. "If you do not know it, you ought to. Don't be unfair; don't be cowardly. Face it, man!"

"What are you saying, Speed?" I asked, rousing from my lethargy to shake his hand from my shoulder.

"The truth. In all these years of intimacy, familiarity has never bred contempt in me. I have watched you as a younger brother watches, lovingly, jealous yet proud of you, alert for a failing or a weakness which I never found—or, if I thought I found a flaw in you, knowing that it was but part of a character too strong, too generous for me to criticise. Listen to me, Scarlett. I tell you that a man shipwrecked on the world's outer rocks—if he does not perish—makes the better pilot afterwards."

"But . . . I perished, Speed."

"It is not true," he said, violently; "but you will if you don't steer a truer course than you have. Scarlett, answer me! Are you in love?"

"Yes," I said.

He waited, looked up at me, then dropped his hands in his pockets and turned away toward the interior of the tent where Jacqueline, having descended from the rigging, stood.

I walked fast across the moors, as though I had a destination. And I had; yet when I understood it I sheered off, only to turn again and stare fascinated in the direction of the object that frightened me.

Then, looking seaward, for the first time I noticed that the black cruiser was gone.

For a while I stood listening, searching the sea, until a voice hailed me, and I turned to find Kelly Eyre almost at my elbow.

"There is a man in the village haranguing the people." Speed thinks this man is Buckhurst."

"What!" I cried.

"There's something else, too," he said, soberly, and drew a telegram from his pocket.

I seized it, and studied the fluttering sheet:

"The governor of Lorient, on complaint of the mayor of Paradise, forbids the American exhibition, and orders the individual Byram to travel immediately to Lorient with his so-called circus, where a British steamship will transport the personnel, baggage, and animals to British territory. The mayor of Paradise will see that this order of expulsion is promptly executed.

"(Signed) BRETEUIL,
"Chief of Police."

"Where is that fool of a mayor? Come on, Kelly! Stay close beside me." And I set off at a swinging pace, down the hollow, out across the left bank of the little river, straight to the bridge, which we reached almost on a run.

"Look there!" cried my companion, as we came in sight of the square.

The square was packed with Breton peasants; near the fountain two cider barrels had been placed, a plank thrown across them, and on this plank stood a man holding a red flag.

The man was John Buckhurst.

When I came nearer I could see that he wore a red scarf across his breast; a little nearer and I could hear his passionless voice sounding; nearer still, I could distinguish every clear-cut word:

"Men of the sea, men of that ancient Armorica which, for a thousand years, has suffered serfdom, I come to you bearing no sword. You need none; you are free under this red flag I raise above you."

He lifted the banner, shaking out the red folds.

"Peace, Love, Equality! All this is yours for the asking. The commune will be proclaimed throughout France, Paris is aroused, Lyons is ready, Bordeaux watches, Marseilles waits!"

A low murmur rose from the people. Buckhurst swept the throng with colorless eyes.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Milady in Gold Attire

JUST as gorgeous and just as beautiful as it can be, this gown in one of the many wonderful gold shades shows the cleverest handling of the most extreme ideas in this winter's modes.

The skirt of panne velvet of the softest and most supple variety is made on the "Turkish trouser" model. About all its fullness is arranged at the front. There is no mistaking the appearance it makes on the wearer. It looks actually more like a pair of voluminous trousers than like our ordinary skirts.

The pannier and bodice in one, with soft crushed girdle of velvet, is a wonderful garment. The drapery is arranged in two over-hanging panniers, broadening the hips and hanging into the figure at the bottom. The bodice is cut with a kimono sleeve, apparently, although it is hard to be sure of this. At all events, the arm's-eye is not discernible in it. The sleeve is lengthened until it covers the wrist and extends in a point over the back of the hand. Such sleeves are the height of styles.

This costume is an achievement of which the designer has a right to be proud. It manages difficult problems of draping in the best way. There is a pretty fichu of net worn under the bodice, and a standing ruff about the neck. A finish of long loops of black velvet ribbon in a narrow width is placed at the termination of the neck ruff at each side.

One cannot help wondering at and admiring the lovely turban which finishes this toilette. A length of soft fur, or plush, appears to be wrapped about the head and provided with the narrowest of supporting brims at one side. Poised at the center is the body and head of a wingless butterfly made of velvet. The audacity of a wingless butterfly used as an ornament would be unforgivable except that the gorgeous creature in gold is the real butterfly, which fact his velvet fly ship is proclaiming at the top of his—turban.

The pretty clothing of the feet is to be noted. Silk stockings in black, and pointed slippers of black satin, laced across the instep with narrow black ribbon.

Not a jewel is worn here. The toilette is in fact a wonderful conception and the smallest detail has not been neglected.

CREPE AND CHIFFON FOR ACCESSORIES THAT MATCH HAT

IN keeping with the ideas of the season, which show a preference for muffs and neck pieces to match the hat, crape has been utilized to make very chic accessories to be worn with mourning millinery. The most popular fashions in hats, as to shape and decoration, lend themselves with unusual appropriateness to this material.

The crape set of three pieces, hat, muff and scarf, shown in this picture, illustrates how successfully this beautiful fabric may be used in this way. Except for the silk lining of the muff, no other material is required to make and trim the several pieces, except a strip of rather heavy chiffon which forms the scarf. The ornaments on each piece are fashioned of the crape.

The small round hat with slightly rolling brim is covered with the material put on smoothly. The crown is small and puffed, and the odd standing ornament is made of a hemmed strip of crape wrapped about a supporting wire and ruffled about it at the top.

The scarf is only a plain length of chiffon with its edges finished with a wide border of crape. The ends are gathered and finished with an ornament made of folds of crape and finished with a bound scarf end of the fabric. This is a strip of the material bound with a narrow bias fold of crape like that which trims the muff.

A ready made muff bed lined with black silk and covered with it as an interlining makes the construction of the muff a simple matter. Five deep folds of crape are placed over each side and sewed down at the ends. A strip bound of the material is brought across the top, tacked down one side, covering the ends of the plaits and tied in a knot with hanging end as a finish.

The set is as handsome as anyone could wish and only ordinary skill in sewing is required to make it.

Freshening Furs.

Any fur coat, muff or neck piece that needs freshening up may be greatly improved in appearance simply by brushing with a soft brush and water, to which one tablespoonful of pure alcohol has been added for every quart. Always brush with the nap of the fur. When white or light gray furs have become soiled they may be cleaned easily in gasoline.

Ribbon Sets.

Detachable sleeve trimmings to match the waist garniture are easily made, and afford a desirable way of rejuvenating a last season's blouse. These ribbon sets are delightful bits of work for leisure moments and quite transform an otherwise plain waist.

New Stockings.

Stockings are made with anklets of embroidery or beads or rhinestones. They seem fanciful, but are really no more so than the now accepted rhinestone studded heels which were laughed at when they made their first appearance here last winter.

Color Contrast.

Sometimes no color contrast is to be found in a dress. And then the dainty woman provides it by the flower which she tucks into the corsage or waist. Sometimes she chooses a single rose in flaming scarlet, at others a peony in glorious purple, and again a huge bunch of violets or a spray of delicate orchids in curious browns and yellows. Or, eschewing color, she takes a large clematis in smooth white velvet and, thrusting it into the front of her coat, endows her whole costume with a note of originality, and so achieves success.

Aprons for Children.

Tan cotton aprons, bound with bias strips of pink or blue lawn, and stamped with a simple design to be embroidered in outline stitch, are sold for 49 cents. They are for children. They are cut on all-enveloping lines, and would make admirable play aprons. There are deep pockets across the bottom and straps that button on the shoulders.

STRONG DEFENSE OF HER SEX

Miss Hulda Nutt Proves by Anecdote That Men Are Just as Foolish as the Women.

"It certainly does make me weary, all these innuendoes in the funny papers about the women. One would think by some of the supposedly facetious jokes that we girls didn't have enough intelligence to keep out of the home for the feeble minded," remarked Hulda Nutt to her sister, Ima, as she pointed to an illustration in the evening paper.

"Now here, for instance, is a rehashed story about a bridegroom carrying a basket, approaching a narrow creek. He turns to his simple minded bride—I judge she must have been simple or she never would have married him—and he offers to carry her across the stream. This egotistical male jokesmith has the bride make the inane reply: 'But you can't carry both me and the lunch basket. We would be too heavy. You carry me and I will carry the lunch basket.'

"As a matter of fact that foolish chestnut was first recorded about an old man with a basket of eggs and a commendably humane heart, who, as he boarded the street car, observed that the arched necks and cruelly docked tails of the two decrepit horses in front, bespoke a sadly contrasting prosperity in their remote youth. The old man's tender heart was touched at the pitiful sight, and as he took his seat in the car he gently lifted the basket of eggs out the window and held them there all the way of his journey to make the burden lighter for the poor horses. So you see, Ima," she added with an emphatic nod of her head, "the men are every bit as foolish as the women, if not more so."

Sea Monsters.

That "thresher shark" of fabulous dimensions just caught on the south coast of England is fast becoming a formidable rival of the sea serpent and the big gooseberry. He is fairly common during summer around Cornwall, where he does great damage to pilchard and mackerel nets, in which he completely finds himself, like a caterpillar in his chrysalis. The thresher shark is also called the sea fox, from the remarkable tail, which he uses to frighten shoals of fish, and so make them more easily caught. There are sailors' yarns that this whiplike tail is sometimes used for flogging whales to death. But the real persecutor of the whale is the gladiator dolphin or sword grampus (Delphinus gladiator), a very carnivorous fellow, who kills and eats whales, seals and even his brother porpoises.

China "Called" Livingstone.

It is not generally known that Livingstone originally had the intention of devoting himself to the work of "a pioneer of Christianity in China." It was as such that he offered himself to the London Missionary society in 1837, but when he had received his diploma from the faculty of physicians and surgeons in 1840, he found China closed to him, as Great Britain was then at war with the country. It was his meeting with Moffat, who had recently returned from South Africa, that led his steps to the Dark Continent.

SETTLED THE JUDGE'S DOUBTS

Naive Statement of Convicted Murderer Removed All Question as to His Guilt.

When Judge Stewart of Vermont presided at the trial of a negro charged with murder of another of his race he admitted afterward to friends that he had serious doubts of the prisoner's guilt until he began to pronounce sentence.

The negro had pleaded not guilty and repeatedly, on being questioned, had asserted with much emphasis, "I didn't do it!" The evidence was not convincing, and the judge was surprised when the jury brought in a verdict of guilty. His doubts vanished, when, after reminding the negro that he had been tried by a jury of 12 men, etc., he said: "It is my duty to warn you that your days on earth are numbered, and it behooves you to avail yourself of the little remnant of time allotted to you to make peace with God."

Just there the negro broke in with the exclamation, "Ah done dat already, jedge, befo' Ah went out ter kill dat niggah!"

The Eternal Feminine.

The South African natives in Boerland still preserve their old customs, and one of the most curious is that of carrying off a girl for a wife. The custom is called "ukutwala," and the girl, though not indisposed to accept the man, causes every obstacle to be placed in his way.

The suitor watches his opportunity (after first placing so many head of cattle in the kraal of the girl's father) and eventually carries away the girl by main force.

The heartrending cries of the bride, as she is carried away, are something pitiful—a cry that pierces the heart of a Christian, but his pity subsides when he learns that in native language it means:

"Don't take me, but don't let any one help me, because I want to go!"

Chinese boatmen at Macao have been letting off bombs and crackers to induce the gods not to injure them with a whirlwind.

The New Deputy Sheriff Appointed.

Sheriff-elect Scott has decided to appoint Sheriff DeWitt as his deputy. Mr. Dewitt has faithfully performed his duties as sheriff and was a successful deputy under the late Sheriff Maffett. Doubtless he will prove a valuable assistant to Sheriff Scott.

Sheriff Scott will occupy the residence portion of the Jail, and is now storing many things needed in the building. The Republican wishes both the Sheriff and his deputy a successful administration.

The Republican Printery Busy.

This week the minutes of the West Virginia Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church are being mailed from the Republican office to the pastors and church officials. The minutes contain 139 pages, and are issued by Rev. J. O. Bolten, D. D. secretary of the conference. This is the tenth year this office has printed the minutes of the West Virginia Conference.

The Republican printery is crowded with work. The past several weeks our pay roll contained the names of nine empoyees, and the plant has been running day and night.

Mrs. B. F. Friend, who has been at Fairmont, W. Va., for some weeks, returned to Loch Lynn Monday.

Blaine Schell is seriously ill with typhoid fever at his father's home.

Once more the claim of Mr. Harmon W. Hessen, of this city, is before Congress and as on other occasions the thing passed the House three times and the Senate three times in the past sixty days was laid over for further consideration. The Cumberland Times says: With the Democrats controlling both branches of Congress, it is believed that the bill stands its best chance of being agreed upon and passed by Congress. If it does the many Maryland claims, some of which are nearly a half century old, will be paid.

New Livery Stable.

Mr. James Hinebaugh, is building a livery stable on Liberty street. The building is 40x59 feet, two stories high. It will have a concrete, stone lined, front, and will cost about $1,000. W. H. Kuhl & Sons are the contractors. The building is about under roof, and the weather permitting will be completed shortly.

Mountain Lake Park Church Notes.

There will be no preaching in the Methodist church Sunday.

The Sunday school and Epworth League are in a flourishing condition; growing in interest and in number.

The Christmas exercises will be held Christmas night.

The pastor will commence a series of special meetings about January first.

FUNERAL OF EDWARD SINCELL

Was Conducted Last Sunday Morning From St. Paul's Church

Edward H. Sincell, Jr., was born at Oakland, December 23, 1891, and died at the family home December 10, 1913, aged 21 years, 11 months and 17 days. He was the youngest son of Edward H. and Sallie Button Sincell, and is survived by his parents and his brother, Charles Milton Sincell. As a boy he attended the Oakland schools and in the fall of 1907 entered Stevens Hall, the preparatory school of Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg, Pa., and in the fall of 1909 entered the freshman class of the college, graduating in June last, in the class of 1913.

While still a young boy, he united with Saint Paul's Methodist Episcapal Church of Oakland and continued as a faithful, consistent member to the end.

The funeral took place last Sunday morning, December 14th, 1913, at 10:30 o'clock from St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal church and was probably more largely attended than any similar service in the history of Oakland. Rev. Dr. Archibald Moore, pastor, was assisted in the services by Rev. Philip Melancthon Bikle, dean of the faculty of Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg, Pa., and Rev. John M. Davis, of Oakland.

Simple but beautiful tributes were paid to the life and character of this gifted young man, and there were but few dry eyes in the congregation, espically when Dr. Bickle told of the pure and beautiful life Edward had led while in college and of the great promise he gave of taking high rank in his chosen profession by reason of the superior intellectual qualities with which he was endowed.

Rev. Mr. Davis spoke of his early childhood and youth, and feelingly referred to the fact that he had baptised Edward in his infancy, and had watched him develop into young manhood with a character strong and upright, founded upon a firm and lasting christian experience and unswerving belief in the realities of the life to come.

Dr. Moore read the burial service and offered prayer, and spoke most feelingly of the sad bereavment which had come to the family, the church and the community.

Dr. John G. Robinson and Mrs. Gordon Mealy each renderd a solo, that sung by Mrs. Mealy being one which Edward frequently sang at home, and the hymns by the choir were most appropriate to the occasion.

During his senior year in college, Edward was consul of Theta chapter of the Sigma Chi fraternity, and his fraternity brothers and classmates evidenced the love and esteem in which they held him by attending the funeral and tenderly bearing his remains to their final resting place m the Oakland cemetery. The pallbearers were George Hummel, Harrisburg, Pa.; Ordean Rockey, Stone Harbor, N. J.; Paul M. Crider, Chambersburg, Pa.; Charles S. Butt, Gettysburg, Pa.; Samuel P. Speicher, Thompsontown, Pa.; and Lawrence Hitchins, Frostburg, Md., while the flower bearers were Paul Hitchins and Glenn Beall, Frostburg; Clyde Orris, Mechanicsburg, Pa., and Mark White, Byrne Hamill, Roy Hammond, Arthur Naylor, Michal and James Bovle, John Hart, Jr., Joseph McComas, Frederick Thayer. Jr., Walter Fortney and Neal Fraley, of Oakland.

Among those who attended the funeral from a distance were: Mr. John T. Sincell and wife, Mr. Olin F. Durst and wife, Mr. James A. Sincell and wife, Mr. George L. Sincell and wife, Mr. Harry W. Methenv and wife, Mr. Harry Richardson and Miss Virginia Richardson, Mr. Arthur Wells, all relatives of the family, Mrs. Charles H. Linnville, of Baltimore, and Mr. D. Y. Morris, of Kingwood, W. Va.

Nothing has occured in recent years in this community which has so deeply stirred the sympathies of its people as the death of this young man, and the family, while heartbroken over their loss, are comforted with the universal expressions of love which have come to them, not only from our home people, but from all sections where Edward was known.

The floral tributes were many and beautiful, and were sent by friends from all over the country.

At a meeting of the Class of 1913, Pennsylvania College, held at Gettysburg, Pa., December 13, 1913, the following resolutions were passed:

Whereas, In the providence of Almighty God we are brought to lament the decease of our late fellow-student, Edward Hood Sincell, and

Whereas In his death, we have lost a beloved classmate and friend; be it therefore,

Resolved, That the class of Nineteen Hundred-and-Thirteen of Pennsylvania College, in paying its loving tribute to the memory of a loyal member, hereby expresses its deep sorrow and extends to the bereaved family its heartfelt sympathy; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the sorrowing family and that they be published in the class bulletin and in the weekly Gettysburgian.

UNION OF PARTY AND HARMONY THE KEYNOTE

STRUCK AT THE BANQUET THURSDAY NIGHT AT CUMBERLAND.

Here the mountains of Western Maryland, where Republican principles have thrived since their first enunciation, there was kindled a spirit Thursday night last which may start the party on the road to victory. The event was the dinner tendered by Mr. Andrew Ramsey, of Mount Savage, to Governor Goldsborough, and attended by Republican leaders and yeoman of Allegany and Garrett counties, and Republican leaders of the State.

The spirit which animated the gathering, the sanguine tone of the speeches, the spontaneous applause and the vigorous handclapping with which the sentiments were received were the evidences that the Republicans of Western Maryland have entered upon a campaign to place the party on a victorious plane, a campaign sure to spread throughout Maryland. It was at Ashtabula, Ohio, that C. L. Vallandigham, in 1872, by the action of his county convention, transformed the Democratic party from an anti-war party, a party of opposition, into a live, aggressive party which in 1874, made itself dominant in the House of Representatives, and which in 1876 swept Republican states from their stanch moorings. Why should not this dinner in Cumberland take its place alongside that event in the Ohio town that made history? Who can tell but that the event of last Thursday night may be the beginning of a new era in the history of the Republican party?

When the financial and industrial depression already here and to be augmented shall have made itself telt, when Democratic promises of lower cost of living shall not have been fulfilled by a reduced tariff, when the whole country is turned topsy-turvy by impracticable Democratic policies, the time indeed will be propitious for the inauguration of the safe and sane policies of the Republican party under which the country blossomed and bloomed, under which the wheels of industry went around.

The redemption of Western Maryland at the congressional election next year is the task to which Republicans present pledged their best efforts. Governor Goldsborough in his speech eloquently spurred them on this party duty. They responded with alacrity and cheering applause.

The election of a Republican senator next year to join the band in the Senate in Washington which is fighting for the sound principles underlying the government was urged with great enthusiasm and received with a "do-or-die" spirit. After 1914 there will be a state election and then a presidential election, in which Maryland Republicans, as demonstrated at this dinner, will devote their energies with enthusiasm.

The dinner was not conceived in politics. It was designed to be a compliment to Governor Goldsborough, but Western Maryland Republicans would not permit the occasion to slip without injecting politics into it. Mr. Ramsey demurred. Even in his speech he said the occasion possessed but little political significance. But how can politics be eschewed when nearly 300 Republicans gather under the same roof, in the same room, elbow touching elbow, all breathing the same atmosphere?

To prove his assertion that politics was subordinate to the good cheer and good fellowship of the occasion, Mr. Ramsey even invited a score of Democrats, personal friends, who heartily joined in the festivities of the dinner and who heartily extended the glad hand of welcome to Governor Goldsborough.

Mr. Ramsey's guests, not himself, gave the tone to the gathering. The speakers were Republicans who have made their mark in Maryland history. They were, in addition to Governor Goldsborough, Mr. Ramsay, United States Senator Wm. P. Jackson, Senator Harvey J. Speicher, of Garrett county; Hon. Thomas Parran, of Calvert county; Thompson Brown, Washington county; John B. Hanna, chairman of the Republican State Central Committee, and Senator Fred N. Zihlman, of Allegany county.

In his speech Mr. Ramsay welcomed his guests to Allegany county. Governor Goldsborough urged harmony as essential to restoration of prosperity in the country.

The address of the evening was made by Senator Jackson.

SENATOR JACKSON'S ADDRESS.

If there is one thing that brings special pleasure in the midst of this delightful hospitality on this my first visit to your city it is the thought that we are met in part to celebrate the election of a Republican Senator in a county which has so many victories for the grand old party to its credit. We are also assembled to counsel together for the future, to devise plans whereby our cause may not only continue to triumph in Allegany, but may ultimately be successful through the State. And therefore without further indirection and resisting the temptation to spend all of my time in congratulating our host on the success of this dinner, let me point out to you two essential conditions toward the realization of these ends so devoutly wished by all. These essential I desire to mention are not unknown. On the contrary their very familiarity and simplicity may sometimes lead us to overlook their importance and make necessary a re-direction of our minds to the fact that unless they are present, hope of success is as futile as for a warring and tactional mob to seek to sweep aside the bayonets of a disciplined army. And my simile suggests the first of these two essentials. It is harmony.

I place harmony as the first of the two essentials, it is really also the fundamental condition precedent before our party can hope for success. Is not the loss of this erstwhile solidly Republican Congressional district sufficient proof that lack of harmony is our undoing? Are not our our Democratic friends centering their hopes for a continuation of power more on our lack of unity than upon their own merits and deserts? Gentlemen, all other considerations pale into insignificance when contrasted with the supreme importance of our lighting the enemy in one united effort rather than fighting among ourselves. I believe we are realizing this truth. I believe the substantial efforts to close the old gaps among our ranks and the result that appeared in the last election, are certain evidence that we are realizing this truth. And aside from this visible pregress toward reunion we may take fresh encouragement from the thought that direct primaries should remove for the causes that have produced hard feeling and consequent disorganization in the past. If rival candidates for a nomination submit their claims to the people in a fair direct primary, each thereby renounce the right to claim when defeated that favoritism and intrigue triumphed rather than the the choice of the people.

For can anyone feel aggrieved by the people in a case where it is agreed the majority shoud decide? Futher more, gentlemen, there is a moral duty on the part of the part of the defeated candidate to support the choice of the majority except in those extremely rare instances when a question of conscience is involved. For if minorities will not acquiesce in the decision of the majority then there is an end to popular government. Again, if the faction defeated in the primary refuses support to the victorious majority and think by this means to cause their convictions to prevail, they are actually bringing about the downfall of the principles represented by the party and to which their very presence in the primary shows their allegiance.

But I am attempting to prove a self-evident fact. The prime need of our party is for every man to make some concession towards the common purpose; to sacrifice some little ambition for the common good; to put aside some little jealousy for the welfare of all; to think less of self and more of party; to realize once and for all that the triumph of one's personal views can come only though cooperation, and to grasp the eternal truth that a great party like a Nation can only win through a majority thereof.

United, our party future looms bright. To realize that future in all its brilliancy I call your attention to the second of the two essential conditions I had in mind. The party must stand for the best. We are a minority. The worst element in a community, those persons who commercialize their convictions, whose activities are the direct cause of the unwholesomeness in our political life, attach themselves to the majority party; for it is the majority party only that can make their loyalty worth while, that has the power to give them the reward of office and special favors their debauched patriotism demands. We could not win over this class if we tried. We must appeal to those citizens who are not attached by chains of financial interest to the Democratic party. Our problem is to convince the good citizenship in this State that we stand for the best and most enlightened government. To do this the party machinery must be honest and efficient. We must have a plattorm that is not loaded either with the theories of extremists or with matters not properly the subject of political discussion; that on the one hand preserves that which experience has proven the worth, and on the other hand strikes fearlessly at existing abuses and proposes a constructive plan for their correction.

Gentlemen, these are two essentials as I see them. They can each be realized, and therefore this meeting should be filled with hope. Our party has an honorable record in this State. The administration of the late Government Lowndes is a record of what has been achieved and by which we may be proud to be judged. The administration of Phillips Lee Goldsborough is a present and living evidence of our present capacity to govern and to which we can confidently the best of Republicanism.

May these few words then, tend to push away any lingering discord and doubt and place in their stead unity and hope for the future.

One of the pleasing episodes at the Republican dinner was the presence in the lobby of the Queen City Hotel of a pretty Salvation Army lassie, who stood, with tambourine extended, at the door as the guests entered. It was particularly noticed that not one overlooked the girl, whose tambourine soon became choked with quarters, half-dollars and some bills, the total sum being large. With a broad smile the little bonnetted lady curtisied again and again in recognition of the generosity of the guests at the Republican dinner.

No liquors were served at the banquet. Among the guests were: Dr. John E. Legg, Senator Speicher, ex-Senator Ravenscraft, Delegate-elect W. W. Savage; George W. Legge, Bert Ashby, W. H. Smouse, J. E. Kelly, W. A. Gonder, Thomas Gonder, Oakland; W. J Werner, Finzel; J. S. Myers, Friendsville; E. E. Friend and J. L. Echard, Mountain Lake Park; C. A. Ashby, Deer Park; G. A. Gunger and C. A. Bender, Grantsville.

Come here for hats, hosiery, neckties, handkerchiefs, towels, dolls, musical and otherwise. We have anything you want. Linens of every description. At HYDE'S. —Advertisement.

LOCAL CIVIC CLUB WILL BRING CHRISTMAS CHEER

To the Homes of the Deserving Poor of Oakland During the Holidays

A meeting of the Civic Club of Oakland was held Tuesday when a plan that is calculated to bring good cheer to the homes of the deserving poor of Oakland was discussed and the philanthropic committee, of which Mrs. Benj. H. Sincell is chairman, was given power to act in carrying out the ideas of the club, which are as follows:

The club, through the committee named above, asks the different churches of the town to cooperate with it in bringing Christmas cheer to the homes of the townwhere Christmas is unknown. To carry the work through successfully a committee composed of four members from each denomination in Oakland will meet tonight for organization and the details worked out so that Santa Claus may make no mistake and visit each deserving home.

The committee of the Civic Club appeals to all. If you want Christmas to be a happy one for you, you are asked to help in this work. Toys, books, etc., make the little tots happy; if they are old, but in good condition, give them. Clothing for all ages will be accepted, also eatibles and money. Send your donations to the Lutheran church on Tuesday of next week where the committee will be presant from 10 until 2 o'clock to receive them and will arrange the donations in baskets and distribute them according to the needs of the recipients.

The committee asks the merchants and the business men of the community to assist. Fathers and mothers, brother and sisters, are all asked to help in this work.

"Inasmuch as ye have done it to the least of these, my brethern, ye have done it unto me."

BALTIMORE'S COMMUNITY CHRISTMAS TREE

Was Broken and Rendered Unfit for Use When Felled Monday.

The great pine tree selected by Dr. Henry W. McComas for Baltimore to be used as a community Christmas tree, was broken and rendered unfit for use when it was felled by a gang of workmen last Monday afternoon and as a result Baltimore, should that city determine to have a community tree, will be compelled to look elsewhere than in Garrett county for its offering to Saint Nicholas.

The tree selected by the local physician stood on the lands of Mr. Nimrod Glotfelty near McHenry. To lower it block and tackle had been rigged about the forest monarch, but when the weight of the falling tree pulled heavily against the rope its moorings gave way and it fell with a crash to the ground, breaking all of the lower limbs and robbing it of its natural beauty and symmetry.

The disappointment of the Baltimore city people in not being able to get a tree from Maryland's soil is equalled by that of Dr. McComas, who greatly regrets the mishap that rendered his labors in vain.

Rev. Dr. Reed was in Grafton, W. Va., last Tuesday.

Jerry Mankis, of Swanton, had business in Oakland yesterday.

Mr. D. W. Wilson, of near Wilson, is in Oakland today on business.

J. R. Pope, of Gormania, had business in Oakland yesterday.

Mr. and Mrs. John Murphy are visiting friends in Cumberland.

Miss Isabel Broderick of this city, will spend the holidays at Midland, Md.

County-superintendent F. E. Rathbun is visiting the public schools of the county this week.

The Oakland merchants will keep their stores open every evening until Christmas day.

The Panama canal was open from end to end last Tuesday, sufficient to allow the passage of small sized steamers.

The stores in Loch Lynn will be open Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday nights but will be closed all day Christmas.

You will find a nice line of Christmas toys, candies, fruits, nuts, celery, fresh oysters, and choice Christmas meats at Savage's meat market.

R. B. Browning, of Deer Park, has received a nice Christmas present from Uncle Sam,—the appointment of post-office clerk. Congratulations.

Next Monday will be the shortest day in the year. The sun will rise at 7:23 a. m. and set at 4:47 p. m. This will be the efficial beginning of winter. From then on the days will lengthen.

The Christmas services of the Presbyterian Sunday school will be held Christmas evening, in the church. There will be a Santa Claus, a distribution of gifts, appropriate music and short addresses.

Byrne Hamill has received the necessary papers for the organization of a company of the National Guards at Oakland. He has letters from several young men residing in different parts of the county who intend to join the company.

CONSERVATION IS REVIVED.

State Branch Of National Body Names New Officers.

Conservation, so far as Maryland is concerned, was given a decided impetus when at an invitation luncheon at the City Club, tended by Bernard N. Baker, the Maryland Branch of the National Conservation Association was reorganized.

The association passed a resolution providing for compulsory roadside tree planting, and Charles Morris Howard signified his purpose to draft a law to meet the idea of the resolution for introduction before the General Assembly next month.

Dr. William Bullock Clark, State Forester F. W. Besley, William M. Ellicott, Mr. Howard and others spoke decisively on the project of bringing Maryland to the standard of other States in the matter of conservation. Mrs. L. D. Collier, of Salisbury; the Rev. Dr. D. H. Steffens and Miss Frances Lurman also spoke.

State Senator William McCulloh Brown was named president of the reorganized body and Frederick Clement Weber secretary. The original association, which was founded about 1908, had Dr. Clark for its president, John E. Semmes as secretary and Robert Garrett as treasurer. An effort will be made to have Mr. Garrett serve as treasurer of the new organization.

Others that attended the luncheon were Dr. Oliver L. Fassig, William W. Emmart, Miss Katherine Lurman, Dr. I. D. Murray, of Elkridge, Md.; City Forester R. Brooke Maxwell and Mrs. A. L. Stoussat.

Oakland Wins Two Games.

Keyser went down to defeat twice this week before the Oakland Collegian Basket Ball Team. The first game, which was played in Keyser was easily captured by the Collegians, the score being 30 to 14 in favor of the Oakland team.

The second game which was played in Oakland was fast and exciting all the way through, Oakland running a few points in advance, the final score being 27 to 23. Playing of M. Boyle easily featured the game.

Oakland will play their next game in the Empire Theatre, Friday, December, 19th with the fast Fairmont Team. This game is expected to be the fastest of the season.

ANNAPOLIS NEWS

FOR SMALLER ASSEMBLY.

State Senator Benson Proposes To Raise Legislators' Pay.

Believing that the adoption of his idea will have the effect of encouraging high-grade men to seek election to the General Assembly, State Senator Carville D. Benson, of Baltimore county, aroused considerable interest by announcing that he is working on a plan for increasing the pay of legislators without increasing the State's expenses.

To do this he suggests amendments to the Constitution under which the representation in both branches of the Legislature will be materially reduced while the terms of the members of the House of Delegates will be increased from 2 to 4 years—one-half of the membership to be elected every two years. In this way he figures election dates can be so arranged that one election will be dispensed with every other year. Before this plan of Senator Benson's can be put into effect it will be necessary to first amend that section of the Constitution prescribing how amendments to that instrument shall be made. Otherwise, since at present each section of the Constitution must be amended separately, Mr. Benson thinks any attempt to change the representation in the General Assembly would drag itself out into an almost endless affair. Senator Benson said that if his plan is carried out representation in the House and Senate will be by districts instead of by counties. These districts, he thinks, should be based largely upon population, but not in such a manner as to give Baltimore city absolute control. He has not yet decided to what extent the representation in either branch should be reduced, but thinks the reduction in the House should be proportionately larger than the reduction in the Senate.

HARRISON SUIT UP DECEMBEF. 19.

Court Of Appeals Will Hear Worcester County Case.

The Court of Appeals completed the hearing of cases at the October term docket, but in announcing adjournment Chief Judge Boyd said court would be reconvened on Friday of this week to hear the appeal of J. Samuel Price and others, Supervisors of Elections for Worcester county, against Quince Ashburn, who was a candidate for State Senator against Orlando Harrison in the recent election in Worcester. The case comes to the appellate court from an order of the Worcester County Circuit Court, which granted the petition for a mandamus filed by Ashburn to compel the Supervisors to count the vote cast in the Stockton precinct, in which the election officials disagreed and all did not sign the returns. With that count left out Harrison was elected, but had it been counted Ashburn, who was the candidate on the People's party ticket, would have won by four votes. The lower tribunal granted the mandamus petition. Owing to the fact that a seat in the Senate is at stake and the General Assembly will convene in less than a month, the Court of Appeals was urged to hear the case as soon as possible. The court will render a decision promptly, it is expected. William L. Marbury is counsel for Ashburn and Alonzo L. Miles, George H. Upshur and J. W. Staton are handling the case for the Supervisors.

STATE GAME MEN MEET.

Want Uniform Charge For Gunners' Licenses—Elect Officers.

At a meeting of the executive board of the Maryland State Game and Fish Protective Association a committee was appointed to confer with former State Senator Gorman in reference to the State-Wide Game law to be presented to the next Legislature. The bill provides for a uniform charge of $1 for a gunner's license each year, and for the increase of the State Game Warden's salary from $1,200 to $2,500, the deputies to receive $600 and $200 for expenses. It is thought that about half of the $40,000 expected from the tax can be devoted to buying and protection of game. A public meeting will be held next month at the Lyric, when Joseph Kalfus, State Game Warden of Pennsylvania, will give an illustrated address on game. G. Ranson Hartman was elected executive secretary of the association and H. N. Abercrombie, treasurer. Seventy-six new members were enrolled.

McMASTERS HEAD TRAINER.

Will Have Charge Of Athletics At the Naval Academy.

A notable change in the manner of conducting certain branches of athletics at the Naval Academy will go into effect this spring, the general charge of the training of all the athletic squads with the possible exception of the crew being turned over to Jack McMasters, who for a number of years has been trainer of the football team and coach of the field and track squad. L. H. Mang, senior instructor in athletics, has been designated to coach the field and track men. It is believed that permission will be given to send a relay team to the University of Pennsylvania games this season.

The Naval Academy has become a member of the Intercollegiate Indoor Rifle Association and will have a team entered in the competition which will be carried on among the different members during the winter.

NAVAL WEDDING PUT OFF.

Groom-To Be Is On Duty In Mexican Waters.

The presence of some of the battleships of the Atlantic fleet in Mexican waters has caused the postponement of at least one naval wedding, that of Ensign Thomas S. McCloy and Miss Elizabeth Wells, of Annapolis. The wedding was set for December 17, but has been postponed until the Ohio returns to American waters. Ensign McCloy graduated from the Naval Academy in 1911.

GEN. VILLA ACTED THE DICTATOR

Seized Foreigners' Property Valued at $5,000,000.

PUT MANY PERSONS TO DEATH

Warns Merchants Of Chihuahua That They Must Pay Him Large Amounts To Support the Revolution.

El Paso, Texas.—Americans, Germans and Spaniards from Chihuahua, Mexico, report that Francisco Villa, the rebel leader, virtually had constituted himself dictator there, and that he refused to heed the requests of representatives of foreign governments.

They asserted that the rebel leader had seized $5,000,000 worth of property belonging to foreigners, had put to death about 20 Mexican civilians, including Sergeio Sanchez, a lawyer and former state official, and had commanded the American, German and British consuls to obey rebel orders.

The happenings in Chihuahua since Villa occupied the city on its evacuation by the federal troops, as given by the refugees, who numbered 1,000 were:

Villa seized a large department store, valued at $1,500,000 and owned by French, German, English and Spanish interests, but chiefly by the Spanish, and placed in command of the store General Cnao, a rebel leader.

He also seized a brewery, a clothing factory and all the grocery and other stores owned by Spaniards, valued at $5,500,000.

Holds Up Merchants.

He called a meeting of merchants of all nationalities and told them they must pay him large sums of money, aggregating several million dollars, to support the revolution.

He gave orders that the so-called constitutional money should be accepted as currency.

Villa's expulsion of citizens of Spain, all of whom were progressive merchants, was on pain of death. He at first informed them they must be out of the country within five days, but leter, after an appeal by Harry Scobell, the British vice consul, he extended the time to 10 days. None of the Spaniards were allowed to take anything except personal effects, and they were told never to return.

The capture and imprisonment of Luis Terrazas, Jr., son of a rich landowner, was after Terrazas had sought refuge in the British vice consulate, and after the rebels informed Mr. Scobell they would break down the British vice consulate unless Terrazas was released.

Marion Letcher, the United States consul, was asked by the foreigners to protect them. Mr. Letcher attempted to send a cipher message to the State Department, but was informed by Villa that no cipher messages would be permitted on the rebel telegraph. Villa then informed the foreign consuls in a body that they would have to obey rebel orders.

PACKAGE DEALS DEATH.

Girl Stenographer Killed By Infernal Machine Intended For Employer.

New York.—Miss Ida Anusewitz, the 18-year-old stenographer for William H. Callahan, president of the O. K. Bottling Company, was killed by the explosion of an infernal machine that had just been delivered to her in this city by an expressman. Miss Anusewitz, who lived with her parents at 153 Suffolk street, was apparently an innocent victim to a fiendish plot to wreak vengeance upon her employer, for the package containing the explosive was merely addressed to the firm.

CARNEGIE BOARD CHAIRMAN.

Senator Root Succeeds Dr. Billings In Institute.

Washington.—Senator Elihu Root, of New York, has been elected chairman of the board of trustees of the Carnegie Institute here. He succeeds to the chair left vacant by Dr. Thomas S. Billings, former director of the New York Public Library. Andrew Carnegie, while not a member of the board, attended the meeting at which Senator Root was elected.

STUFF IT WITH DASHEEN.

Dietary Expert's Suggestion For the Christmas Turkey.

Washington.—Don't stuff the Christmas turkey with bread, chestnuts or oysters—use the "dasheen." It's a new vegetable from China, resembling potatoes and tasting like boiled chestnuts, which Department of Agriculture dietary experts recommend. Dasheens may also be used for a pie or boiled, roasted or fried.

WAR MAY BREAK OUT IN EUROPE

Count Witte Finds the Situation Serious.

MADE TOUR OF CONTINENT.

He Places His Chief Hope For the Prevention Of War In the Character and Intentions Of Emperor William.

St. Petersburg.—Count Witte, who has recently returned from a tour of several of the more important European capitals, says there is a grave prospect of a great European war. Count Witte said the general situation in Europe impressed him as ominous and he was especially impressed by the easy manner in which the German government succeeded in having the increased military budget passed by the Reichstag and the promptitude with which the upper class in Germany responded to the financial appeal made to them in connection with the great military plans.

He was also surprised at the great resistance shown in France to the three years' compulsory military service bill and the lack of enthusiasm over the new loan, which really was the cause of its abandonment and the fall of the Barthou ministry.

"The situation to my mind is extremely grave," said Count Witte. "The only hope I have of a general European war being averted is my knowledge of the character and intentions of Emperor William. He has declared that so long as he lives he will not permit a general war to break out in Europe. If the situation is taken in hand early enough he may be able to prevent such a war; if not, I dread to think what would follow. In any event, now that Alexander III. is no more, Europe must look to the German Emperor as the strongest supporter of world peace."

WOMEN WIN FIRST SKIRMISH.

Suit To Test Constitutionality Of Illinois Suffrage Law.

Chicago.—A suit to test the constitutionality of the woman's suffrage act passed by the last Illinois legislature was dismissed for want of equity by Judge Foell in the Superior Court here. The case will go on appeal to the Supreme Court of Illinois for final ruling. The dismissed suit was brought by William J. Scown, of Chicago, as a taxpayer and asked for an injunction to restrain the election commissioners from permitting women to vote at elections previous to the establishment of the constitutionality of the act.

TO VOTE ON NEW YEAR'S DAY.

Elections Will Be Held In Many West Virginia Towns.

Charleston, W. Va.—Although January 1 is a legal holiday in West Virginia, many cities and towns of the State will hold municipal elections that day. This became known, when Attorney-General A. A. Lilly interpreted the State election law for the councils of several towns who had questioned the legal status of elections held on a holiday. The election statute states that elections shall be held in all cities and towns created under Chapter 45 of the Code the first Thursday in January next year.

TO STARVE LOPEZ OUT.

Sheriffs Believe They Have Desperado Well Bottled Up.

Bingham, Utah.—The part of the Utah-Apex Mine in which Ralph Lopez, slayer of six men, is believed in hiding, was bulkheaded off. The sheriff is of the opinion Lopez is in this section of the mine and that he is securely sealed up. The posses made no attempt at searching the section because the network of connecting corridors would have made it easy for the desperado to elude them. It is planned to starve Lopez out.

KILLS MAN SENT TO ARREST.

Farmer Fired On Officers And Was Shot In Return.

Bluefield, W. Va.—Samuel Wyatt, a farmer of Tazewell county, Virginia, was shot and almost instantly killed by George B. Fuller, jailer, of Tazewell county. A warrant had been issued charging Wyatt with beating his wife and Fuller and a man named Harrell went to arrest him. When they reached his home Wyatt opened fire on Fuller. Fuller fired in return, four bullets striking Wyatt. Fuller was not arrested.

ORDERED TO CEASE FIRING

Federals and Rebels Obey Order of American Admiral.

HALT IN BATTLE OF TAMPICO.

Combatants Told By Admiral He Would Open Fire On Them With Guns Of Wheeling If Orders Were Not Obeyed.

Mexico City.—Rear-Admiral Fletcher, commander of the American naval forces in Mexican waters, ordered the rebels and Federals fighting at Tampico to cease firing, threatening to open upon them with the guns of the gunboat Wheeling if his order was not obeyed. Both sides complied with the order.

This information is contained in a dispatch received by Sir Lionel Carden, the British Minister, from Rear-Admiral Sir Christopher Cradock, of the British cruiser Berwick, which is lying off Tampico.

The Federals hold the centre of the town of Tampico and the water front. Rear-Admiral Fletcher has ordered foreigners to take refuge on board ships or to congregate on the water front where they will be under the protection of his guns.

Rebel Force Double Federals.

How many rebels are engaged in the attack on Tampico is not known, but it is estimated that their number is at least twice that of the Federals and their operations indicate that they expect more men from Victoria, capital of the State of Tamaulipas, which lies half way between Tampico and Monterey to the north. The rebels who are in possession of yards and shops and large stores of material and equipment have actually detached from their lines sufficient men to undertake repairing the railroad north and west from Tampico toward Victoria. The damage that has been done this line, while enough to prevent the operation of trains, is not so great that it will long delay a resumption of traffic. Most of the destroyed bridges being small ones can be easily replaced. Repairs to the road southward from Victoria also are being rushed, and it is not improbable that the rebels will be able to transport fresh troops and additional artillery supplies there before the government can get reinforcements to the port.

MORE COTTON CORNER FINES

Four Men Who Plead No Defense Assessed $4,000 Each.

New York.—Fines of $4,000 each were imposed in the Federal District Court here upon Eugene Scales, of Texas; Frank Hayne and William Brown, of New Orleans; Morris Rothschild, of Mississippi, and Col. Robert M. Thompson, of this city, on their plea of nolo contendere to a charge of cornering the cotton crop of 1909, in violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust law. James A. Patten, of Chicago, had previously been fined a similar amount in the same case.

A JURY OF WOMEN.

Death Sentence Postponed Until After Birth Of Child.

London.—The first jury of women to sit in London in 30 years was empaneled to pass upon the case of Mrs. Ada Annie Williams, 26 years old, who was sentenced to death for the murder of a child. The woman asked for a stay of execution, stating that she was about to become a mother.

BIG SPANISH BANK FAILS.

Reported To Be Overloaded With Mexican Securities.

Madrid. — The Hispano-Americano Bank suspended payment again Thursday. It had been obliged to do so temporarily Wednesday owing to a run, but the Bank of Spain came to its assistance. It was reported that the bank was overloaded with Mexican securities.

KILLED IN BED BY BOY.

Guest Of Adams Family Accidentally Shot At Banco.

Banco, W. Va.—Taking his .22 caliber rifle with him, James Adams, aged 10, went to a bedroom at the home of his father to awaken J. Farrell, aged 20, a guest. The youngster pointed the gun at Farrell, it is said, and then at H. Linville, also in bed. Both men warned the boy to be careful, as the gun might be loaded. The gun was discharged and the bullet entered Farrell's neck, killing him instantly. The boy is in jail.

COURT DISMISSES INCOME TAX SOIT

Elsie De Wolf's Complaint Is Dismissed By the Court.

DEMURRER IS SUSTAINED.

Criticised By Bourke Cockran—Declares That Inequalities Deny To the Plaintiff Equal Protection Of Law.

Chicago.—The suit to test the income tax law was thrown out of the United States District Court here by Judge Landis, who decided that he had not jurisdiction.

The effect of this decision, which does not involve the constitutionality of the law, is to send the case direct to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The medium selected for the test is a suit at law in which Elsie de Wolfe, former actress, a citizen of New York, now resident at Versailles, France, is plaintiff, and the Continental and Commercial Trust and Savings Bank of Chicago is defendant.

Bank Held Back Tax.

W. Bourke Cockran, of New York, and Colin C. H. Fyffe, of Chicago, appeared for Miss De Wolfe and Levy Mayer, of Chicago, for the bank.

Miss De Wolfe, owner of 30 of the Appalachian Power Company's 5 per cent. bonds, was refused payment by the bank of interest due on the bonds December 1 last, because she had not filed the certificate of ownership which the bank contends is required by the income tax law. Her suit is for interest due and damages in the sum of $1,000.

Cockran's Argument.

In the presentation of his case Attorney Cockran asserted that the law taxes only 423,000 persons out of a population of 90,000,000, which tax, he said, was imposed on them without their consent by the untaxed remainder of the population.

His client's income, he said, was more than $20,000 a year, on which she is taxed 1 per cent. on all in excess of $3,000 and an additional tax of 1 per cent. on all above $20,000.

He asserted that if this ratio were equitably pursued, the income from the tax would be $750,000,000, a sum practically sufficient to defray all Government expenses. By its present inequalities, he added, the income tax would not be much more than $80,000,000.

Might Take It All.

Attorney Cockran insisted that if all incomes were taxed in the same ratio as that of the plaintiff, incomes of more than $250,000 would be subject to a penalty of 19 per cent. instead of the present 5 per cent., those of $500,000 or more to a penalty of 20 per cent., instead of 6; incomes of a million would be penalized 40 per cent. instead of 7. A man with an income of $2,500,000 a year and the lawyer said there were several in the country—would be assessed 100 per cent., or, in other words, would have to pay all income in excess of $2,500,000 into the United States Treasury.

Thus, he argued, his client was not granted the equal protection of the law guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. Mayer stated that the position of the bank is that the law is Constitutional. In his demurrer filed yesterday he further contended that the bonds constitute a civil contract in no wise involving Federal laws, and that the Federal Court, therefore, had no jurisdiction.

COMMERCIAL

Weekly Review of Trade and Market Reports.

Dun's Review says:

"While evidences accumulate of the reactionary trend of business a disposition is manifest in some quarters to take a more hopeful view of the general outlook. Sentiment in financial circles has improved, noticeably of late, and it is significant that a better feeling exists in the iron and steel trade, particularly in the Pittsburgh district. Reports from that center indicate larger buying of railway equipment than for several months, and concessions in prices are of less frequent occurrence, thus suggesting that the bottom point has about been reached."

Bradstreet's says:

"Out of the rather confused reports received this week there are obtainable items of cheerful import, though the quieting down of some industries has made further progress. Retail trade is irregularly better as the result of winter weather and the advance of the holiday season. This is not general, because the Northwest, Southwest and Pacific Coast note continuance of unseasonable weather.

"Jobbing trade tends to quiet as inventory season approaches. Wholesale and far-future trade is still under the check rein of conservatism."

SYNOPSIS.

Scarlett, an American soldier of fortune in the employ of the French Imperial Police at the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian war, is ordered to arrest John Buckhurst, a leader of the Communists and suspected of having stolen the French crown jewels. While searching for Buckhurst, Scarlett is ordered to arrest Countess de Vassart and her group of socialists and escort them to the Belgian border. Scarlett finds Sylvia Elven of the Odeon disguised as a peasant and carries her to La Trappe where the countess and her friends are assembled. All are arrested. The countess saves Scarlett from a fatal fall from the roof of the house. He denounces Buckhurst as the leader of the Reds and the countess conducts him to where Buckhurst is secreted. German Uhlans descend on the place and Buckhurst escapes during the melee. Scarlett is wounded. He recovers consciousness in the countess' house at Morsbronn, where he is cared for by the countess. A fierce battle is fought in the streets between French and Prussian soldiers. Buckhurst professes repentence and returns the crown jewels to Scarlett. He declares he will give himself up to the authorities. Scarlett doubts his sincerity. Buckhurst urges the countess to go to Paradise. Buckhurst admits that he receives pay from the Prussians for information which he does not give. He secures passports to the French lines for Scarlett, the countess and himself. Scarlett reports to the secret service in Paris and finds Mornac, shadow of the emperor, in charge. He deposits the crown jewels and later, when making a detailed report, finds that pebbles have been substituted for the real stones. Speed, a comrade in the service, warns Scarlett that Mornac is dangerous. He also informs him that all the government treasure is being transported to the coast for shipment out of the country. Scarlett and Speed escape to join a circus. The circus arrives at Paradise. An order is received by the mayor calling the citizens to arms. Jacqueline, daughter of the Lizard, offers to join the circus to give exhibitions in the character of a mermaid. Scarlett makes friends with the Lizard. Scarlett calls on the countess at her home in Paradise. He finds Sylvia Elven also there. He learns the countess has withdrawn from the socialists. They swear eternal friendship. The Lizard learns for Scarlett, through one Trie-Trac, that Mornac is head of a communistic conspiracy. Scarlett learns something of Sylvia Elven through a fellow performer named Kelly. Orders regarding the treasure trains are changed, owing to the discovery of a plot at Lorient.

CHAPTER XVII.—Continued.

"Where's the mayor?" I whispered to Eyre.

"In his house; Speed is with him."

"Come on, then." I said, pushing my way around the outskirts of the crowd to the mayor's house.

The mayor was lying in his arm-chair, frightened, sulky, obstinate, his fat form swathed in a red sash.

"O-ho!" I said, sharply, "so you already wear the colors of the revolution, do you?"

"Dame, they tied it over my waistcoat," he said, "and there are no gendarmes to help me arrest them—"

"Never mind that just now," I interrupted; "what I want to know is why you wrote the governor of Lorient to expel our circus."

"That's my own affair," he snapped; "besides, who said I wrote?"

"Idiot," I said, "somebody paid you to do it. Who was it?"

The mayor looked slyly at me out of the corner of his mottled eyes, but he remained mute.

"Very well," said I; "when the troops from Lorient hear of this revolution in Paradise, they'll come and chase these communards into the sea. And after that they'll stand you up against a convenient wall and give you thirty seconds for absolution—"

"Stop!" burst out the mayor, struggling to his feet. "What am I to do? This gentleman, Monsieur Buckhurst, will slay me if I disobey him! Besides"—he began to bluster. "I'm mayor of Paradise, and I won't be bullied! You get out of here with your circus and your foolish elephants! I haven't any gendarmes just now to drive you out, but you had better start, all the same—before night."

"Oh," I said, "before night? Why before night?"

"Wait and see then," he muttered. "Anyway, get out of my house—d'ye hear?"

"We are going to give that performance at two o'clock this afternoon," I said. "After that, another tomorrow at the same hour, and on every day at the same hour, as long as it pays. Do you understand?"

"Perfectly," sneered the mayor.

Then I asked him what he would do if the cruiser began dropping shells into Paradise; he deliberately winked at me and thrust his tongue into his cheek.

"So you know that the cruiser is gone?" I asked.

He grinned.

"Do you suppose Buckhurst's men hold the semaphore? If they do, they sent that cruiser on a fool's errand," whispered Speed.

Here was a nice plot! I stepped to the window. Outside in the square Buckhurst was ranging a dozen peasants in line. The peasants were not Paradise men; they wore the costumes of the interior, and somebody had already armed them with scythes, rusty boarding-pikes, stable-forks, and one or two flintlock muskets. An evil-looking crew, if ever I saw one. They were the scum of Morbihan.

"Well!" muttered Speed in amazement.

After a long silence, Kelly Eyre looked at his watch. "It's time we were in the tent," he observed, dryly; and we turned away without a word. At the bridge we stopped and looked back. The red flag was flying from the mayor's house.

"I think," I said, "that we had better ride over to Trecourt after the show—not that there's any immediate danger—"

"There is no immediate danger," said Speed, "because she is here."

My face began to burn; I looked at him miserably. "How do you know?"

"She is there in the tent. I saw her. Don't misconstrue her presence. Don't be a contemptible fool. If I have read her face and I have never spoken to her, as you know—I tell you, Scarlett, that young girl is going through an ordeal! Do women of that kind come to shows like this to be amused?"

And he turned on his heel, leaving me speechless.

I do not remember dressing. When I came out into the passage-way Byram beckoned me, and pointed at a crack in the canvas through which one could see the interior of the amphitheater.

The show was on.

I stood in the shadow of the stable-tent, dressed in my frock-coat, white stock, white cords, and hunting-boots, sullen, embittered, red with a false shame that better men than I have weakened under, almost desperate in my humiliation, almost ready to end it all there among those tawny, restless brutes pacing behind the bars at my elbow, watching me stealthily with luminous eyes.

She knew what I was—but that she could come to see with her own eyes I could not understand, I could not forgive. Because she had, in her gracious ignorance, given me a young girl's impulsive friendship, was I to mistake her?

"Have you seen her?" whispered Speed, coming up to me, long whip trailing.

I shook my head.

He looked at me in disgust. "Here's something for you," he said, shortly, and thrust an envelope into my hand.

In the envelope was a little card on which was written: "I ask you to be careful, for a friend's sake." On the other side of the card was engraved her name.

"Where is she?" I said, steadying my voice, which my leaping heart almost stifled.

He drew me by the elbow and looked toward the right of the amphitheater. Following the direction of his eyes, I saw her leaning forward, pale-faced, grave, small, gloved hands interlocked. Beside her sat Sylvia Elven, apparently amused at the antics of the clown.

"I will be careful," I said to Speed, in a low voice. "If it were not for Byram I would not go on today—but that is a matter of honor. Oh, Speed," I broke out, "is she not worth dying for?"

"Why not live for her?" he observed dryly.

He let go of my arm and stood back as my lion-cages came rolling out, drawn by four horses.

"It's your turn," he said, in a dazed way. "Look out for that lioness."

I entered the cage, afraid.

Almost instantly I was the center of a snarling mass of lions; I saw nothing; my whip rose and fell mechanically. I stood like one stunned, while the tawny forms leaped right and left. Suddenly I heard a keeper say, "Look out for Empress Khatoun, sir!" And a moment later a cry, "Look out, sir!"

Something went wrong with another lion, too, for the people were standing up and shouting, and the sleeve of my coat hung from the elbow, showing my bare shoulder. I remember saying, aloud: "I must keep my feet; I must not fall!" Then daylight grew red, and I was on my knees, with the foul breath of a lion in my face. A hot iron bar shot across the cage. The roaring of beasts and people died out in my ears; then, with a shock, my soul seemed to be dashed out of me into a terrific darkness.

PART THIRD

CHAPTER XVIII.

A Guest-Chamber.

A light was shining in my eyes and I was talking excitedly; that and the odor of brandy I remember—and something else, a steady roaring in my ears; then darkness, out of which came a voice, empty, meaningless, finally soundless.

After a while I realized that I was in pain; that, at intervals, somebody forced morsels of ice between my lips; that the darkness around me had turned grayer.

Years and years later a yellow star rose and stood still before my open eyes; and after a long while I saw it was the flame of a candle; and somebody spoke my name.

"I know you, Speed," I said drowsily.

"You are all right, Scarlett?"

"Yes, . . . all right. What time is it?"

I heard the click of his hunting-case. "Eleven o'clock."

"What day?"

"Saturday."

"When was I hurt? Many days ago—many weeks?"

"You were hurt at half past three this afternoon."

I turned on the white pillow. "Where is this bed? Where is this room?"

"Shall I tell you?"

I was silent, struggling with memory.

"Tell me," I said, "whose bed is this?"

"It is hers."

The candle-flame glimmered before my wide-open eyes once more, and—

"Oh, you are all right," he muttered, then leaned heavily against the bedside, dropping his arms on the coverlet.

That is all I remember that night, all I remember clearly, though it seems to me that once I heard drums beating in the distance; and perhaps I did.

Dawn was breaking when I awoke. Speed, partly dressed, lay beside me, sleeping heavily. "Idiot, get up!" I cried, hitting him feebly.

He was very angry when he found out why I had awakened him; perhaps the sight of my bandaged head restrained him from violence.

He stumbled to the floor, bathed, grumbling all the while, and then, to my surprise, walked over to a flat trunk which stood under the window and which I recognized as mine.

"I'll borrow some underwear," he remarked viciously.

"What's my trunk doing here?" I demanded.

"Madame de Vassart had them bring it."

"Had who bring it?"

"Horan and McCadger before they left."

"Before they left? Have they gone?"

"I forgot," he said, soberly. "Of course you don't know that the circus has gone."

With the Foul Breath of a Lion in My Face.

"Gone!" I echoed, astonished.

"Gone to Lorient. Buckhurst is in town again with a raft of picturesque ruffians," he said. "They marched in last night, drums beating, colors unfurled, the red rag, you know—and the first thing they did was to order Byram to decamp.

"Byram's people, elephant and all, struck the road a little after three o'clock this morning, in good order, not a tent-peg nor a frying-pan missing. They ought to be in Lorient by early afternoon."

"Gone!" I repeated, blankly.

I lay looking at him, striving to realize the change that had occurred in so brief a time—trying to understand the abrupt severing of ties and conditions to which, already, I had become accustomed—perhaps attached.

"They all sent their love to you," he said. "They knew you were out of danger—I told them there was no fracture, only a slight concussion. Byram came to look at you; he brought your back salary—all of it. I've got it."

After a moment I said: "Has Jacqueline gone with them?"

"Yes. They sail today from Lorient. The governor made money yesterday—enough to start again. Poor Byram! He's frantic to get back to America; and, oh, Scarlett, how that good old man can swear!"

"Speed, did you say that little Jacqueline went with Byram?"

He looked at me miserably.

"Yes," he said.

I was silent.

"Yes," he repeated, "she went, lugging her pet cat in her arms. She would go; the life has fascinated her. I begged her not to—I felt I was disloyal to Byram, too, but what could I do? I tell you, Scarlett, I wish I had never seen her, never persuaded her to try that foolish dive. She'll miss some day—like the other one."

He walked to the window and stared moodily at the sea.

"Meanwhile," I said, quietly, "I am going to get up."

He gave me a look which I interpreted as, "Get up and be damned!" I complied—in part.

CHAPTER XIX.

Trecaurt Garden.

About nine o'clock we were summoned by a Breton maid to the pretty breakfast room below, and I was ashamed to go with my shabby clothes, bandaged head, and face the color of clay.

The young countess was not present; Sylvia Elven offered us a supercilious welcome, and we ate in constrained silence.

"Will the pensive gentleman with nine lives have a little more nourishment to sustain him?" she asked, as the meal drew to an end.

Looking up from my empty plate, I declined politely; and we followed her signal to rise.

She led the way into that small room overlooking the garden where I had been twice received by Madame de Vassart. Here she took leave of us, abandoning us to our own designs. On the wall a cat sat, sunning her sleek flanks. Something about the animal seemed familiar to me, and after a while I made up my mind that this was Ange Pitou, Jacqueline's pet, abondoned by her mistress and now a feline derelict. I watched the cat for a few moments, then sat down on the bench. The inertia which follows recovery from a shock, however light, left me with the lazy acquiescence of a convalescent, willing to let the world drift for an hour or two, contented to relax, apathetic, comfortable.

And then my reverie ended abruptly; a step on the gravel walk brought me to my feet. . . . There she stood, lovely in a fresh morning gown deeply belted with turquoise-shells, her ruddy hair glistening, coiled low on a neck of snow.

For the first time she showed embarrassment in her greeting, scarcely touching my hand, speaking with a new constraint in a voice which grew colder as she hesitated.

"We were frightened; we are so glad that you were not badly hurt. I thought you might find it comfortable here—of course I could not know that you were not seriously injured."

"I think you did the most graciously unselfish thing a woman could do," I said, quickly. "You offered your best; and the man who took it cannot dare not express his gratitude."

"We brought you here because we thought it was good for you," she said, reverting to the theme that had at first embarrassed her. "We were perfectly certain that you have always been unfit to take care of yourself. Now we have the proofs."

I leaned on the back of the bench, resting my bandaged forehead on my hand.

"Are you suffering?" she asked. "Your face is white as my sleeve."

"I feel curiously tired," I said, smiling.

"Then you must have some tea, and I will brew it myself. You shall not object! No—it is useless, because I am determined."

The tea was hot and harmless; I lay thinking while she sat in the sunny window-corner, nibbling biscuit and marmalade, and watching me gravely.

"I suppose," said I, thinking aloud, "that I had better go to England."

"When?" she asked, without raising her head.

"In a day or two. I can find employment there, I think."

"What will you do?"

"Oh, the army—horses—something of that kind. Riding-master, perhaps—perhaps Scotland Yard. If I ever save enough money for the voyage, perhaps you would let me come, once in a while, to pay my respects, madame?"

"Yes, . . . come, if you wish."

She said no more, nor did I. Presently Sylvia appeared with a peasant woman, and the young countess went away, followed by the housekeeper with her keys at her girdle.

I rose and walked to the window; then, nerveless and depressed, I went out into the garden again to smoke a cigar.

The cat had disappeared. I traversed the garden, passed through the side wicket, and found myself on the cliffs. Almost immediately I was aware of a young girl, a child, seated on the rocks, her chin propped on her hands, the sea-wind blowing her curly elf-locks across her cheeks and eyes. A bundle tied in a handkerchief lay beside her; a cat dozed in her lap.

"Jacqueline!" I said, gently. "I thought you were to sail from Lorient today?"

The cat stepped purring from her knees; the child rose, pushing back her hair from her eyes with bold hands.

"Where is Speed?" she asked, drowsily.

"Did you want to see him, Jacqueline?"

"That is why I returned."

"And you are going to give up the circus forever, Jacqueline?"

"Yes."

"Just because you want to see Speed?"

"Only for that."

She stood rubbing her eyes with her small fists, as though just awakened.

"Come into the garden," I said; "we can talk while you rest."

The young countess was standing at the window as we approached in solemn single file along the path, and when she caught sight of us she opened the door and stepped out on the tiny porch.

"Why, this is our little Jacqueline," she said, quickly. "They have taken your father for the conscription, have they not, my child? And now you are homeless!"

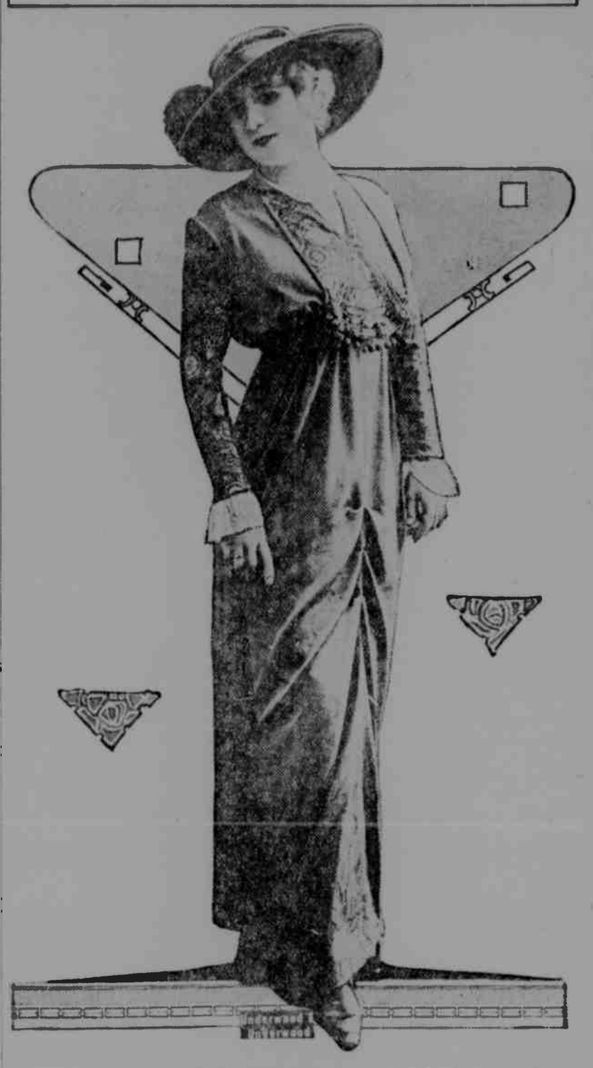
"I think so, madame."

"Then you will stay with me until he returns, won't you, little one?"

"We thank you, and permit ourselves to accept, madame," said Jacqueline. "We are very glad because we are quite hungry, and we have thorns from the gorse in our feet—" She broke off with a joyous little cry: "There is Speed!" And Speed, entering the garden hurriedly, stopped short in his tracks.

The child ran to him and threw both arms around his neck. "Oh, Speed! Speed!" she stammered, over and over again. "I was too lonely. I will do what you wish; I will be instructed in the graces of education truly I will. I am glad to come back and I am so tired, Speed. I will never go away from you again. . . . Oh, Speed, I am contented! . . . Do you love me?"

"Dearly, little sweetheart," he said huskily, trying to steady his voice. "There! Madame the countess is waiting. All will be well now." He turned, smiling, toward the young countess, and lifted his hat, then stepped back and fixed me with a blank look of dismay, which said perfectly plainly that he had unpleasant news to communicate. The countess, I think, saw that look, too, for she gave me an almost imperceptible nod and took Jacqueline's hand in hers.



"If there are thorns in your feet we must find them," she said, sweetly. "Will you come, Jacqueline?"

"Yes, madame," said the child, with an adoring smile at Speed, who bent and kissed her upturned face as she passed.

"Well," said I turning to Speed, "what new devilry is going on in Paradise now?"

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Stately and Graceful Gown

FROM the salon of a gifted designer in Paris comes this stately and graceful gown. It is worth much study as an exposition of present styles, without any departure from beautiful outlining of the figure and the best management of fashionable fabrics with brocaded surfaces. Any of the dark rich colors of the season—taupe, corbleu, paprika, wood and golden browns, sapphire blue.

The skirt is in two pieces, with the uppermost cut away from the knees downward in a "V" shape. It is draped with three small plaits to give it the fashionable slant, and posed over an under piece that is also caught up a little at the front. This under piece is not closed at the back, and by this arrangement the skirt, which seems to hang in so closely about the ankles, still gives room for easy walking.

There is no attempt at even hanging about the bottom of skirts these days. They are correctly draped when the uneven-hanging caused by drapery is allowed to speak for itself as a part of the play. There is a bodice of brocaded silk under a small coat of cloth like that in the skirt. It has a graceful neck round, with a narrow "V" cut out at the front. A fine net guimpe is worn under it, which is round at the neck. The long sleeves of this bodice are set in at the armeye, but not close fitting in the upper arm. A fine frill of point d'Esprit gives a perfect finish to the sleeves.

Providing the long shoulder, the small coat blouses over the belt line at the sides and back. It has a long narrow basque sloping away over the hips and falling almost to the knees. It is finished with a very wide and heavy fringe and is wonderfully effective.

Similar coats slope away to a panel at the back, finished at the ends with a broad band of fur or plush. This finish has proved more popular than the fringe.

A hat with some width of brim is fitting with a gown of so much character, and that is what was chosen. It has the small, soft crown, which almost effaces itself, and the simple trimming which characterizes the season. Two short full ostrich heads or a fancy ostrich ornament are curled over the brim in models of this kind, and the brim usually shows an indentation at one side.

The front of the under bodice is arranged to fall out over the waist line and is a novelty in arrangement that is noteworthy. Altogether this is an achievement in designing so good that it will outlive less beautiful models and look well for two seasons or more. The life of pretty gowns, most of them costing considerable time and some money, should not be so brief that the time spent in making them is not worth while.

JULIA BOTTOMLEY.

PEARLS THE ONE ORNAMENT FOR THE DEBUTANTE

JUST why pearls and girlhood are so associated in our minds is not yet fully explained. But we all recognize that pearls belong to the maid before she may wear other jewels with any degree of fitness. Except for pretty hair ornaments of ribbons and made flowers there is nothing that looks quite as "fit" on the young girl as pearls. The ornament shown here is made of two strands of pearl beads strung on a fine wire. They are strung in links, joined by large baroque pearl beads, placed between the links. The band extends across the top of the head and terminates a little below the top of the ears at each side. It is fastened to place with hair pins.

At the left side there are three loops of the pearls strung on wire and two hanging ends and a knot formed of pearl beads strung on heavy thread and set less close together than in the band, so that they fall easily.

The coiffure is very simple—even for a young girl. As in all the present designs, the ears are covered. The front hair is curled and fluffed about the face. The back hair is braided in loose strands and pinned flat to the head.

This hair dress is appropriate for brown haired or blond girls, but is not so pretty for the girl with very dark hair or for her who has the splendid "Titian" locks. Although very dark hair, and what is called red hair, are so unlike, the same styles of coiffure are suited to them both. They must do the hair in soft masses, insist upon its being glossy and refuse to consider fluffiness or anything approaching frizzes.

But no matter what the hue of her hair or eyes or skin—the maid may wear pearls. They look well and more than that on youthful heads of any color.

ABOUT THE HOLBEIN FIGURE

Women Must Accept the Unrestricted Natural Lines of the Body in New Clothes.

In connection with the discussion of the so-called corsetless figure, it may be noted that the lines of the natural, supple figure are more noticeable in the evening gowns than in the street togs. Women may refuse to adopt the Holbein figure for the street, but they will be forced to accept it in effect in the majority of the new evening frocks. The couturiers have been advising the boneless tricot corsets for the evening for several seasons, but this winter they have taken a more advanced step—they have forced them on their customers by designing frocks that give the effect of a lightly corseted figure. There are many ways of leading a woman in the way one would wish her to go, and few are unknown to the wily French couturier.

Chenille Flowers.

Chenille flowers are used for corsage bonquets now. They are made of strings of chenille, in heavy, soft quality, looped into petals, and mounted on green chenille stems, stiffened with wire. Brilliant but at the same time soft shades of red and blue and violet and green and yellow are used. These little flowers have a charm all their own, and are especialy effective worn on the dull, gloomy days for which November is famous.

Money may represent power, but the less money a man has the sooner a doctor will cure him.

GIVE THIS A LITTLE THOUGHT

There Is a Point to This Imported Joke, But Perhaps You Will Have To Look for It.

This is not an American joke. The reader is solemnly warned that it is of German extraction. Germans, as everybody knows, like their jests broad and brutal. The victim of this one was Cousin Hugo.

It seems Cousin Hugo made a night of it and got home as the small hours began to cease to be so small. As he climbed the stairs he stumbled (in spite of the most elaborate care) and rolled down into the hall below. The consequence, for Cousin Hugo is not so young as he used to be, was a broken collarbone and a strained back. Ahead even of the milkman, then, came the family doctor, an estimable old gentleman, and administered soothing words while he encased the patient in plaster.

"I know, my dear sir," he said, "that it hurts like the deuce but it is not a bit dangerous. All the same you'll have to stay in bed for a while. You got a nasty fall. How did it happen? Was it dark?"

"It was not, doctor," replied Cousin Hugo with some asperity. "It was light."

But perhaps you are not a beer drinker.—New York Evening Post.

Cunning in Art.

We have heard so much about graft and dishonesty and the "shame of our cities" that many of us firmly believe that ours is the wickedest of the nations of the earth. To destroy a myth is a thankless task, for people believe what they want to believe and are apt to resent any attempt to rob them of their pleasure and satisfaction in so doing. Nevertheless some of us are glad to learn from time to time that graft and cunning are not unknown in the older countries nor in the older of the noble families.

Some time ago an American millionaire coveted a noble painting by Raphael that hung in the gallery of a princely Italian home. The family refused to part with it, declaring that the government would not allow the priceless treasure to leave the country. But the millionaire determined to buy it, and then the owner offered to paint a snow scene over the canvas and ship it to New York, where it could be cleaned and restored. This was done, but the cleaners used turpentine, which removed not only the snow scene but the Raphael painting as well, and revealed a fine portrait of Marconi underneath.

Story of Hohenzollern Ghost.

It was a Prussian royal wedding of four centuries ago that gave to the tradition of the "white lady," the famous Hohenzollern ghost. The Burgrave Albert loved a young widow of the house of Oriamunde, but once thoughtlessly remarked that their wedding would be "impossible until four eyes are out of the way." He allured to his uncle and brother, but she thought he meant her two little children, whom she accordingly murdered with a knitting needle. The horrified Albert forsook her and married Sophia of Henneberg, whereupon the erring widow went mad, died and ever since has haunted the royal palaces in mourning garb with a white veil.

HUMORS OF THE CHINESE WAR

Foreigners Got Much Amusement Out of Doings of the Very Serious Native Soldiers.

Humor, of a grim sort, of course, abounded in the revolution which established a republic in China. Frederick McCormick, in "The Flowery Republic," tells of the formation of a corps in the north who gloried in the title, "Dare to Die." The rebels in Canton were not satisfied to adopt this term from their brothers, and delighting in the superlative and extreme, called themselves the "Determined to Die." The first were merely willing martyrs, but the Cantonese were desperate for death. A foreign wag dubbed them the "Much Wanchee Dies."

"Among the various military organizations that sprung up in Canton," says Mr. McCormick, "was a company of bomb throwers called the 'Tomb Pioneers.' Their uniform was a light blue foreign knitted underwear that fitted them as their own skins. They wore brown knitted socks supported by American garters. Over the underwear they wore shoulder braces from which were stretched across the breast white bands bearing the name of their organization. Their leaders wore blouses and caps and carried swords. In parades they sometimes carried arms full of bombs and were in danger of blowing whole streets to atoms. In public meetings on two occasions there were accidents in which numbers of people were killed and wounded."

Abolition of War.

On one occasion Mr. Mason came into Mr. Summer's office and found him engaged in writing an address to be delivered before a peace society. After a little good-natured banter on the part of Mr. Mason and an equally good-natured defense of his views by Mr. Summer, the former, rising to take his leave, said: "Well, Summer, you may be right, but I should just as soon think of [illegible] a society for the suppression of thunder and lightning as a society for the suppression of war."—From Memoir of Jeremiah Mason, by G. S. Hillard.

THE REPUBLICAN,
Oakland, Md.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1913.

WE will issue The Republican next week on Wednesday instead of on Christmas day. Advertisers will please take notice of this change of date and govern themselves accordingly.

EXPENDITURES of the Government for 1915 will exceed income by $73,681,777, according to an official statement by the appropriations committee of the House and Senate, based on Senator McAdoo's estimate.

THE Ohio State Grange at its meeting held last week at Lima and attended by 600 delegates, gave William Jennings Bryan a boost for the presidency m 1916 The suggestion was received with great enthusiasm.

SEND the Republican to your distant friends as a Christmas gift. It costs but $1.25 a year and the friend will be reminded of you 52 times a year when he or she reads the home news. It is published every Thursday.

THE American Red Cross Society has raised $300,000 to erect a memorial building in Washington, D. C., in honor of the women of the North and South in the civil war. Congress has already appropriated $400,000 to assist in providing for the building.

THE Democratic newspapers mention as among the possible Democratic candidates for governor of this State, the Hon. David J. Lewis, Congressman from this district. He would make a strong candidate. Mayor Preston of Baltimore, would like the nomination.

AT the Republican dinner at Cumberland last Thursday, Governor Goldsborough declared that he will not be a candidate for renomination for governor. He asked his friends to abide by this decision. He truly said that it is the paramount duty of the Republicans of Maryland to forget the past and to look to the future. He made the prophecy that a lease of power to exceed its record is in store for the Republican party.

THE Piedmont Independent and the Herald, each, issued sixteen page papers last week, which contained a large number of page, half page and quarter page advertisements. Both papers circulate in this county. Is it a wonder that Garrett county farmers go elsewhere than Oakland to do their shopping? Not to advertise is a losing business. To advertise is to prosper. When one of our town merchants was asked to give The Republican an advertisement for its Christmas issue, he replied, "Nothing doing." He told the truth, for the store room was about empty of customers. There is a reason it. John Wanamaker, the Philapelphia merchant who made a fortune by using newspapers, said "If I only conducted a peanut stand I would advertise."

THE merchants of Garrett county deserve the liberal patronage of the citizens of the county because of the effort they have made to provide reasonable goods for the holiday trade. As we have looked over the splendid line of goods on sale at a number of stores, we feel proud of our home merchants for the liberal provision they have made for the Yule season. We bespeak for them your most liberal patronage. Be loyal to your home town. Stand by the men who stand by you, and who stand by your town. Consult the advertisements of the Republican and patronize the men who help us make the Republican a paper for the home and friend.

WITH considerable satisfaction The Republican calls attention to the extent and variety of the advertising announcements that have appeared and are appearing in its advertising columns this holiday season. The growth of The Republican in advertising patronage is a gratifying evidence of the public appreciation of a high class medieum.

Each week The Republican reaches more Garrett county people who want to buy goods and are able to buy goods than any other newspaper in Western Maryland.

Each week it carries the announcements of the enterprising merchants in Oakland over the widest territory and to the largest number of buyers.

The Republican advertising appeals particularly to the iftelligent advertisers who watched results and study conditions. The Republican seeks no patronage for any other reason than merit. It sells the goods and brings the dealer into closest touch with the best customers and that is why it pays. The careful advertiser who watches returns is a Republican advertiser.

BE A BOOSTER, not a knocker. Subscribe for your home paper, the Republican.

That Considerate Bunch!

A Temperance Talk to Voters

BY

JASON KEP

Some people give as their excuse for not being in favor of closing the saloons, "that it is unfair to destroy the liquor business without paying the liquor men for the depreciation of their property; that they have millions of dollars invested and you cannot take a man's property, without reimbursing him for his loss.' Is that your excuse?

I see—If your son or father is becoming a drunkard, you have no right to notify the saloon keeper to not sell your son or father any more booze without paying the saloon keeper for the depreciation of his property, caused by the loss of your son's or father's trade. I havn't seen it in that light before.

You know that closing the saloons by a vote of the people, is notifying them that they must not make drunkards of our sons or fathers.

It is merely co-operation, doing by wholesale what we tried and failed to do individually.

Law is an agreement of the people, that certain rules shall govern their conduct; this is for the protection of all. Why is reason so warped on this one question?

You know that license is only granted for one year, no longer. You know that it can be, and is liable to be refused at any time. Knowing this, why did they invest so much money in such a dangerous line of business? Because of the enormous profits, that is why.

Safe blowers have been known to declare even larger dividends with less money invested in machinery, and also causing fewer deaths.

You don't seem to complam of putting them out of business without ruimbursing them for their losses.

It is refreshing to see how considerate that bunch of sympathizers are. But why in blazes have they been so slow in developing that sympathetic streak? Or why so blamed exclusive in their consideration?

Why not considerate of the money taken by these people, from the poor slaves of the appetite or of the wives and children of these poor slaves robbed of comforts and happiness? Why not considerate of the poor ragged half-starved little orphans, robbed of their fathers and the necessities of life?

Why not considerate of the mothers, robbed of their darling boys and girls, led down by them and sent to God only knows where? Why not considerate of the murdered wives? Oh you considerate, sympathetic bunch "you strain at a gnat and swallow a camel." You know it is the only business which will cause a father to sell his baby's shoes. You know they are sending 152,000 poor souls to drunkards graves each year, in the United States and recruiting over 152,000 of our boys and girls to fill the ranks. Have you any any boys or girls to spare.

You see around you want and misery, women and children suffering not only humiliation and privation, but sorrow, misery, and dispair for a father, son, brother or husband drifting into that terrible whirlpool, which gives up its victim only when dead.

It is a bad state of affairs we all admit. But just think of what the 35,000,000 church members of the United States could do, if they went out and worked and voted for dry, for their homes and children and for the God whom they profess to serve. What have they been doing? Why a great percentage of them have been going to church on Sunday and praying "Oh Lord deliver us from this curse of intemperance" and then going out and voting wet. That is why the liquor people who represent less than 5 per cent, of the population have elected 70 per cent. of their candidates.

Is it any wonder that so many find the wires down when they try to get into communication with Heaven.

If you want your prayers to rise higher than the ceiling you must work and vote as you pray.

What West Virginia did you can do. Try it.

Cumberland's Congratulations.

Last night's banquet at the Queen City Hotel was a credit to Andrew Ramsay, the host; to Governor Goldsborough, the honored guest, but more than that it was a credit to the Republicans of Allegany county and the remainder of the State. If, as some of the speakers said, more such functions can be arranged the Republican party of Maryland will be stronger than ever. As far as party principles are concerned, there may be differences, but one who would speak the truth cannot say anything other than that the keynote of each address was progressive legislation. Speaking entirely from a non-political standpoint, the banquet was one that would be welcomed by any city, and Cumberland has only congratulations to offer.—Cumberland Times (Democrat)

Jump in Auto Licenses.

Automobile Commissioner Rae is busy now with the license tags to be issued shortly. Quantities of these arrived yesterday from the factory, and were stored. It is estimated that there will be an increase of 5,000 in the number of licenses, that many more automobiles having been placed in commission in this state. This is a jump of fifty per cent. and represents an increase o from $135,000 to $185,000 in receipts. Whether all will be taken early in January depends upon the weather. If the winter this year is an open one as in 1912, the licenses will be called for early, otherwise applicants may postpone payment until later in the season.

Will Practice Undertaking.

Clarence C. Miller who recently had sale and gave up his farm about two miles south of Grantsville, has completed a course in undertaking and will follow that business exclusively in the future. He used to be the undertaker of the Grantsville district, but will now locate elsewhere to practice his vocation. His family are remaining at Grantsville for the presrnt.—Meyersdale Republican.

Special Christmas Service.

A most cordial invitation is extended to every one to attend the Christmas service at Saint Matthew's Episcopal church. The children's carol service will be held at 5 o'clock Christmas eve. The regular Christmas service with special music on Christmas day at eleven o'clock. It is earnestly hoped that all who may find it convenient will join with us in a hearty Christmas service.

WM. W. SHEARER,
Minister in charge.

AVILTON.

Mr. P. J. Stephens is visiting his daughter, Mrs. Thomas Miller, of Frostburg.

Mr. Clayton Michael, of Westernport, and Miss Helen Strickland, of Lonaconing, were guests at Mr. O. S. Fike's Sunday.

Mrs. J. T. Robinson is slowly improving after an illness of several weeks.

Lewis Broadwater and Jesse Merrill captured a fine mink last Tuesday.

Miss Ethel Bittinger, of Akron, Ohio, is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Bittinger.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Turner returned last night from a visit to Mr. Turner's old home at Johnstown, Pa.

Mr. and Mrs. Alex. Bartley have moved to Lonaconing, where Mr. Bartley has taken work in the mines.

IN THE SPIRIT WORLD.

The Frostburg Spirit is Responsible For The Following.

It has leaked out (likely through some female spook) that an old-fashioned Garrett county woman who recently blew into the land of shades, created quite an excitement there. At any rate the following story is vouched for by a Frostburg woman who knows all the spooks, is good at pow-wowing, who can stop blood by saying words, and can also blow all the "fire" out of people who have been badly burned. The story therefore, is reliable, and runs like this:

"What caused your sudden blowing in?" asked a veteran of Shade Land of a woman who had just arrived. The woman gave a sigh that blew over a tombstone as she replied: "I am an old-fashioned woman, from Garrett county, Md., and I did my work in a kitchen with a six-hole range, a big sink, three long tables, two pantries and a dishpan large enough to wash a turkey in. Two days ago I went to visit my daughter in Baltimore and found her cooking for her family in a chafing dish, doing her dishes in a washbowl and keeping them stored in the lower part of the washstand. When I saw her get the bread out of a big bowl on the piano, called a jardiniere and reach for the butter out of the window, I felt a chill come over me, and when she 'made soup' by opening a tin can and pouriug out a mess to which she added water from the wash pitcher, I knew no more." Then the old-fashioned woman gave such a sniff of disgust that it blew all the shades over into the next county.

Ford cars now in stock; come in and have a look. JAMES P. TREACY.

Oakland High School Notes.

On Monday Dec. 8, Prof. Bender gave us a talk on Tuberculosis. He also read from a pamphlet illustrating that Tuberculosis is a communicable, preventable and curable disease.

We were favored by the presence of the County Superintendent, Prof. F. E. Rathbun, on Friday, last. He was with us all day and gave us a most encouraging talk at our exercises. He told us how we may learn to do by doing, and palmed off some interesting tricks.

The Junior and Senior Domestic Science girls will entertain the high school and faculty, Friday evening, Dec. 19. Beautiful little folders, containing invitations, made by the girls themselves, were sent to the students and faculty.

We have arranged a literary program to be rendered the last day of school before Christmas, Dec. 19, 2 p. m. The program contains selections appropriate to the season of the year.

The program is as follows:

Song, "Xmas Banners Waving," Society; Roll Call; Song, "Morning Praise," Society; Inaugural Address, President Elect; Piano Solo, "Traumerei," Rosa Isenberg; Reading, "Small Boy in a Dime Museum," Mildred Thrasher; Vocal Solo, "Anchor Weighed," Felix Robinson, Impromptu Speeches, 3 members of Society; Vocal Solo, "China Tragedy," Norine Taggart, Talk, "Xmas Customs," Miss Smith. Vocal Solo, "A Perfect Day," Prof. Bender; Wit and Humor, Edward Lewis; Song "Angels' Song," Society; Recitation, "A Liztown Humorist, Robert White; German Song, "Die Hielige Nacht," German Classes; Critic's Report, Miss Arnold; Song "Silver Star," Society. Everybody welcome.

SEALS INSTEAD OF SLED.

A little boy in Houston, Tex., has been so thoroughly imbued with the meaning and significance of the Red Cross Seal Campaign that he angounced his intention Saturday of foregoing all the pleasures he expected to gain from a new cart, which he intended to purchase with the nickels he has been saving, and of buying $2 worth of Red Cross Seals instead. He says he believes he would rather buy Red Cross Seals, and in that way help some one enjoy Christmas who has been having sorrow in his home during the year.

Mercer County Hospitality.

That the lot of the Grantsville people who have moved to Mercer county has fallen in plesant places is proven by a recent letter from Mr. Ringer to one of his friends here, saying that upon the arrival of their cars of household goods and livestock, there were eighteen teams awaiting them, with the owners willing and anxious to help move the new-comers into their new homes. No charge was made for this work, which of a necessity took up considerable time, with such whole-souled hospitality among their neighbors, there can be little doubt that the Grantsville people will he happy in their new surroundings.—Meyersdale Republican.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

Ham Replies To Mr. Giles.

To the Editor of The Republican.

Now comes a Mr. Giles, of North Carolina, offering to "blow in" some of his surplus cash for proof of "any immorality on the part of Mr. Russell." Has he any regard for testimony of a court where evidence was produced showing gross improprieties of the man, and evidence sufficient to justify the court in granting his wife a divorce. Of course he would not accept the account as given in Mr. Ross' little book. I would suggest that he get it and read and ponder it. It will take only ten cents of his $1,000. Who are a few of his "many and great men" who claim Mr. Russell is the greatest Bible expostor on the earth? The rank and file of the great scholars and expositors of the Word are unalterably opposed to his hotch potch exposition, and there are no Biblical scholars of a national reputation, nor expositors who have any recognized rank among Biblical scholars who can or will accept his theories, which are supported by juggling of scripture and fanciful interpretation which all acknowledged scholarship brand as unworthy to be credited. It would be interesting to know Mr. Giles' great men.

His offer of cash premiums is simply a bluff to catch ignorant and simple minded persons. Granted that there is no text which says in so many words that the soul is immortal. Neither is there any which says woman must observe the Lord's supper. Would he argue that they are not to do this?

If the soul is not immortal it must be mortal. It it is mortal then, like body, it dies and death according to the teaching of Mr. Yates and his cult has but one meaning, viz, ceasing to exist, becoming extinct, therefore annihilated. Yet, with absolute assurance, they talk about resurrection. How can a thing that is extinct or annihilated be resurrected? He evidently fails to see any distinction between resurrection and a new creation. The universal feeling that man is something else than a nothing animated by another gives rise to the confidence that death does not close man's existence.

Cicero, who lived before Christ, said, "There is, I know not how, in the minds of men of cetain presage, as it were, of a future existence, and this takes the deepest root, and is more discoverable, in the greatest geniuses and most exalted souls." He voiced the feelings of his age. It may be said that immortaliiy of the soul is not taught philosophically by Jesus any more than the existence of the God.

Jesus assumes this as He assumes the existence of God, hence does not attempt to prove it. Why should he? Will Mr. Giles explain why savages of every country and age have an unquestioned faith in immortality?

Go into the jungles of Africa and the savages will not argue the immortality of the soul. They say "The dead do not really die." It is not a doctrine but an instinct. It may be diversified and grotesque in its many manifestations, but it is a notorious instinct, surer indeed than the instinct of the bird that is never deceived in its migrations.

Darwin admits this instinct of immortality among degraded races of men. Sees it as a mighty moulding law revealing creation; sees it unmeaningly causing the swallow to shoot south for the sure sunshine and the flowers. Yet by a strange inconsistency drives it to the mighty soul of man. "The thirst for the Infinite proves the Infinite."

Emerson well said, "I hold that God who kept his word with the birds and the fishes in all their migratory instincts will keep his word with man." "Jesus Christ brought life and immortality to light the gospel."

Paul in Rom. 2: 7. Seek for glory, immortality. Immortality of the soul known by the light of nature. Believed by the heathen. Reasoned out by philosophers. Assumed in the Old Testament. The hope of Patriarchs. Gen. 15: 15; 35: 8; Job 19: 25-27. The soul goes to be with Christ at death. Paul says, "absent from the body present with the Lord." Acts 7: 59; Phil. 1: 23.

I have already shown, in a previous article, that there is no probation after death or second chance for those who in this life have rejected the offers of salvation through Christ and need not take up your space now. In the milennium there will be an opportunity for salvation for those living then, but not for those who reject the gospel in this age.

What if the word "Trinity" is not found in a Bible text. That proves nothing. If Mr. G. will open his mind to the plain and clear teaching of the Bible, he will find that the doctrine is taught in the Bible and that without doubt.

It seems to me he is reduced to severe straights when he has to resort to such a nonsensical and childish bluff to try to bolster up his tottering ism. If he will wait until Oct., 1914, he will find out about the correctness of Mr. Russell's Bible chronology.

Mr. Yates, too, evidently needs to take a course or two in Bible study and interpretation. How were people saved before the first advent of Christ? How will they be saved after the second advent or during the milennium? It is well to give heed to the study of God's Word and not the creeds of the dark ages. The inference here is that he and his cult are studying the Bible while all the rest are studying the creeds of the dark ages. True he says that none will get a second chance. "A chance is now being afforded the church." Then according to that unheard of interpretation, all who hear the gospel now, belong to the church, for the church only has the chance, therefore all who hear are of the church. Does he not know any better? The church is composed only of those who have received Christ's offer and are united to Him by faith. All others have rejected the offer of salvation here in this life, how are these to have a "chance to believe and attain perfect life" in the Millennium? He would give every individual of the world, blasphemers, rejectors of Jesus, despisers of his gospel in this age, all are to have a chance in the Millennium according to Mr. Yates, yet, he says there will be no second chance. it is only a second salvation. What did they do with the first salvation and what became of it? Scripture knows nothing of a second chance or second salvation for rejectors of salvation by Jesus in this life. "Now is the day of salvation."

Of course in the Milinnium there will be salvation for all who are then living but not for the dead of the past. Righteousnes will be universal, Christ shall reign from pole to pole. Yours, Ham.

A Wonderful Change Of Heart.

The Sentinel, Westminester says: An exhibition of one of the most remarkable changes of heart and purpose on record was given at the recent great National Anti-Saloon League convention at Columbus, Ohio. The subject of this change was Ex-Governor Patterson, of Tennessee, who, while executive of that State, was one of the most determined opponents of Prohibition and a bitter enemy of the leading temperance advocate of the State, Ex-U. S. Senator Carmack. Mr. Carmack fell a victim of his zeal and was slain by young Cooper, whose father was found guilty as an accessory to the murder and was promptly pardoned by Patterson. As is generally known, the present Governor of Tennessee is a Republican, elected by a combination of temperance Democrats and Republicans. He has forced legislation that has made Tennessee substantially dry and now Ex-Governor Patterson rises to give his adhesion to the cause, with all his power, and he is a busy man and a forceful speaker. Concerning his own experience he said, at the Columbus convention:

"I have seen the trail of liquor in the criminal courts where I have prosecuted crime. I know and have been a participant in its paralyzing and corroding influences in the social and public life of our national capital. As the governor of Tennessee, I have seen it a veritable and raging center of storm around which gathered its defenders and assailants, and from which sprang divisions in parties, disputes in families and dissentions in churches.

"Going through life, I have seen it drag down many of the associates of my boyhood, blasting their hopes and consigning them to untimely graves. I have seen its forked lightning strike my firstborn—the child of my young manhood, and I have borne with him the suffering and tried to help him in his brave but sometimes melancholy struggle for redemption. At last I have felt its foul and stealthy blow as it turned upon me in its deadly and shaming wrath—upon me, who has pleaded before the people for its very existence. Men have called me strong; and while I could see its harm in others I thought myself immune, as thousands before my time have thought and suffered for the thought.

"All this I knew and felt without a revelation of the deep pathos and meaning of it all. I needed help, for I was groping and my feet were stumbling in the dark. Deep in humiliation, tortured and condemned in my own esteem, which is the severest penalty a man may inflict upon himself, I thought of the oft-repeated phrases about personal liberty, of the power of the human will to resist temptation, with which I had beguiled myself, and I found them as unsubstantial as the fabric of a dream.

"When logic tailed and reason gave no answer, I cast aside all pride of opinion, all thought of what the world might say or think, and went to the throne of Almighty God. There on bended knees, I asked for light and strength, and they came. The curtains of the night parted, and the way was clear. I arose a changed man. An invisible hand has led me on to where the vision is unobscured, and the purposes of life stand revealed. From a critic of others, I looked within. From an accuser, I became a servent in my own house to set it in order. From a vague believer in the guidance of Divine power, I have become a convert of its infinite truth. From an unhappy and dissatisfied man—out of tune with the harmony of life and religion, I have become happy and content, firmly anchored in faith, and ready to testify from my own experience to the miraculous power of God to cleanse the souls of men.

"Out of this has come the profound conviction that on the question with which I had to deal in my public career all my arguments and all my conclusions so far as they excused or justified the moral right or policy of the state to legalize the sale of liquor, and thereby give sanction to its ravages on society, were only the empty hopeless statements on application to a thing wholly and essentially evil, and concerning which no principle of right or order or liberty should ever be evoked for its existence.

"I favor Prohibition in any form that will either reduce or destroy the liquor traffic. I favor it personal-wide town-wide, nation-wide and world-wide."

CONSIDER THE FIELD LILIES

Deep Meaning of Great Teacher's Parabolic Discourses.

Lessons From the Sparrows—Lessons From the Lilies—Lessons of Divine Providential Care—Lessons For the World—Lessons For the Church. Lessons in Patience—Lessons In Hope—Lessons In Contentment.

New York, Dec. 14.—Pastor Russell spoke in The Temple today, from the text, "And why take ye thought for raiment? Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin: and yet I say unto you, that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. Wherefore, if God so clothe the grass of the field, which today is, and tomorrow is cast into the oven [as fuel], shall He not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?"—Matthew 6:28-30.

Opening his discourse, the Pastor reminded his audience that the Great Teacher taught in parables and dark sayings—not easily comprehended. Even His disciples did not understand many of His statements until enlightened by the Holy Spirit at Pentecost. We are not surprised, said he, that many have misapprehended the Master's dark sayings respecting the cutting off of hand or foot, the plucking out of an eye, undying worms, quenchless fires, and even our text.

There are people today who interpret the Master to mean that His followers are not to labor as do the remainder of mankind for the necessities of life, but are to be maintained by tithes, collections, etc. The Pastor believes that such make a great mistake, as did the man recently reported in the press as having cut off his hand in what he thought was obedience to the Master's instruction. We should avoid such errors of judgment, and seek to have the spirit of the Master's teaching—the spirit of a sound mind

A Crucial Test.

Applying his text, the Pastor declared that if we have the faith to believe that God through Christ has accepted us as His children, we should as children trust our Parent in all the affairs of life—great and small. But here is the crucial test. Are we God's children? Has He begotten us of the Holy Spirit? Are our sins forgiven? Are we reconciled to God through the death of His Son?

Upon the affirmative answers to these questions is the strength of the basis of our hope and faith. If we are not God's children, if He has not received us through Christ, then we are still aliens and strangers. Then our affairs are not under His supervision, but we are with the world sharers in the death sentence, each doing for himself according to his ability in battling against death, and like all Gentiles giving chief concern to food, raiment and earthly ambitions—appreciating not the higher privileges in Christ.

The Heart of the Lesson.

The Pastor then demonstrated that the lesson is not directly for the world in general. Those desirous of having God's providential care should come into relationship with the Heavenly Father through Christ, in order to enjoy privileges and favors which now belong to none others.

The heart of the lesson is that the Heavenly Father is most gracious, and that His tender mercies are over all in harmony with Him. The Church is relolelngly to work by faith, with full confidence in Him who has opened up the new way of life through Jesus and has granted them the precious relationship of children.

These children of God need not feel harassed respecting life's experiences their Heavenly Father knows their needs better than they do, and is both able and willing to give them what is best. Gradually they will learn that chastisements in the present life under Divine providence may be made to work out for them "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory" on the Heavenly plane, to which they have been begotten.

Learning Lessons of Faith.

The Pastor then called attention to the context. Jesus pointed out that although the birds have neither barns nor storehouses, yet God provides for them, even as also for the lilies. Surely He is no less willing and able to provide for those who have become His children through Christ—those for whom He gave His only begotten Son.

The Master spoke of the beauty of the lily. Solomon in all his glory had no such seamless robe, no such perfect texture for his raiment. Perhaps the Master had a deeper thought than appears on the surface. While He assuredly meant that we are to trust Heavenly provision for natural clothing He may have meant also our clothing as New Creatures—the spotless, seamless robe of righteousness, granted as a wedding garment, in which we have access to the riches of God's grace.

Let us prize above all else this robe of our Redeemer's merit. This is indeed a free gift. We could not purchase it, even as the lily toils not and spins not for its beautiful robe.

Was It Worth While?

"You would have laughed to see the fellows look at me when I went back to work after being away five months," said a rugged and healthy looking boy after his first day back in the factory. Undersized, a victim of tuberculosis, pinched and thin, with a bloodless skin, and apparently half-dead when he quit work, there was little wonder that few knew him when he reappeared 23½ pounds heavier and some inches taller, with a healthy color in his face. During his absence he had been at the tuberculosis sanatorim. The company paid half of his expenses and Red Cross Seals has provided for the rest. Was it worth while?

THE CRUCIFIXION: The Story of Calvary

By LEONID ANDREYEV

THE moon had risen already when Jesus prepared to go to the Mount of Olives, where he had spent all his last nights. But he tarried, for some inexplicable reason, and the disciples, ready to start, were hurrying him then he said suddenly:

"He that hath a purse, let him take it, and likewise his script; and he that hath no sword, let him sell his garment and buy one. For I say unto you that this that is written must yet be accomplished in me And he was reckoned among the transgressors."

The disciples were surprised and looked at one another in confusion. Peter replies:

"Lord, we have two swords here."

He looked searchingly into their kind faces, lowered his head, and said softly:

"It is enough."

The steps of the disciples resounded loudly in the narrow streets, and the disciples were frightened by the sounds of their own footsteps; on the white wall, illumined by the moon, their black shadows appeared—and they were frightened by their own shadows. Thus they passed in silence through Jerusalem, which was absorbed in sleep, and now they came out of the gates of the city, and in the valley, full of fantastic, motionless shadows, the stream of Kedron appeared before them. Now they were frightened by everything. From time to time they looked back at Jerusalem, all white in the moonlight, and they spoke to one another about the fear that had passed; and those who walked in the rear heard, in fragments the soft words of Jesus. He spoke about their forsaking him.

* * * * * * * * * * *

In the garden they paused soon after they had entered it. The majority of them remained there, and, speaking softly, began to make ready for their sleep, outspreading their cloaks over the transparent embroidery of the shadows and the moonlight. Jesus, tormented with uneasiness, and four of his disciples went further into the depth of the garden. There they seated themselves on the ground, which had not yet cooled off from the heat of the day, and while Jesus was silent, Peter and John lazily exchanged words almost devoid of any meaning. Suddenly Jesus rose quickly.

"My soul, is exceedingly sorrowful, even unto death; tarry ye here and watch with me," he said and departed hastily to the grove and soon disappeared amid its motionless shades and light

"Where did he go?" said John, lifting himself on his elbow. Peter turned his head in the direction of Jesus and answered fatiguedly:

"I do not know."

And he yawned again loudly, then threw himself on his back and became silent. The others also became silent, and their motionless bodies were soon absorbed into the sound sleep of fatigue. Through his heavy slumber Peter saw vaguely something white bending over, some one's voice resounded and died away, leaving no trace in his dimmed consciousness

"Simon, are you sleeping?"

And he slept again, and again some soft voice reached his ear and died away without leaving any trace.

"You could not watch with me even one hour?"

"Oh, Master! if you only knew how sleepy I am," he thought in his slumber, but it seemed to him that he said it aloud. And he slept again And a long time seemed to have passed, when suddenly the figure of Jesus appeared near him, and a loud, rousing voice instantly awakened him and the others:

"You are still sleeping and resting? It is ended the hour has come—the Son of Man is betrayed into the hands of the sinners

* * * * * * * * * * *

The disciples quickly sprang to their feet, confusedly seizing their cloaks and trembling from the cold of the sudden awakening. Through the thicket of the trees a multitude of warriors and temple servants was seen approaching, noisily, illuminating their way with torches. And from the other side the disciples came running, quivering with cold, their sleepy faces frightened; and not yet understanding what was going on, they asked hastily:

"What is it? Who are these people with torches?"

Thomas, pale faced, his mustaches in disorder, his teeth chattering from chilliness, said to Peter

"They have evidently come after us."

Now a multitude of warriors surrounded them, and the smoky, quivering light of the torches drove away somewhere the soft light of the moon In front of the warriors walked quickly Judas Iscariot, and sharply turning his quick eye, he was searching for Jesus. He found him, rested for an instant his look upon his tall, slender figure, and quickly whispered to the priests:

"Whomsoever I shall kiss, that same is he Take him and lead him cautiously. Lead him cautiously, do you hear?"

Then he quickly moved to Jesus, who waited for him in silence, and he directed his straight, sharp look, like a knife, into his calm, darkened eyes.

"Hail, Master!" he said loudly, charging his words or usual greeting with a strange and stern meaning.

But Jesus was silent, and the disciples looked at the traitor with horror, not understanding how the soul of a man could contain so much evil. Iscariot threw a rapid glance at their confused ranks, noticed their quiver, which was about to turn into a loud, trembling fear, noticed their pallor, their senseless smiles, the drowsy movements of their hands, which seemed as though fettered in iron at the shoulders—and a mortal sorrow began to burn in his heart, akin to the sorrow Christ had experienced before. Outstretching himself into a hundred ringing, sobbing strings, he rushed over to Jesus and kissed his cold cheek tenderly. He kissed it so softly, so tenderly, with such painful love and sorrow, that if Jesus had been a flower upon a thin stalk he would not have shaken from this kiss and would not have dropped the pearly dew from his pure petals.

"Judas," said Jesus, and with the lightning of his look he illumined that monstrous heap of shadows which was Iscariot's soul, but he could not penetrate into the bottomless depth. "Judas! Is it with a kiss you betray the Son of Man?"

And he saw how that monstrous chaos trembled and stirred. Speechless and stern, like death in its haughty majesty, stood Judas Iscariot, and within him a thousand impetuous and fiery voices groaned and roared

"Yes! We betray thee with the kiss of love! With the kiss of love we betray thee to outrage, to torture, to death! With the voice of love we call together the hangmen from their dark holes, and we place a cross and high over the top of the earth we lift lover, crusified by love upon a cross."

Thus stood Judas, silent and cold, like death, and the shouting and the noise about Jesus answered the cry of his soul. With the rude irresoluteness of armed force, with the awkwardness of a vaguely understood purpose, the soldiers seized him and dragged him somewhere—their irresoluteness they mistook for resistance, their fear they mistook for derision and mockery over them. Like a herd of frightened lambs the disciples stood huddled together, not interfering with anything, yet disturbing everybody and even themselves. Only a few of them resolved to walk and act separately. Jostled from all sides, Peter drew out the sword from its sheath with difficulty, as though he had lost his strength, and faintly lowered it upon the head of one of the priests without causing him any harm. Jesus, who 'no ticed it, ordered him to throw down the unnecessary sword, and clanking faintly, the sword fell to the ground

Thus it remained there, until many days later children at play found it and made a toy of it

* * * * * * * * * * *

When Jesus was led away Peter, who had hidden himself behind the trees, came out and followed his Master in the distance. Noticing another man in front of him, who walked silently, he thought that it was John, and he called him softly:

"John, is that you?"

"And is that you, Peter?" answered the other, pausing, and by the voice Peter recognized the Traitor. "Peter, why did you not run away together with the others?"

Peter stopped and said with contempt:

"Leave me, Satan!"

Judas began to laugh, and paying no further attention to Peter, he went farther, there where the torches were flashing dimly and where the clanking of the weapons mingled with the footsteps Peter followed him cautiously, and thus they entered the court of the high priest almost simultaneously and mingled in the crowd of the priests who were warming themselves at the bonfires. Judas warmed his bony hands morosely at the bonfire and heard how Peter said loudly somewhere behind him:

"No, I do not know him."

But it was evident that they were insisting there that he was one of the disciples of Jesus, for Peter repeated still louder, "But I do not understand what you are saying"

Without turning around, and smiling involuntarily, Judas shook his head affirmatively and muttered:

"That's right, Peter! Do not give up your place near Jesus to anybody."

And he did not see how the frightened Peter walked away from the courtyard. And from that night until the very death of Jesus Judas did not see a single one of the disciples of Jesus near him, and amid all that multitude there were only two, inseparable until death, strangely bound together by sufferings—he who had been betrayed to abuse and torture and he who had betrayed him. Like brother, they both, the betrayed and the traitor, drank out of the same cup of sufferings, and the fiery liquid burnt equally the pure and the impure lips

He saw how the soldiers led Jesus away. Night was passing, the bonfires were dying out and were becoming covered with ashes, and from the sentry house came dull cries, laughter and abuses. They were beating Jesus As though lost, Iscariot was running around the deserted yard, now stopping, lifting his head and then starting to run again, stumbling upon the bonfires and the walls. Then he clung to the wall of the sentry house, and, stretching himself, clung to the windows, to the crevices in the doors, and looked greedily to see what was going on within. He saw a narrow, stifling room, like all the sentry houses in the world, with filthy floors and walls. And he saw a man being beaten They beat him on the face, on the head, they hurled him like a soft bale from one corner of the room to the other; and as he did not cry out and did not resist, it seemed at times that it was not a live man, but a soft doll with bones and without blood.

. . . And suddenly all became silent.

"What is this? Why are they silent? Have they guessed suddenly?"

In an instant Judas' head was filled with the roar and shout of thousands of infuriated thoughts. Have they guessed? Do they understand now that he is the very best of men? It is so simple, so clear. What are they doing there now? They kneel before him and weep softly, kissing his feet. Now he will come out here, and they will follow him meekly, crawling after him, here—to Judas—he will come out victorious, a Man, a Master of Truth, a God. . .

"Who is deceiving Judas? Who is right?"

But no. The noise and the shouting were resumed. They were beating him again. They did not guess, they did not understand, and they beat him more harshly, more painfully. And the bonfires were burning to the end, covered with ashes, and the smoke was just as transparently blue as the air, and the sky just as bright as the moon. Day was setting in.

"What is day?" asked Judas.

Now everything became bright, began to flash, grow young and the smoke was no longer blue but pink. The sun was rising.

"What is the sun?" asked Judas.

. . . When the hammer was raised to nail the left hand of Jesus to the wood, Judas closed his eyes—he did not breathe, he did not see anything, he did not live—he only listened. Then the iron struck the iron with a thud, and then followed dull, short, low blows—he heard how the sharp nail was entering the soft wood.

One hand. It was not too late yet.

The other hand. It was still not too late yet

One foot, the other foot—Is it possible that all was ended? He opened his eyes irresolutely and saw how the cross was lifted and placed in a hole. He how how the hands of Jesus contracted convulsively, and how they relaxed painfully, and how the wounds were growing larger.

The hands were stretching, stretching, they became thin, white, dislocated at the shoulders, and the wounds under the nails turned redder—it seemed as though the hands would tear soon

But everything stopped Only ribs were moving, lifted by quick, deep breathing

On the top of the earth stood the cross, and upon it Jesus, crucified. . .

The horror and the dreams of Iscariot had been realized—he rose and looked about him with a cold glance And suddenly Iscariot saw as clearly as his terrible victory, also its ominous uncertainty. What if the people should suddenly understand? It was not too late as yet. Jesus was still alive. There he was calling with his sorrowful eyes. . .

What was it that prevented the thin covering obstructing the eyes of the people from bursting? And suddenly they would understand. Suddenly they would all move forward, in a stern mass of men, women and children—silently, without any outcries, and they would wipe out the soldiers, sink them in their own blood, tear out of the earth the accursed cross, and the hands of those who would remain among the living would lift high over the crown of the earth the free Jesus! Hosannah! Hosannah!

* * * * * * * * * * *

Hosannah? No, Judas would rather lie down on the ground and gnashing his teeth like a dog, he would watch and wait until the people would rise. But what has happened with Time? Now it almost stopped, so that he felt like pushing it with his hands, striking it with his feet, as a lazy ass; now it rushed madly as though from a mountain, taking his breath away, and his hands sought some support in vain There Mary of Magdala was crying. There the mother of Jesus was crying Let her cry. What mattered her tears now, the tears of all mothers, of all women on earth!

Jesus was dying. Is it possible? Yes, Jesus was dying. His pale hands were motionless, but quick convulsions ran over his face, his chest and his feet. Yes, he was dying. His breathing grew fainter. Then it stopped No, there came another sigh—Jesus was still on earth. And then another one? No. No. No. Jesus died

It was all over. Hosannah! Hosannah!

Judas stopped and surveyed with cold eyes the new, small earth. It had become small, and he felt as though it was all under his feet; he looked at the small mountains, quietly reddening in the last rays of the sun, and he felt the mountains were under his feet; he looked at the sky, which opened its blue mouth wide; he looked at the round little sun, which was vainly trying to scorch and to blind—and he felt the sky and the sun under his feet. . .

Judas had long selected a place where he would kill himself after the death of Jesus. It was on a mountain, high above Jerusalem, and there stood only one tree, bent, half decayed and tossed by the wind, which tore it on all sides. One of its crooked branches was outstretched toward Jerusalem, as if blessing or threatening it, and Judas chose that branch for fastening the noose upon it . . . Within two days Jesus of Nazareth and Judas Iscariot, the Traitor, left the earth

* * * * * * * * * * *

All night Judas was dangling upon the tree like some monstrous fruit over Jerusalem, and the wind turned his face now toward the city, now toward the desert, as though it wanted to show Judas both to the city and to the desert. . . .

DOMESTIC ECONOMY.

CHEERINESS is a thing to be more profoundly grateful for than all that genius ever inspired or talent ever accomplished. Next best to natural, spontaneous cheeriness, is deliberate, intended and persistent cheerfulness, which we create, can cultivate and can so foster and cherish that after a few years the world will never suspect that it was not an hereditary gift.

—Helen H. Jackson.

SOME GOOD DISHES.

A banana brown betty prepared as one does the chopped apple, using banana instead. Put a layer of buttered crumbs in the bottom of a baking dish, cover with a layer of sliced bananas; repeat, adding a little sugar and nutmeg, then pour over the juice of a sour orange. Add a bit of water and bake.

Cheese Cakes.—Grate the peel of three lemons, cook until tender, letting the water boil away. Beat the yolks of six eggs and mix with a quarter of a pound of sugar and a half pound of butter, two tablespoonfuls of grated cheese and the lemon peel. Line patty tins with pie crust and fill with the mixture, and bake for half an hour

Green Pepper and Potato Croquettes.—Take a cupful and a half of mashed potatoes and mix with it a tablespoonful of butter, the yolk of an egg, salt, pepper and enough milk to moisten Mold it into croquettes and make a hole in each. Into this hole put some chopped green pepper that has been fried slightly in butter. Dip the croquettes in egg and crumbs, then fry in deep fat.

Royal Christmas Cream.—Take a pound of warm fondant and work into it chopped nuts, raisins, figs, dates and orange peel. Knead until soft, then press into a cake; when cold cut in slices. Wrap in waxed paper, serve for dessert or a confection.

Choice Butter Caramels. Put a pound of sugar, a half pound each of glucose and butter with a cupful of cream over the fire to boil Cook until a test in cold water makes a soft, waxy ball The time of boiling varies, often it will take an hour Pour out into buttered tins, and when cool mark in squares

Dublin Cookies.—Take a half cupful each of lard and butter, add one and a fourth cupfuls of sugar, one cupful of sour milk, two eggs, one teaspoonful of nutmeg, one teaspoonful of soda, two cupfuls of hot mashed potato and flour to roll. Mix all together well, roll and cut with a large cutter. Sprinkle with granulated sugar and bake in a hot oven.

This world is not so bad a world
As some would like to make it,
And whether good, or whether bad,
It depends on how we take it.

MORE CHRISTMAS CANDIES.

Now that we have the foundation made, a few suggestions as to the ways of using it in different varieties:

For orange creams, grate the yellow rind of an orange, scraping every speck from the grater with a fork, add a pinch of tartaric the size of a pea. Add two tablespoonfuls or more of confectioner's sugar and enough orange juice to mix, and then make it into small balls. These are the centers which are dipped into melted fondant tinted yellow with saffron. Melt the fondant over hot water, being careful not to melt it back to clear sugar.

Walnut creams are very simple. Roll the flavored fondant into balls, press in the half of a walnut, and allow it to dry on waxed paper

A candy which is most attractive may be made of different layers, flavored with a variety of tinting and with the addition of chopped nuts and raisins to one layer. Arrange in layers in a tin box or mold; then, when hard, the whole piece may be dipped in chocolate, and when sliced will make a very pretty addition to the candy box if the colors pink, green and a layer of plain white is used with the layer of chopped nuts and fruit.

Nuggets.—Boil together a cupful each of brown and white sugar, a half cup of water to the soft ball stage Pour this in a fine stream over the white of an egg beaten stiff. Continue beating until it will hold its shape when dropped; add a pinch of soda, a little vanilla and a few nuts when beginning to beat. Drop in small balls on waxed or buttered paper They will harden immediately.

Glace Nuts.—Boil a pound of sugar with a cup of water until it hairs, then add half a cup of vinegar and boil rapidly until when tried in ice water it cracks in the teeth. Now continue to boil until the faintest tinge of yellow is seen, then remove the dish, and set it in a pan of boiling water. Have the nuts clean and dry, drop in with the left hand and remove quickly with the right. Often one dipping will be sufficient.

Talk happiness The world is sad enough
Without your woes. No path is wholly rough;
Look for the places that are smooth and clear;
And speak of those to rest the weary ear
Of earth, so hurt by one continuous strain,
Of human discontent and grief and pain

DAINTY DISHES FOR CHRISTMAS.

Chestnuts may be used in different ways to grace the Christmas table. As stuffing for the fowl or as a sweetmeat, or dessert.

Chestnut Custard Pie.—Line a pie plate with a good rich crust. Boil a sufficient quantity of chestnuts to make a cupful of pulp when mashed Add a pint of milk, the yolks of two eggs, a half cupful of sugar and a teaspoonful of vanilla. Turn this into the lined plate and spread a meringue over the top after it has baked 20 minutes. Make the meringue by beating the two whites, adding two tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar. Brown the meringue in a moderate oven.

Steamed Cider Pudding.—Cream a tablespoonful and a half of butter, add three tablespoonfuls of sugar and one egg Beat all together until very light. Now pour in half a cupful each of raisins and currants mixed with a quarter of a cup of flour. Add half a teaspoonful of cinnamon, a quarter of a teaspoonful of grated nutmeg, a pinch of cloves and a cupful of flour. Sift this all together into the batter, adding a quarter of a teaspoonful of soda. Pour into a well greased mold and steam one and a half hours. Turn out carefully, as the texture is delicate. Serve hot with a sauce flavored with the juice of an orange.

Christmas Fruit Cookies.—Beat half a cup of butter to a cream, add half a cup of sugar, half a cup of raisins chopped fine, three tablespoonfuls of milk. Sift together two cupfuls of flour, one-fourth teaspoon of soda, cloves and nutmeg and a half teaspoonful of cinnamon. Roll and cut. Bake one, and if it spreads add more flour

It is more of good manners to show courtesy to servants or to any in humble station of life. A polite request is always better than a stern command. Nothing shows a disregard of the feelings of a servant or one in humble station gives unmistakable proof of ill-breeding

TEMPTING CHRISTMAS CONFECTIONS.

One nice thing about bon bons the foundation may be made and kept for weeks, without hurting it in the least and one may then make the French candy a day or two before it is wanted and so have it delciously fresh.

Fondant for chocolate creams should be just as soft as possible to handle and those who know say that if it is frozen and small bits used quickly and covered with chocolate we have the very creamy texture which is so desirable for the filling of the chocolate creams All one needs to do is to set the fondant out in the cold over night to freeze

Fondant.—To insure a smooth velvety candy ungrained the addition of a small amount of glucose added to the sugar and water will save the need of careful watching. To four cups of sugar add a cup of water and two tablespoonfuls of glucose. The glucose may be bought at any confectionery shop and is perfectly wholesome used in small quantities for this purpose. Cook the candy until a little is dropped in cold water it may be gathered in the fingers into a soft waxy ball. The softer the candy can be worked the more delicate the candy it should be kept covered with a buttered paper in a close dish or jar. When the candy is cool enough to bear dipping in a finger, begin to stir and stir until a white waxy mass as smooth as velvet is the result. I'se what is needed for the time and put the remainder away for the future

For chocolate creams have the fondant very cold and handle quickly so that it does not melt and spoil the shape Mold into balls and set out again to chill. When thoroughly cold dip them into melted chocolate. Put a piece of chocolate into a small sauce pan and set it into hot water. A hat pin or a wire with a small loop in the end is good to use for dipping the bon bons Drain on waxed paper and put at once in a cold place

Lions Liked the Singing.

The fierce lions were tamed by the voice of Mme. Emmy Destinn, the famous prima donna, at Babelsberg, near Berlin. She took a leading part in a cinema play written by Herr Ewers, and entitled "The Lion's Bride," and she entered the cage containing the lions, which had been sent from the Hagenbeck Zoo, and were said to be very wild. The famous prima donna spent 20 minutes in the cage, in the center of which a pianoforo had been placed. A lion lay on top of the instrument, and Mme. Destinn stood with her hand on its head and sang an aria from "Mignon" to an accompaniment played by a woman lion tamer. The moment she began to sing the lions stopped roaring, and it was evident that they were pleased with her voice As she left the cage Mme. Destinn said "The lions were really tame. I was not a bit frightened" It was noticed that the lions obeyed the prima donna far more readily than they obeyed the woman tamer.

To Keep Lemons.

As lemons are a thing that vary so much in price at different times of the year, they may be purchased when cheap and kept for months, if a little care is taken. Put a layer of fine, dry sand about an inch deep in an earthenware vessel. Place a row of lemons on this, with the stalk ends downward, and be very careful that they do not touch them with another layer of sand about three inches deep, and on this layer place another lot of lemons; and so on until the jar is full. Store in a cool, dry place.

Drumtochty.

Loglealmond, Ian Maclaren's "Drumtochty," is neither a village nor a parish, but an estate about eight miles by four in extent, and situated some twelve miles north of Perth, and lying at the foot of the Grampian Hills. The entire Loglealmond district is the little hamlet of Harrietsfield, where Mr. Watson lived.

THE LAST GREAT ENEMY

By NELLIE GILLMORE.

Rogers stood in the door of his mountain hut, watching the day take its last spasmodic breaths. For the first time in many days the air was clear of snow, but the dull congested cloud hanging low overhead, seemed only gorging itself for a fresh outburst.

As Rogers waited, the last thread of daylight wavered dimly across the barren and spun itself out in the swiftly encroaching darkness. At the signal, he turned abruptly back into the room and made the door secure behind him. He struck a light and stood surveying the small, boxlike apartment with weary, unreconciled eyes. Instead of making him forget, the five years' exile—each day and hour a link forged into a chain of deliberate destiny—seemed but to bind him more keenly, more irrevocably, to the past.

As he bitterly reviewed the crushing sorrow of that other life, with all its ensuing emptiness and hurt, a variety of emotions were depicted upon his thin, expressive face. But they passed as quickly as they came, and Rogers lifted his head with a startled, alert movement as a vague, but unmistakable sound struck on his trained ear; a muffled cry of distress. In a moment it repeated itself, sharp and human and despairing. He jumped to his feet, hurried to the door and flung it wide open.

There was a gust of biting air and a blinding whip of sleet in his eyes, like the sting from thousands of tiny lashes.

He stooped and touched the prostrate figure with gentle hands, but there was no response, and gathering the unconscious man in his arms, he staggered back into the cabin. As carefully as a woman might have done, he placed him on his own rude pallet, and piled the fire high with fresh fuel, the coals breaking instantly into a hissing blaze. Then he procured a flask of brandy and forced a few drops of it between the sick man's teeth. He swallowed it spasmodically, and in a little while there were signs of life

Rogers left his chair and came up to him with a reassuring smile.

"Feel any better now?" he asked

Rogers," he said, "I've been looking all over creation for you and I've found you at last."

"Looking for—me?"

"For you, yes. I am a dying man Look at me and you can see that."

"Consumption," he went on, tapping his chest with one weak hand; "the doctors told me I couldn't last a month"

"My dear fellow," he protested. "I'm afraid—"

"No no, no, I'm not. I know what you'd say. I am in full possession of all my senses. Would to God I was not!" he put in fervently.

"Years ago," he pursued, after a brief pause, "I found out that she—my wife—loved you. She never cared for me, and she's yours by all the laws of heaven."

He paused a moment out of sheer weakness, and wiped the cold drops from his mouth and forehead. When he had controlled himself sufficiently, he went on:

"I loved her—God, I worshiped her, but I knew it was you she cared for, and not me. It did not take me a week to realize my mistake. And Rogers—" His voice broke and trailed off to a whisper. There was a long, shuddering sigh, and the dying man's lids quivered suddenly over unconscious eyes.

Rogers sat for a moment as though turned to stone; his face was as white as the snow that hissed against the windows; his eyes bright and startled. But suddenly his features changed, lightened and fleeting fingers touched them with a ripple of silent joy.

A moment, and the dying man opened his eyes again—they were quite rational now. He looked up appealingly into Rogers' face and groped outside the cover with cold, trembling hands

Rogers caught them suddenly in his warm, strong grasp, and his head dropped forward on his breast.

A minute passed, two, three. An hour went by; then another, and neither stirred. At midnight the distant sound of a bell startled Rogers from his reverie. He looked up swiftly, and bent to catch the sound of the other's heart beats

But the last great enemy had come

Unusually Versatile Mine.

Mutations among mines are not uncommon. Many that began as producers of one kind of ore have in the course of time turned into another kind. The Highland Boy mine of Bingham, Utah, is a recent and striking example. It began as a gold mine, in which class it was of no great account. Then it became a rich and profitable copper mine, its performance as such making it famous. It is no longer much good as a copper mine, but lately it has become a first class lead mine.—Engineering and Mining Journal.

Safety Committee a Success.

Four years ago an eastern railroad appointed thirty-five committees of its employes to study small matters which lead to accidents. These committees, according to the American Machinist, have made 17,333 recommendations, of which 13,861 have been adopted. One result is that 99,753 safety guards of all kinds have been installed. Another is that in 35 out of the 46 shops in which more than 500 men are employed the number of serious accidents per thousand men has been reduced by from five per cent. in some shops to 70 per cent. in others

SOME RISK IN EXPERIMENT

Minneapolis Man Seems to Have Good Idea, But Max Adelar Was Before Him.

A humane man in Minneapolis has strapped an incandescent bulb on the forehead of his valued horse, and by this means hopes to warn away reckless drivers of automobiles who might otherwise run him down at night and do him grevious harm. The battery, a small affair, is attached beneath one of the thills, and the connection is made when the horse is harnessed.

It is understood that the first dark night the new device was tried the horse, unaccustomed to the attachment, shook his lighted head so vigorously that an inebriated automobilist got dazed and went into the ditch

At the same time the humane experimenter should remember the experience of Max Adeler's Erie canal mules and be quite sure that the insulation is perfect.

Those mules had a current attached to them by a genial idiot of a driver in order to put a little hustle into their lagging footsteps and when they got the second shock they kicked the driver into the canal, dragged the boat into the bank, tipped over the lockkeeper's house and committed suicide by drowning

Electricity Real Philosophar's Stone.

Professor Soddy makes the assertion boldly that it is only a question of application to change lead into gold He says that while now we can only work with electricity at 100,000 volts, it is only a matter of perfecting the method to be able to work at ten times that voltage, when the baser metals can be changed into the more precious. In other words, electricity, when brought to its highest efficiency and application, is the real Philosopher's Stone for which the alchemists of the middle ages searched so long.

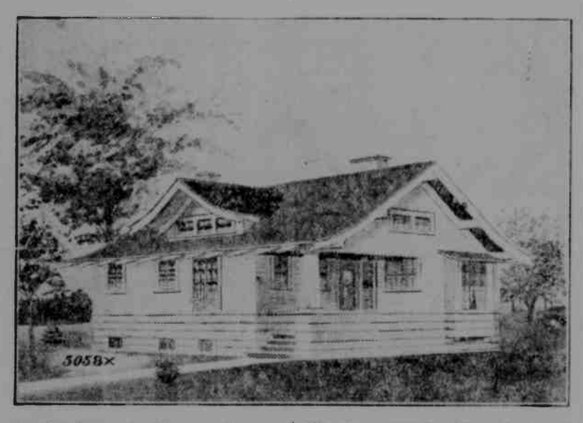
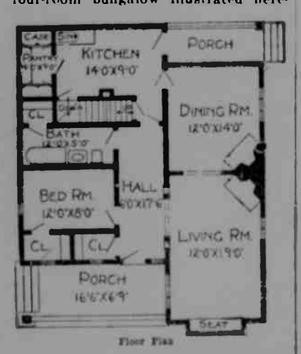
WILLIAM A. RADFORD, EDITOR

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 178 West Jackson boulevard, Chicago, Ill., and only enclose two-cent stamp for reply.



The word "bungalow" is an Anglo-Indian term, meaning in India a species of rural villa, a house of light construction, usually of unbaked brick with a thatched roof. The bungalows which are the residences of Europeans in India are of all styles and sizes, according to the taste and wealth of the owner. In its earlier use by white men, the word "bungalow" was taken to denote a lightly constructed habitation, not exceeding one story in height, and presumably designed for temporary occupation. But during the past few years bungalows have been built in both the United States and Canada as all-year residences, and are constructed with every regard for permanency.



They are built with heavier studding and bracing than the bungalows in California, and are sheathed solid outside and covered with heavy building paper and siding shingles. Many of them are provided with open fireplaces, although the old-time significance of the word contemplated an unplastered building with no facilities for heating, since it was designed, presumably, for summer occupancy or tropical habitation.

In America, the bungalow idea first took root in Southern California, where the mild and even climate is particularly well adapted to this type of house in its elementary forms. Here it has undergone its most extensive development, although other sections of the United States are now crowding the favorite regions of the Pacific coast in this respect.

It may be said, in all frankness, that any prospective home builder will do well to study carefully the advantages of the bungalow for his home which he is to build the coming spring. For those desiring a small and inexpensive house, particularly, the bungalow offers great advantages. The original ideas of arrangement, as well as the unique ornamental schemes that are characteristic of bungalow work, make it possible to design and build a home-like, cosy house of individual appearance for the same cost as the plain, every-day cottage.

An example in point is the artistic four-room bungalow illustrated herewith. This has been built many times for $1,500—a surprisingly low cost—no more, in fact, than one would have to pay for a plain ordinary cottage of the same size which would not meet so ready a sale nor at so good a figure when the time comes to sell.

Floor Plan

Remember this: It is always possible to sell a bungalow when a plain house of the same cost would find no sale. This is the most important factor financially, concerning the subject of homebuilding. Too often home builders construct houses that lack style; and when a rainy day comes and they want to sell the house, there is no buyer because the house is "like thousands of others."

The reason why a house will not sell, in nine cases out of ten, is because it has no individuality. The bungalow has individuality; it has something that makes passers-by turn after they have passed the house and say "How cosy!"

A glance at the floor plan and perspective shown herewith will show desirable and attractive features of this plan. From the broad entrance porch, one enters a good-sized hall, connecting, by means of wide cased opening with attractive column grille work, into a large living room, 12 by 19 feet, bright and cheerful, having broad window spaces, a built-in seat, and a practical fireplace. A cased opening connects the living room and dining room, making practically one room, and giving exceptional spaciousness in a cottage of this size. The arrangement between the kitchen and dining room is very good for convenient housekeeping and few steps. There is also direct connection between kitchen and front hall—a very good feature. Too many houses are so arranged that the living room has to be chased through every time one has occasion to answer the front door bell, which not only disturbs those sitting there, but also dirties this room unnecessarily and makes too many steps.

The bedroom is of good size, opens off the front hall, and is supplied with a large-sized clothes closet ventilated and lighted by means of a good-sized window. There is also a lighted clothes closet for hanging coats and hats, just beside the front door. The bathroom has an inconspicuous location, and is at the same time convenient. It, too, has a large closet for linen, etc.

Although the second floor of this house is not important, still it furnishes a space for storage purposes, is well lighted and ventilated, and serves to keep the first floor cool. Some people have objected to the bungalow on the ground that it is too hot; but, with an attic space of this size, well ventilated, no trouble of this kind will be experienced.

The exterior treatment of this house is in a very appropriate bungalow style. Rough boards are used, stained with creosote oil. The foundation courses, from grade to window sills are covered with wide boards with horizontal batten strips. Above this the boards are lapped like the beveled siding, but with wider lap. A wide-extending, open-rafter cornice completes the design. Brown walls, with green roof, and sash painted white, make a very typical and artistic color arrangement for this cosy little bungalow.

Possible Cancer Cure.

Great popular interest has been demonstrated in Germany in the use of mesothorium as a cancer cure. Rich persons are solicited to give money with which to secure this material for charitable institutions, and in other places various means are resorted to for the securing of funds. This material is secured from the thorium waste of the gas mantle industry, and, while it seems to have been very beneficially used in therapeutics, the physicians say that it is too early to put entire faith in the remedy. For the therapeutic use a tiny particle is inclosed in a silver covering pierced with minute holes; the box is placed upon the part affected with cancerous growth, and is said to slowly, but surely, eradicate the disease.

Statistics of Electric Motors.

The total horsepower of electric motors in use in the United States in 1902 was 4,817,140, as compared with 492,936 in 1899, or an increase of nearly a thousand per cent., while the number of electric motors increased from 16,891 in 1899 to 388,854 in in 1902. The increase in the number of gas engines in use in the last five-year period was nearly twice as great as in the first half. Total horsepower of manufacturing establishments was 18,680,776 in 1909, as compared with 13,487,707 in 1904 and 10,097,893 in 1899. Ninety per cent. of the horsepower in 1909 was that of motors owned by the manufacturing establishments, and 10 per cent was rented power, most of the latter being electric.

How Could He Know?

"King Lear is a great character," remarked the friend. "Yes," answered the actor; "I suppose you remember my performance last season?" "No, I must confess I have never seen you in the part." "Indeed!" was the rejoinder in a tone of gentle surprise. "Then, how on earth did you know it was a great character?"

BEST SEASON FOR PRUNING IN ORCHARD

The Low-Down Uniformly Pruned Tree Will Produce More Fruit, and of a Quality Superior to That of the Tall Tree.

(By M. COVERDELL.)

The next step in order is the pruning of trees, as the season's growth of wood is now thoroughly ripened and there will be no "bleeding" from the pruned branches, nor will there be any checking of development among the branches, both of which often comes as a result of spring pruning, since one is apt to put off doing this work till the sap begins to rise, or neglects to do it at all.

Next year's fruit crop depends largely upon the efficiency with which the pruning is done at this time. The uniform distribution of branches, height of the trees, and the health in general of all parts of them left for bearing fruit—all have their influence. Branches should not be left so long and slender that they will not support a goodly burden of fruit.

As a rule, all water sprouts, those straight shoots running directly upward from the main branches, should be removed. Limbs that are seen to be partly dead or decayed should be cut back until one is sure no part of them is left, as it would but invite further decay, and the sustenance drawn by them would be a useless drain on the vitality of the trees.

All tall, thick, or top-heavy trees demand close and careful pruning. Fruits which are reared high in mid-air are not as exempt from the action of the wind as if they were lower down. The top of the high tree itself is very apt to be caught in the high wind and damaged, perhaps ruined, by being broken down or torn up by the roots.

The low-down uniformly pruned tree also will produce more fruit, and of a quality superior to that of the tall tree, while the ease with which the fruit is picked from the low trees recommends them to all.

The ends of all low-hanging branches also should be pruned back, so that one can pass under them on foot, or with a vehicle in harvesting the fruit crop, which not only makes the picking handier, but avoids damaging the trees by peeling and breaking up the limbs.

After the pruning is completed, all pruned limbs should be removed from the orchard, the smaller ones being utilized for filling up washes about the farm, the larger ones being hauled to the wood pile and used for fuel. Where limbs of considerable size have been sawed off, the stub should be given a thick coat of paint, which will guard against the wood cracking during some of the very warm days that usually come before winter sets in.

Then this paint serves to hold the wood together during the severe freezing weather of midwinter.

Where it has been necessary to cut down whole trees that were dead or badly diseased, a note of these should be made so that one can fill in their places next spring with new, young trees of the same varieties.

It is also well to remember here that the old and diseased trees not only take up valuable space in the orchard, but they are liable to spread disease among the healthy trees, and they always harbor pests that are injurious to the entire orchard.

COATING MIXTURE FOR FARM TOOLS

Recipe for Preparation With Which to Treat Pieces of Steel or Iron Machines.

Do not get in such haste when putting tools away as not to look after any that may need repairs. If this cannot be attended to at the time of storing the tools, place the piece in the workshop until more leisure time is available, and then attend to it. A great saving of time will be effected in this way, and will help along when the time comes when there will be a half dozen jobs, or more, to be attended to at the same time.

Here is an old recipe for a preparation with which to coat pieces of steel or iron machines to protect them from rust: Melt together one pound of lard and a lump of rosin as large as a walnut. Heat the lard and add the rosin, which must first be reduced to a powder. Any piece of machinery that is coated with this mixture will be sufficiently protected from danger of rust.

Machines that have the proper care taken of them will last for years and give satisfactory service. And the owner will not be compelled to waste time in getting them repaired at some critical time when every minute counts so much; nor will he have to replace them with new ones every few years.

CARE OF POULTRY IN COLD WEATHER

Better to Have Small Flock in Good Condition Than Larger Number and Less Eggs.

The time is nearly here when the hens will have to be kept in the house out of the cold and storm. Remember that you must not try to keep too many hens in one house. Better a small flock in good condition and laying well, than a large flock with fewer eggs and twice the expense.

Leaves are good for the litter, and now is the time to save some for the hens to scratch this winter. Rake them up while they are plentiful, and store them somewhere under cover so that they will be ready for use.

Save a barrel of dry earth for the hens' dust bath this winter. Mixed with some wood ashes, and dampened just a little, it will be a great help to the hens in keeping them free from lice. If a box of it is placed in a sunny part of the hen house the hens will enjoy bathing in it, and you will not need to use the insect powder so often.

"Shorts."

"Shorts," according to Webster, is the "bran and coarse parts of meal, in mixture." In some sections of the country bran is known as "shorts," and in other places, middlings bears that term.

SUCCESSFUL TRANSPLANTING OF TREES

The great demand for immediate effect in landscape work has been met by the successful transplanting of large trees. Care should be taken in the transportation of some. Photograph shows a tree ready for shipment.

Profitable Horse Breeding.

The most profitable horse breeding in France, Belgium, Scotland, England and America is done on the intensive plan on farms of moderate or small size by farmers who are good, common-sense horsemen with a taste for doing things well. There is ample room in the United States for much more horse raising on this plan, and we have always had too many inferior brood mares, too many cheap stallions, and too many cheap horses hunting buyers.

Currants in an Orchard.

We grew over 30 tons of currants last year. They were produced altogether among the fruit trees, and were rather helped than injured by the shade. Among the Versailles, Cherry, Fay's Prolific, the latter seems to be most productive. The cultivation is all done with a cultivator. About a ton of dry blood per acre is used for fertilizer. The plants live 20 years or more if the old wood is kept out. Picking costs about one cent a pound.

Sir Robert Ball.

In the death of Sir Robert Ball at the age of seventy-three science loses one of those rare interpreters who bring her wonders within the comprehension of the multitude. Like the late Lord Avebury (Sir John Lubbock), Sir Robert Ball had a faculty for simple writing which he employed in the production of such works as "The Story of the Heavens," "Starland," "In Starry Realms" and "In the High Heavens." These books probably did more than any others of the kind to stimulate the study of astronomy and make it popular. The people of this generation owe a large debt to Sir Robert Ball. The debt was freely acknowledged in his own country, where he received substantial recognition from the government, from scientific societies, from schools and universities. It has been less freely but still sufficiently acknowledged in this country, where his books have sold well, and where he was a most welcome and appreciated guest on more than one occasion.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Hard Test.

Fred Poor of the supply department of the postoffice has been commuting this winter between here and a town just north of Lawrence. One day, wearied from a late business engagement the night before, he fell asleep in the seat and was in sound slumber when the train passed the bridge in sight of the falls at Lawrence. An enthusiastic fellow-passenger, going over the road for the first time, was so interested at the sight of the splashing water that he thought it a pity the young man should be deprived of the opportunity to witness the scene. And so he awakened Poor out of sound sleep that he might behold it. Considering that he had seen the falls twice daily for months, it required a rare summoning of amiability to look pleased. But he did so.

Blamed It on Medicine.

Seasickness affects people differently, but it is doubtful if many accept it in the spirit manifested by a certain small sinner who, by reason of his poor health, had been subjected to various kinds of unpleasant medical treatment. Fairchild was taken out for an ocean sail, with direful consequences. He kept silence as long as he could, but at last even his good nature revolted. Between paroxysms he angrily addressed his mother.

"I told you never, never again to give me medicine without telling me about it. I'd lots rather know when I'm going to be sick!"

Missed the Flood Story.

Sir William Treloar recently told a story of a servant who was once employed at his Cripples' Home at Alton, says the Tatler. One day during lunch time there was a heavy downfall of rain, and Sir William said to the little maid who was waiting at table, "Why, Lizzie, it is almost like the Flood." "The Flood, Sir William?" said the girl. "Yes, the Flood. Noah, you know and Mount Ararat." "I never have no time to look at the papers," she replied apologetically.

Had One Hope.

A little English lad, much impressed by his nature reading, built an amateur nest in a tall tree and confided to an adult friend his hope of finding eggs in it.

"But birds build their own nests, dear," it was gently suggested. "They won't lay eggs in nests they haven't built. I'm afraid you'll be disappointed."

"Perhaps not; how about cuckoos?" cried the triumphant child.

Training Down Daddy.

Ethel—I declare, Elsie, how well your father looks. He belongs to that downtown business men's gymnasium, doesn't he?

Elsie—Not daddy. Dad's more up to date than that. Mother and we girls talked him into joining Miss Martin's tango classes, and the improvement has been simply wonderful.

COMBINED TO DO NOTHING

Southern Statesman Tells Good Story of Two Darkies Who Met at Henhouse Door.

A southern representative who lives in a small village says that one night not long ago, hearing a noise somewhere in the neighborhood of his henhouse he arose and, under cover of a board fence, crept to the place. He could presently make out a dark form, apparently trying to force the henhouse door. Just then another dusky shape rounded the corner and there was consternation.

"Who dat?" one demanded in a frightened voice.

"Me. Who dat?" was the trembling reply.

"Me. What yo' doin' hangin' roun' Tom's hen ouse dis time oh night?"

"Nuffin' Nuffin' 'tall. What yo' do in'?"

"Nuffin'. Ah ain't doin' nuffin, neider."

"Well, den, le's do hit togedder?" was the compromising suggestion.

"And I have always been sorry that I felt called upon to interfere in so interesting a thing as 'doin' nuffin' togedder,'" the representative concluded with a smile.

BAD TETTER ON HANDS

R. F. D. No. 1, Critz, Va.—"I had tetter on my hands so badly that I could hardly do anything. It would begin to come in clear white blisters, then they would burst and peel off all over and crack and bleed. My hands were so sore and itched so badly I could not rest day or night. I could not put them in water nor do my regular work.

And Drives Malaria out of the System.

"Your Babek acts like magic; I have given it to numerous people in my parish who were suffering with chills, malaria and fever and recommend it to those who are sufferers and in need of a good tonic."—Rev. Small Boy's Preference.

A pair of engaged lovers had spent some time on the moonlit veranda. Presently the young lady bade her visitor good-by and, on her way up to bed, stepped into the nursery to kiss her beloved little nephew.

"Auntie," inquired the sleepy but devoted urchin, his arms around her, "why don't you make Mr. Dick smell like your perfume 'stead o' smelling like his baccy?"

Rising in His Profession.

How is your son getting along? I mean the musical one, who went to New York city to seek his fortune?" asked the village parson at Hohokus of one of his parishioners, a widowed mother of a family of boys.

"Fine, sir, thank you," replied the old dame. "I had a postal card from him sayin' as how he is conductin' now."

"Indeed, that is excellent news. And what band is he conducting?"

"He didn't say, sir, except that it's on the Belt line, somewhere around the river front."

"CONUSMPTION CAN BE CUBED"

Says the State Bulletin.

"At one time it was thought that it was useless to treat consumption. It was thought that it was transmitted directly from man to son or, from mother to daughter. This is not true; you may inherit weak lungs, which are apt to furnish a feeding place for the Tubercle bacilli germs. This germ Tubercle bacilii has been breathed into the body by every one of us. If it did not stay it was because it did not find a sore spot; if there was a sore spot the germ goes right to work feeding upon your lungs. It is not there long alone but soon there are thousands: you get lingering cough; then small particles of the lungs, and clots of blood will come up. Don't put it off too long; Bear's Emulsion will save all this trouble. One dollar a bottle, or six bottles for five dollars.

Child Burned To Death.

The remains of the fours month old child of Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland Ashby, of Roanoke, W. Va., were brought to Crellin last Monday for burial. The interment took place Tuesday. The child was lying near the fire place in its parent's home. It is supposed that a spark of fire was blown upon the child's clothing which caught fire and burned it to death.

OPTOMETRIST

IS Your Child Handicapved in his or her physical and mental development by defective vision? Out of 100,000 school children examined in New York city, nearly 30 per cent. were found to be in need of glasses. In Boston the percentage was found to be slightly over 20 per cent., and most of these children were down on the books as "stupid," "stubborn" or unruly. In Philadelphia 354 children were discovered who could not read ordinary writing on a blackboard at a distance of twenty feet. You should make sure by a thorough examination at the hands of a competent optometrist. That your child is not among this vast army of little citizens who suffer from defective eyesight, delays often result seriously. My examinations are made by the most scientific accurate methods. If it is found that glasses are not required you will be told so frankly and no charge made for the examination.

We can color them to suit as desired at a small additional cost. We have a nice pile of them now on hand, selling price $12.00 per M.

¶ Never be afraid to buy a pressed cement brick or block that comes of the home press.

1st. Are superior to tamped brick.	11th. Perfectly uniform.
2nd. Are equal to pressed clay brick.	12th. Specified by architects.
3rd. Compete with pressed clay brick in price.	13th. Uniformly dense.
4th. Better than common clay brick.	14th. Clean, sharp corners on edges.
5th. Compete with common clay brick in price.	15th. Beautiful texture.
6th. Combine the advantage of concrete and clay	16th. Law absorption.
7th. Lay faster than other brick.	17th. Absolute fire proof.
8th. Are used by U. S. Government.	18th. Do not deteriorate.
9th. Lay easier than other brick.	19th. Harden with age.
10th. Perfectly true.

Be Sure You Get These Two Points:

¶ FIRST.—A building must have 253 12 foot stories to secure enough weight to cause these brick to crush under their own weight.

¶ SECOND.—This is the practical way in which any competent architect would figure the load these brick will carry. He would allow a factor of safety of four; consequently he would specify these brick for a building SIXTY-THREE (63) Stories high. Do they build that high in your locality?

VOLUME 38 — OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 25, 1913. — NUMBER 43

CHRISTMAS IN OAKLAND.

Will Be One Of Joy To Many Young And Old.

Many homes have Christmas trees for the little ones. A number of homes are decorated with evergreens, pine, holly, mistletoe, in wreathes, stars, etc. At nights lights will be found burning in many homes, as in the olden times. The holiday spirit prevails more largly than in many former years. The promise is for a joyful happy day. There will be quite a number of family reunions; the boys and girls are home from school, full of life and good cheer, the absent members from the family circle, with their children will brighten up the parental home and fill it with good cheer, once again, as they talk of the days gone by and of the profits of the years to come. There will be music and games there will be joy and laughter.

For the Christmas dinner our grocery men have provided liberally and well. Choice Garrett county turkeys and chickens, and rabbits for those who prefer them. At the meat market prime Christmas beef, lamb and pork, trout, oysters, celery, potatoes, parsnips, etc. In fruits, apples, oranges, bananas, grapes, grape fruit, nuts of all kinds. The extent of the feast depends on the size of one's bank account.

Card of Thanks.

I wish to thank our friends for their assistance during the recent illness and bereavement of our son Asa. We feal especially grateful to the W. O. W. order of Grantsville, of which he has been a member but a short time. They have shown the true spirit of brotherhood in their kindness and sympathy which they endeavored to express in a beautiful floral offering. Due to the diligence of Mr. C. A. Bender, the local manager, the insurance was promptly paid and a beautifulmonument will be erected by the order. Money can never repay the loss of life, but of such as they had they gave freely.

Yours in gratitude,

CHRISTMAS WILL BE MADE CHEERFUL AND BRIGHT

For The Deserving Poor Today When They Are Visited By Civic Club.

With loads of groceries, fruits, clothing, shoes, toys, blankets and many other articles pouring in yesterday the philanthropic committee of the civic club, assisted by committees representing all the churches of Oakland, were kept busy all day Tuesday receiving the goods at the Lutheran church, their labors not ceasing until after six o'clock in the evening and yet many articles were on the way and were delivered early yesterday (Wednesday) morning when the committee of ladies was present and worked faithfully until nearly night in assorting the articles for those who are to receive them this morning, the deliveries to be made by Messrs. J. M. Stanton and Thomas Harne who have placed their teams and men at the disposal of the ladies.

The room at the church resembled more that of a department store just being thrown open to the public than that of a charitable undertaking, for upon one table there were piles upon piles of toys and dolls, sleds and carts; upon another clothing and shoes were stacked in large array, while yet another table was occupied by groceries, fruits, dishes and other household necessities.

Donations in cash amounted to quite a sum which will be used in making purchases of coal and other things absolutely necessary for the comfort of the less fortunate of the community.

Thus far the undeataking has been a success far beyond the expectations of the prime movers in the affair.

This paper has been promised a detailed statement of the articles and money received which will be published next week.

Drilling For Coal.

A diamond drill with the necessary rigging to drill to a great depth, was unloaded in the local freight yards in Oakland last Friday and hauled to the Col. Woods tarm a few miles west of town where the operators will take out cores showing the geological formation of that section of the county. The object in drilling is to ascertain what veins of coal underlie the surface. The work is being done by Messrs. Huffman Bros., of Punxsutawney, Pa.

Christmas--Then and Now...

For The Republican

THAT a change there has been
Since the wise men of old
Journeyed for days
The Christ-Child to behold.

They brought Him their gifts—
Their homage to pay—
The Babe in the Manger;
Their King came that day.

How dim is this scene in our eyes of today—
Fast fading from sight is the sacred old way
Of bringing our gifts to Him who was born
To gladden our hearts on that bright Christmas morn.

How few of our gifts are bestowed on the poor
And wretched ones, who by chance may live near our door,
For Christ has said, as we plainly can see,
As much as ye do unto the least, ye do unto Me.

We pour out our gifts upon all that are dear—
Our neighbors and friends, some far and some near;
Each trying to excel the other by far,
Forgetful of Him shown forth by the Star.

That led the wise men to His lowly bed of straw,
Making light hearts, for in Him they saw
The long-looked for Savior, a ransom for sin—
Was it any wonder they gave gifts to Him?

Ring out then, ye bells,
On this glad Christmas morn!
May we come as of old
With our gifts for theLord.

And give Him our time, our talents and our gold—
We will celebrate His birth and His beauty behold.
The world will be better, our lives richer, too,
And Christmas will mean more when these things we do.

BITTINGER.

Unless snow soon falls we will miss the merry jingle of sleigh-bells during the holidays.

Mrs. Nettie Hoover returned from Baltimore last Saturday, after several weeks' treatment in the Marylnd General Hospital of that city.

Prof. M. Bumphrey, a proficient sightless musician, of Petersburg, W. Va., held a delightful concert in the school house in this village, on Wednesday evening of last week.

Mrs. Thomas B. Wiley was called to Cumberland last Saturday to attend the funeral of her brother's son.

John E. Bernard, of Meadow Mountain, was a pleasant business visitor in this village a few days ago.

Miss Estella Reckner returned to her home at North Glade last Sunday morning after several weeks' stay in this village.

Clyde Broadwater, who is a student in the New Windsor, Md., college, is spending his holiday at his home here.

Chauncy Broadwater has been employed by William Speicher and will spend the winter in Accident.

Rev. E. E. Oney, of Gettysburg, who was supply pastor on the Bittinger charge during the past summer, will spend the first week in January with his friends here and will preach in the several churches during his visit.

May THE REPUBLICAN and all its readers spend a Merry, Merry Christmas.

The following letter was carried over from last week.

Work has been begun on the new extension of The Mutual Telephone Co's lines.

The ladies of the Lutheran church held a successful oyster supper in the basement of the parsonage last Saturday evening.

A party of young folks from Jennings spent last Saturday evening in this village.

Thomas Platter disposed of his personal property at public sale last Saturday afternoon.

Charles H. Wiley made a business trip to Salisbury, Pa., a few days ago.

Oliver Beachy was injured by a fall of breast coal, in John H. Stark's coal mine, a few days ago, but is able to be about again.

Dr. Bowen, of Grantsville, was called to this village last week to attend the little child of Mr. and Mrs. Adam Speicher.

Messrs. Dennis and Clarence Brenneman were amonug the successful fox hunters last week.

Cleveland Fazenbaker recently moved his family from Listonburg, Pa., to this place.

This paper is issued one day earlier this week than usual in order that those connected with its operation may enjoy to the fullest extent the festivities of the day.

Health In Red Cross Seals.

Red Cross Christmas Seals are the best investment in health any one can make. Science has demonstrated conclusively that tuberculosis, the world's greatest plague, of which we now have over 1,000,000 cases in the United States alone, can be prevented if these consumptives are properly cared for. In other words, every consumptive, properly cared for, insures your life against tuberculosis by the prevention of further infection from that source. Red Cross Seals help to provide hospitals, day camps, sanatoria, dispensaries, open-air schools and visiting nurses for the care, cure and prevention of tuberculosis in this comunity. Every seal you buy, then, is a sound investment in your own health and in that of your family. Buy your Red Cross Seals now and help to protect your home from disease.

No Holiday At The Post Office.

The Oakland post office clerks are handling daily hundreds of parcel post package. On the 22d inst. they begin using the accommodation trains for mailing parcel post packages, so as to avoid delay in the fast trains service.

The R. F. D. carriers are hauling big loads of holiday mail to their patrons, and return to the post office with a greatly increased mail.

The incoming mail is large Postmaster Peddicord and his assistants are the busiest people in Oakland

This is the first parcel post Christmas and with its enormous volume of business is putting the Government to its first real test as to its ability to handle the parcel transportation of the country in opposition to the express companies, according to Washington dispatches.

Chicken Supper at Mountain Lake Park.

A chicken supper will be given at Haydenhurst, under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of the M. E. church, Tuesday evening from 5:30 to 8:30. Chicken served in every style, also coffee, cake and ice cream.

Oakland High School Notes.

The O. H. S. rendered an interesting literary program last Friday afternoon. A goodly number of former students and visitors were present. We are always glad to welcome back our school mates. There are many ties of interest that bind the hearts of students in good fellowship.

The talks of Revs. Manges and Ely were instructive and appropriate to the season of the year.

Friday evening the Senior and Junior Domestic Science students entertained in a royal manner the students, faculty and members of the County School Board. After playing many interesting games, enjoying music and having a general good time, dainty refreshments were served. Miss Gertrude Skelton, our efficient domestic science teacher, and her girls deserve much praise.

Last Wednesday night, Dec. 17th, the Terra Alta High school team defeated, on their floor, Oakland High school team by a score of 31 to 21. The game was very fast and interesting from the begining to the ending.

Masons Elect Officers.

At the regular communication of Oakland lodge No. 192, A. F. and A. M., held on Tuesday evening the following officers were elected for the ensuing year and will be installed at the next meeting by Deputy Grand Inspector R. E. Sliger, at which time the deacons, stewards and tyler will be appointed and installed: W. M., George W. Legge, Jr.; S. W., W. O. Davis; J. W., Paul Mitchell; Secretary, Paul Naylor; Treasurer, Harland L. Jones.

Grange Against Liquor.

The proposed amendment to the Constitution making it illegal to manufacture or sell intoxicating liquors in this country was indorsed Wednesday at the closing session of the Maryland State Grange, which was in conference two days last week at Odd Fellows' Hall, Batimore.

The Grange also voted to do all in their power to increase the attendance at the Western Maryland Agricultural College. To this end the 3000 members will act as soliciting agents for the college. It is expected by this means not only greatly to increase the number of students but also to bring the Grange and the college itself closer together.

Sensible Christmas Presents.

Messrs. J. M. Davis & Sons, of Oakland, sold last Tuesday five Davis patent steel ranges intended for Christmas presents. The Republican congratulates the five ladies who received these latest improved and best steel ranges on the market. To show the popularity of this range we need only state that the sales of this range has reached $8,000 for the year 1913. Mr. Charles S. Davis, who pays special attention to the range department has been very successful, as shown above, in handling the range. The firm reports a very satisfactory holiday trade.

Maryland Theatre.

A very funny comedy called "The Gay Old Bachelor" will be presented Christmas night at the Maryland Theatre, by The Wilber Stock Company which has been giving excellent satisfaction at this popular Theatre. The bill for Friday night is "A Race For A Widow," a play that had a long run in London and has been successful in this country. Saturday night the famous play "Lena Rivers," and every night two reels of pictures. Adv.

Wm. H. Anderson Goes to New York.

William H. Anderson, general superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of Maryland, sent to the headquarters committee of the organization his resignation, to take effect on January 1, next.

On that date he will go to New York to become general superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of New York, and will at once begin a campaign looking to the abolition of the saloon in the Empire State.

THE HOLIDAY SEASON AMONG THE CHURCHES

Will Be Generally Observed By The Distribution Of Gifts.

We have tried to obtain the Christmas announcements of the Sunday schools of the county, but met with only a partial success. They will be as follows:

The Oakland Presbyterian Sunday school hold their entertainment this evening. A very interesting program has been arranged, consisting of appropriate music and several short addresses. Then will come the part that which always delights the children—the distribution of the gifts to the members of the school, by Santa Claus.

The Methodist Episcopal Sunday school will not have their usual Christmas exercises until next Monday night. Although a little later than usual, the program for the evening will be full of interest and the distribution of gifts of the scholars, at that time, will lengthen out the holiday season for the children.

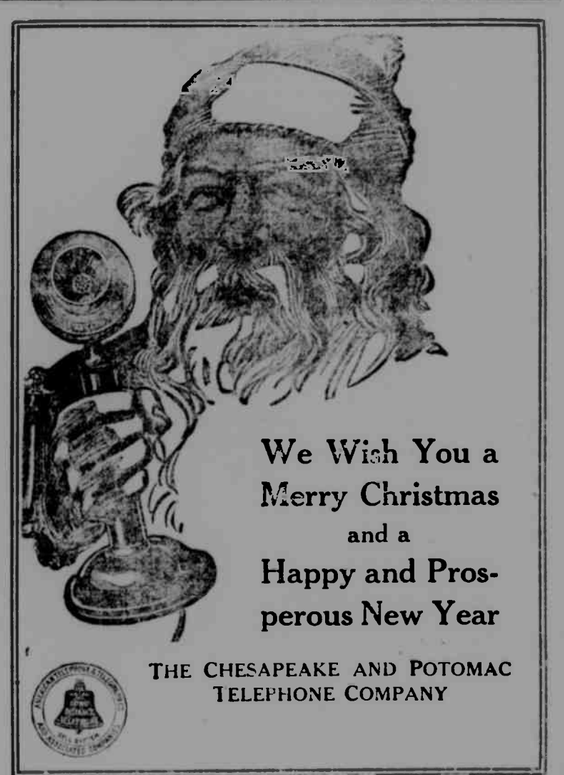
The Methodist Sunday school at Mountain Lake Park has a very interesting program provided for tonight. For some time the children have been drilling for this occasion. The exercises will commence at 7:30 p. m.

The Presbyterian Sunday school, of Kitzmiller have made special preparation for a Christms entertainment, and will furnish a very interesting program.

The Methodist Sunday school of Friendsville will enjoy a Christmas service which will be interesting and pleasing to all. A handsome Christmas booklet will be given out. The booklet has pictures of the pastor of the church, the superintendent of the Sunday school and of a number of the teachers. It is something new and will be greatly appreciated.

The Methodist Sunday school, of Swanton has been practicing for what is expected to be an interesting entertainment. The orchestra will take part. J. S. Ashfelter is the instructor.

In St. Peters's Catholic Church, Oakland, on Christmas at 5:30 a. m. the first of a series of special services will be held. The second service will commence at 9:30 a. m., to be followed with high mass at 10:30 a. m. Special music at the first and last services.



Prof. George Sterling, principal of the Bittinger public school, is visiting friends in this vicinity.

Mrs. Charles May returned to Mountain Lake Park, Tuesday, from a visit at Marietta, Ohio, and Wheeling, W. Va.

A six o'clock service was held in St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church this morning at which quite a large audience was present. Special music suitable to the occasion, was rendered, in which the congregation joined hartily.

Mr. Joseph Rembolt, of near Aurora, was in the city Tuesday when he made this office a brief bussiness visit.

Miss Catherine Shirey, has returned to her home in Oakland, where she will spend the holidays.

We Wish You a Merry Christmas and a Happy and Prosperous New Year

AT THE PARTING OF THE WAYS

WHAT DOES FATHER TIME HOLD IN THE OTHER HAND?

NEW YEAR'S is the oldest and the most widely observed of all the world's festal days. In every country this day has been celebrated from the beginning of civilization. The day does not come simultaneously all over the globe, for some countries have a different calendar from that of America and Europe. All countries, however, aim to have their civil year coincide, in duration, and as far as practicable, with the solar year. The nations which hold their festival in accordance with the Gregorian calendar, comprising the United States, Great Britain, France, Germany and most of the other white countries are those which are leaders in civilization, and give the law to the world.

In its universality this day differs from all the others which have written their names on the world's calendar. Thanksgiving is a strictly American holiday, which did not extend beyond the boundaries of New England until about a generation ago. Nowhere outside the United States does the Fourth of July make any especial demand for observance. It had neither a local habitation nor a name until we furnished them. Not until after Yorktown and the adoption of the constitution was this aspiration of 1776 transmitted into fact. By the Puritans Christmas was placed under the ban, and not until a time within the easy recollection of living men was it permitted to cross the boundaries of New England. Moreover, primarily Christmas is dedicated to the children, and in its observance the older members of the family are merely subsidiary. In celebrating it the children hold the center of the stage, with the adults as the properties and accessories which give the spectacle its scenic effects. But New Year's dedicates itself to the grown-ups, especially to those who have the capacity and the inclination for physical and social activity. Particularly does it send out its appeal to everybody who has the freshness of spirits and the enthusiasm which give zest to enjoyment of all sorts, who are capable, when occasion demands, of turning back the hands on time's clock and thus who can, through a child's eyes, look out upon life.

Although this is the oldest of the world's gala days, its especial function is to tell us to look forward and not backward. For the moment the sponge has drawn itself across the desires and the deeds of the year which, a few hours ago, was thrust back into the shadow. A blank tablet rises before us, on which the coming days will write their story. On the world's calendar this incoming cycle figures as 1914, but for the present hour this arbitrary division may be disregarded. And while the hour remains with us we are all privileged to set up our own calendar. While the transition casts its spell upon us everything is new. We are at the beginning of an era. This is day 1 of year 1 in the new dispensation. The uncertainties and the adversities of the dead cycle can no longer molest us or make us afraid. Even where fortune has been kind to us in the recent past, the days which are before us stand ready to hand us choicer prizes. Keeping sunshine in the heart, we can laugh at any tales which the thermometer or the barometer may tell us. While this days lasts hope is the only deity which claims any allegiance from any of us. All are invited to build their air castles without any fear of any disillusionment, "for over the sea lies Spain." We can get all the exaltation which came to Abou Hassan when the amiable deception of Haroun-al-Raschid was played upon him, without any of the ill effects which we may presume came to him when his dream of power dispelled itself. The day and the scene invites us to enjoyment, and to contribute to the enjoyment of others. For this one day, at least, of the year the golden age is no myth. It is here with us, and we must utilize it while it stays. This is the hour when life's wireless telegraphy carries greetings of good will between all the individuals and all the peoples of the earth. To every one of us the world stretches forth the glad hand and salutes us with a "May you live long and prosper."

The old prophets conceived the sublime thought that the Creator set the heavenly bodies in their places to mark for man the progress of time. The early leaders of the human race who watched the stars in their courses, and from their movements worked out the division of the days and years, left a blessing behind them for all time to come. For if we are to believe the records of the rocks and clays the first men who lifted their faces to the skies in profound awe and with germs of thought stirring in their brains had little if any more conception of time and of the moving planets than the brutes that shared with these primitive savages the caves or the huts which were all the houses they had. It took long ages to learn that the sun is a fixed body as regards our earth, to divide the globe into degrees and the day into 24 hours. The seasons came and went and savage man had no conception of why beyond the sun's declension below his zenith and the return of the fiery orb to a place high above his head. Then from the crude superstitions of astrology men of high civilization worked out our year and set the day that, as this we now live, marks the beginning of a new circle of the four seasons.

The crudest savage needed no prophet with a message from the skies to teach him that if he desired to prolong his life he must work. He was the man of all generations who knew best that "in the sweat of his face" he must "eat bread" if he ate at all. Stored-up wealth there was none. Each generation began practically where the last did, with no inheritance to profit by. Nor was there a spark of charity to minister to the needs of age or sickness. The child born with low vitality met its fate early in its career. The man who met with an accident sufficient to incapacitate him for the chase or for war was left to perish miserably where he fell. When age dimmed the eye or made the hand nerveless the useless one was not permitted to be a burden on society. As the wounded deer is left, as the aged wolf is abandoned, so was the wounded man or the toothless woman. Parentage or other relationship counted nothing.

As civilization climbed the path of progress to higher levels toil became more constant, more pressing. The savage has few needs and therefore much leisure. He needs no weekly day of rest. With increasing needs to meet man had to bend his back more incessantly and to strain muscle tendon and ligament. Life had more enjoyment at the cost of longer hours of toil, that made rest seem very sweet. Then arose the leader of men, the reformer, the teacher, philosopher or prophet who ordained that as there were times and seasons so there should be days of rest. If we were to run the world around we would find many Sabbaths. The follower of Mohammed takes his rest on Friday, the Hebrew on Saturday, the Christian on Sunday. And the man of advanced ideas who gave man his Sabbath was a leader and a benefactor in very deed.

The man who stands in the Escorial in Spain and looks on the sepulchers of kings reaching back 300 years, has a span about as long as the most ancient history of America. When he goes to Granada he is face to face with the times of the Moors, whose invasion of the peninsula was centuries before Columbus was born. As he looks on some paved road or some aqueduct he is carried back to the Scipios, to Hannibal, and back to his forefathers who moved about here; and so we go back to Carthage, which was a great city before Rome was founded, and Carthage takes us over the sea to Asia where Moses' people and some Philistines came into combat. And we go back to Egypt and its pyramids, to the Pharaohs and Jacob and his children, and on back to Abraham and the nomad chiefs who fed their flocks in the fat plains of central Asia as long before the Christian era as it is from the year 1911. In these lands, among these races of men, grandfathers and great-grandfathers count for little. One meets men whose ancestors took part in the expulsion of the Moors, with others whose ancestors resisted them when they first invaded Spain, and still others whose forbears were in the armies of the Scipios or of Hannibal. The mind loves to dwell on the memory of these faraway days and to dream of the way of life of men and women who died so long ago, and to whom we owe our being and our civilization. The oldest title lands in the Pacific states do not go back far. There are titles in Spain that date back centuries. Castles here are owned by families who come down directly or collaterally for ages. To these a generation is as short as a year to us in our brand new civilization. It is all impressive, but after dreaming of such things the mind inevitably reverts to our own generation, to our own time, and the question comes up with spontaneity, "What of all this to me?"

In a country so new as ours, where one's great grandfather was about the earliest on record, time does not impress us. It seems as if everything began yesterday. In old lands whose history goes back centuries upon centuries the progress of time seems very impressive.

But say what we will, it is our own life that is the most impressive, and as the years stretch out behind us the memory of our own youth makes a deeper impression on us this New Year's day than all the written history of the world, than all the traditions of all the races, than all the records of the rocks. The individual souls on days like this naturally divide into two classes. On New Year's day youth looks to the future and age to the past. To the young all the paths before the feet look rose-strewn and smooth. So be it. Let the eye brighten as it feasts in anticipation on the good things that must lie everywhere to the end. Youth! Youth! The time when there can be "no doubt of any mystery save that life's longings and its hopes could die." Let youth dream on of roses without thorns, of bright days without a cloud, of hopes that always find fulfillment, of ambitions always fully satisfied. All we need do for youth is leave it alone with its dreams, its hopes, its ambitions. With these it will take care of itself. And let not age, whatever the years may have brought, say a word, shake a head or give a dubious look to dispel the glory of the dream, the brightness of the hope, the vaulting nature of the ambition. Time will do enough of this. So let youth have its undimmed joy today.

But age looks back. The fires of ambition are dimmed. They are all burnt-out ashes now. The hopes that buoyed us up so safely in youth have found what there is of fulfillment all too little, of disappointment all too much. We dream no longer of joys to come, but of grief that has so strewed the path along which we have come. The smell of the woods in early spring when the first violets bloom, or in the heat of summer when all is like the spice islands, or in fall when decay is in the fallen leaves, or in winter when death absorbs all, no matter to the aged, all call back to days long gone. We walk alone now, and all along the far road lie mounds where we stood and confided to the breast of Mother Earth so many that walked with us in the heydey of our life. The mother whose soft touch banished pain, the father whose ripe experience taught us where to walk, the brothers and sisters who were our playmates in those days when the world was all sunshine. Then when the wing of love ceased to brood over us in the paternal nest and we went forth to create a new family under the banner of love, how a day like this calls up all the joy and tenderness of these days of early manhood and womanhood! So we dream of the long-lost clasp of the hand of lover or friend; so we dwell in tender memory on all those days of hope, of joy, of expectancy and fruition. We feel that all will soon be over. This may be our last New Year's day on this earth where we have passed so many eventful years. When those who are left again "ring out the old, ring in the new," we may not be here to ring either chime of bells. So we sit and dream and call up from the treasure-house of memory the faces, words and deeds of those who walked with us in the days of our youth and of our prime. But we would not be gone yet. He is less than a man who thus can sit and dream, think of his departure, and not cast one longing, lingering look behind." We must go to the poets to interpret this life to us. Not to the great ones of the world, but to those whose verse deals with the common things of life: to Burns and his "banks and braes o' bonnie Doon," his "Highland Mary;" to the man who wrote "Home, Sweet Home," to the poet of the poor slave in the south and his "Suwanee River." We can go far back in the ages, and all the time the common heart of a common humanity was the same as now. King David would take the aged Barzillai to the capital, to the court. But the plain man of the people would be left alone to dream the last dreams of life in peace. "Let me go back that I may die in mine own city." And after death "be buried by the side of my father and of my mother." Oh! the tenderness of old age! There are no fierce passions left. Ambition builds no more castles in the air. Just to be let dream of the days that are gone, of the early home and all it contained, and then lie down with the companions of youth and for centuries and centuries, throughout the great eternity, let our ashes mingle with those we loved so well.

A NEW YEAR'S THOUGHT.

"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, and with all thy mind—him shalt thou serve and to him shalt thou cleave."

What, then will be the reward of faithful love and service be? Or are we working without the hope of a reward? To be pure and true, love must be disinterested. Granted. Yet, is there not an exquisite joy, a keen incentive to further service, in the encouragement which God in his infinite goodness grants to use from time to time, and that in spite of all the imperfections of our love and service? Why, then, should we not look forward to our great reward—God's approval—if we truly love him, should we not strive with all our might for his final "Well done?" Surely it is not wrong to look forward to the joy of that assurance, even while we are fully aware of our coming short of it, yet, in our best work, for thus we learn to know more, and to think more, of the love which, seeing the intention, gives us credit for the effort, though the result may not be, is not, what we had hoped to offer him.

With such thoughts the New Year begins. As a child tries to please the father he loves so dearly, as a friend who seeks every opportunity to prove his friendship, so may we loving, thankful children of our God, rejoicing in the knowledge of his love, go on our way, full of trust for the future, neglecting no opportunity, however small it may be, to prove our thankful love, and asking him to kindle in us an intense desire to please him, an ardent longing for his blessed words of commendation, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant!"

HER MISTAKE.

"What is a young man's maiden speech, pa?"

"His first one, my dear."

"Dear me! I thought it was a proposal."

NEW YEAR RESOLUTIONS.

While New Year is only an imaginary line drawn through time to mark its divisions, it possesses a sentiment which moves us all. It marks a definite starting point in our lives every year and we take a fresh hold upon our prospects and renew our faith in ourselves and look out upon the coming year as upon a new, fair field, with promise of better things. I do not much believe in formal resolutions proclaimed loudly from the eminence of our vanity. The man who, on New Year's, "swears off" his bad habits for a definite period and notifies his friends and neighbors, is, from my observation, only hypnotizing himself. He may honestly intend to stick to his good resolutions, and perhaps makes his announcement as a sort of mental and moral prop. But if he is in deadly earnest he only needs to promise allegiance to God and himself. If he does the things he means to do his friends and neighbors will give him credit, and if he fails they will not know of his broken vows. Reforms come from within and deeds, not words, prove a man's sincerity.

The old year has been kindly a one to the farmers of America. They have prospered, and they have made national advancement in social and moral life, better methods of farming, and a broader view of the field of endeavor have been among the achievements of the old year. From the year to come we hope that every one of us may have greater prosperity, larger blessings and better lives.

AN ABANDONED PROJECT.

Two hearts that beat as one." The Museum manager mused.

"Oh, well," he went on, continuing his soliloquy, "I suppose we could get up a freak like that, but she wouldn't be in it with the two headed girl, anyhow."—Puck.

The KITCHEN CABINET

THERE is one thing that is almost as sacred as the marriage relation—that is an appointment. A man who fails to meet his appointment, unless he has a good reason, is practically a liar, and the world treats him as such.

TOOTHSOME CHRISTMAS DISHES.

For the young people many of the rich foods that are served at this time are entirely inappropriate, and a few simple desserts and puddings will be used for them. Here is one that is warranted to be reliable:

Grape Juice Souffle.—Mix together a pint of grape juice, a third of a cup of sugar and two tablespoonfuls of granulated gelatine. Stir until dissolved; set the pan into hot water and the process will be hastened. When the mixture begins to thicken, stir in the whites of four eggs beaten stiff. Half fill small molds, then add a cup of heavy cream beaten stiff to the remainder, and fill the molds. Chill and serve without a sauce.

Drop Cookies.—Cream one cupful of butter and add gradually one and a half cups of sugar, then add three eggs well beaten. Dissolve a teaspoonful of soda in one and a half tablespoonfuls of hot water, add to the first mixture, with two cupfuls of flour mixed with a teaspoonful of cinnamon and half a teaspoonful of salt; then add one cupful of chopped walnut meats, one cup of raisins and one and a fourth cupfuls of flour. Drop by spoonfuls two inches apart on a buttered sheet and bake in a moderate oven.

Almond Cookies.—Cream a half cup of butter and add a half cup of sugar creaming well together, then add one egg well beaten, one-third of a cup of blanched almonds finely chopped, the grated rind of half a lemon, two tablespoonfuls of orange juice and one of vanilla, two cupfuls of flour sifted with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, a half teaspoonful each of cinnamon, cloves, and nutmeg. Roll and cut with a round cutter. Bake in a moderate oven until delicately brown.

Another Frozen Pudding.—Dissolve two tablespoonfuls of granulated gelatine in a half cupful of boiling water. Cook together a cupful each of sugar and water until it forms a thread. Add this sirup to the beaten yolks of three eggs beat until cool, then add the gelatine, fold in two cupfuls of whipped cream, then add a half cupful of sultana raisins, a cup of mixed nutmeats, freeze and when partly frozen add a half pound of candied fruits chopped, and soaked in vanilla.

Do not hurry,
Do not worry,
As this world you travel through,
No regretting,
Fuming, fretting,
Ever can advantage you.
Be content with what you've done;
What on earth you leave undone,
There are plenty left to do.

CHRISTMAS PUDDINGS AND A CAKE.

The following is a famous English pudding which it will be worth while to keep in the family:

Christmas Pudding. One and a fourth pounds of suet, one and a half pounds of currants, one and a half pounds of raisins, one half pound of lemon and orange peel mixed, three-fourths of a pound of breadcrumbs, one-fourth of a pound of flour, one half pound of sugar, four eggs a quarter of a cup of orange or grape juice, a cup of chopped almonds and a chopped apple. Stir well put into a well greased basin or mold, tie a cloth tightly over and boil 12 hours. The pudding may be partly cooked and finish cooking another day. Serve with a creamed butter with whipped cream added, flavor with vanilla. This pudding may be restreamed as long as it lasts.

Christmas Pound Cake.—Cream a half pound of butter and add gradually a half pound of fine granulated sugar, then add the yolks of five eggs beaten until thick, the grated rind of one-half a leman, two teaspoonfuls of lemon juice, a half pound of flour, mixed and sifted with one-fourth of a teaspoon of soda. Beat three minutes and add a half pound of raisins cut fine with the scissors and dredged with one and a half tablespoonfuls of flour, add a half cup of walnut meats, broken in pieces. Add the beaten white. Turn into a buttered and floured angel cake pan and bake 55 minutes. Remove from the pan, cover with boiled frosting and place on a plate on a tray garnished with holly berries and leaves.

Christmas Frozen Pudding.—Beat the yolks of six eggs slightly. Add a half cup of sugar, a fourth or a teaspoonful of salt, and pour on gradually two cupfuls of milk, stirring constantly, cook in a double boiler until the mixture thickens. Put a half cup of sugar in a saucepan and stir constantly until the sugar is melted, when brown but not burned, add to the custard and let stand until all dissolved.

There is no preservative and antiseptic, nothing that keeps one's heart young like sympathy, like giving one's self with enthusiasm to some worthy thing or cause.

—John Burroughs.

SOME NICE SEASONABLE DISHES.

Holiday Sandwiches.—Chop fine one small sour pickle and six olives, add a tablespoonful of capers and mix with three tablespoonfuls of stiff mayonnaise. Spread thin slices of bread with butter, and put the above mixture on half of them and the remainder spread with cream cheese; sprinkle paprika over each slice and press together. Cut in fancy shapes and garnish with parsley.

Fruit Cake.—Mix one pound of seedless raisins, one pound of currants, and one pound of shredded citron, flour then with half a cupful of flour. Beat ten eggs without separating the yolks from the whites; cream one pound of butter, add one pound of sugar, and when well mixed add the eggs and a pound of flour. Beat well and add one teaspoonful each of cinnamon and allspice, a half teaspoonful of cloves, one nutmeg grated, and the rind and juice of an orange and a lemon. Beat well, then stir in the floured fruit. Turn into tin molds lined with waxed paper and steam three hours; then bake one hour in a slow oven.

Queen's Plum Pudding.—Mix together a pound of raisins, a pound of currants and half a pound of orange peel, dust with a quarter of a pound of flour. Chop a pound of beef suet, sift three-quarters of a pound of dry bread crumbs, chop half a pound of blanched almonds, mix with the fruit, add the grated rind of a lemon, half a pound of brown sugar and half a grated nutmeg. Beat five eggs, add half a pint grape juice, mix and pack into molds. Steam ten hours. Steam one hour before serving.

Let us never be betrayed into saying we have finished our education, because that would mean we had stopped growing. There is always the upward dimension possible for us.

—John Burroughs.

CHRISTMAS CAKES.

The cakes and puddings which contain fruits and spices are best made some time before needed as the flavor is much better if they are allowed to season, well wrapped to keep from drying. The following one, however, is best made to be used within a day or two:

Queen Cake.—Cream two-thirds of a cup of butter, add one and three-fourths cupfuls of flour, one-fourth of a teaspoonful of soda, a half teaspoonful of cream of tartar, then add one and one-half teaspoonfuls of lemon juice. Beat the whites of six eggs add one and a fourth cupfuls of powdered sugar and combine the mixtures. Bake in a shallow pan 30 minutes. Cover with caramel icing.

The President's Cake.—Most people will feel that this is too expensive a cake for ordinary occasions; but for the holiday time or the event of a wedding will warrant a little extravagance. The ingredients are a pound each of butter, sugar browned flour sifted, 12 eggs, two pounds of seeded raisins, one and a half pounds of citrons shredded, one glass of grape jelly, two teaspoonfuls of melted chocolate one pound of candied cherries, one pound of candied pineapple, one pound of blanched almonds cut fine, one pound of pecans cut fine, one tablespoonful of cinnamon, one of nutmeg, half a tablespoonful of allspice a teaspoonful of cloves, one glass of grape juice and two teaspoonfuls of rosewater.

Soak the almond over night in the rosewater and the fruit in the grape juice for the same length of time. Cream the butter, add the sugar, then the well-beaten yolks of the eggs, then the spices, jelly and chocolate. Next add the beaten whites and part of the flour. Roll the fruit in the rest of the flour, adding it in small quantities and mixing it well. Add the nuts last. Bake or steam for four to six hours in small or large molds. If steamed dry off in the oven slowly for an hour.

Recipes for a Contented Heart.

The blind Madame de Deffand rejoiced that her affliction was not rheumatism; Spurgeon's receipt for a contented heart was never to chew pills, but to swallow the disagreeable and have done with it; Darwin's comfort was that he had never consciously done anything to gain applause; and Jefferson never ceased affirming his belief in the satisfying power of common daylight, common pleasures, and all the common relations of life. AT THIRTEENTH STROKE

By S. C. BULLETT.

Among the papers found by the lawyers of John Vereken, an old man who recently died, was the following:

I am about to write down things at which most men will scoff, but they are true, and I pray God that no one will have to go through what I have endured for thirty years. This is the story of my life.

I, John Vereken, was born in the year 1808, in Yorkshire. My father, Squire Vereken, was a kind and indulgent man, but I noticed that at intervals, a moroseness came over him and lasted for two or three days. I often wondered at these fits of melancholy, but I dared not ask my father, and he vouchsafed no explanation. My mother I never knew. She died when I was born. Would to God that I, too, had followed her.

I passed the usual uneventful life of the country squire's son until I was twenty years old, and then, as is only human, I fell in love.

My love was returned and the happiest moment of my life was when Lucy Derrick promised to become my wife.

Later I was sitting at the drawing-room fire thinking of Lucy, when a servant entered the room and said my father wanted to see me. He had taken suddenly ill and was in his bedroom.

I arose hastily and started for the room, for this was the first intimation I had had of his illness. Just as I opened the door, I heard a heavy booming sound like some immense church bell tolling for a funeral. The sound was so uncanny that I started and gave a quick glance around me. My eyes fell upon my father's features and I never saw such a change in any one as had taken place in his face. In place of the usual calm expression, his face was so distorted that I could scarcely recognize him.

I hastily ran to his side and forced some brandy through his clenched teeth. This seemed to revive him somewhat, and he motioned me to open the drawer of his secretary. I did so and found a paper addressed to myself. He glanced at it and made a feeble effort to nod his head. The next moment his whole body shook with convulsions. He half rose from the bed, gasped and fell back. My father was dead.

The paper was still in my hand, and, mechanically, I unfolded it. This is what I read:

"To my son, John Vereken:—I address these words to you, as it were, from the grave, and I trust that you will forgive my great sin. There is a curse in our family and I, poor, weak, fool, have transmitted it to you. You no doubt, heard the sound of the bell when I died. I will tell you the story of it.

"Your great-grandfather—my grandfather—was of a generous but hasty nature. He was quick to strike, and as quick to repent of the blow. His greatest friend was Richard Bassman, whose family died with him. My grandfather loved Richard as a brother. They were always together. But one day they quarreled and Richard Bassman was shot by my grandfather. He died instantly. My grandfather was so struck with horror at the deed that he tried to kill himself, but friends prevented the act. Richard Bassman was hurled the next day, and as the body was being carried to the grave, the bell in the church tolled out his years. It has tolled 12 times, and the sexton pulled the rope for the thirteenth stroke. The bell gave forth a booming sound and breaking loose from its fastenings, fell to the ground. My grandfather had been deeply affected by the tolling of the bell. At each stroke he was seen to shudder. Then came that fatal thirteenth stroke. His face grew livid and such an expression of unutterable horror came over it that everyone who saw him shuddered. His great form swayed and fell to the ground dead.

"The curse is in the family, transmitted from father to son. We must hear that terrible noise 13 times—sometimes closely connected sometimes at intervals of years. At the thirteenth stroke comes death. When I hear it the last time, you shall hear it first, and the curse will be upon you.

"My son, it is my earnest plea that you let our accursed race die with you. My father implored me never to marry and I resolved to follow his request, but I met the woman I loved and I fell. Will you be stronger than I? Already the bell tolled 12 times and I feel that my end is near. My son, forgive me, and heed my admonition. Do not transmit this curse to another, for it will cause your loved ones untold misery."

The next day I told Lucy all. I never saw her again for I knew that should I look upon her dear face, my resolution would vanish and I would sin as my father had done before me. She died six months later—of a broken heart.

This is my story. Thirty years have passed since that fearful night when I looked upon the dead face of my father and read the paper that sealed my doom. I am an old man. I have heard the bell toll 12 times and I feel that my end is near. My son, forgive me, and heed my admonition. Do not transmit this curse to another, for it will cause your loved ones untold misery.

Many a time have I been in communication with Lucy, and I know that she waits for me, and—

SEEK FOR GOLD WITH MAGNET

Speculators Believe They Have a Chance to Recover Treasure Sunk in Ocean.

Electro-magnetism is to be employed in a novel manner to recover gold from the bottom of the Pacific ocean. It is seriously announced that an expedition from San Francisco will attempt by means of a magnet to raise an iron chest which contains $85,000 in gold ingots from the bottom of the bay off Angel island. The safe was dropped from the hold of the steamer Corcoran, which was rammed and sunk in a collision with the steamer Seminole in a dense fog some months ago. When the vessels parted, following the collision, a section of the hold of the Corcoran broke through and the cargo sank. The huge iron chest proved very difficult to find, but it has been definitely located.

A portion is covered with drifted sands, and it is claimed that the ordinary methods of salvage would be unable to lift it. A huge magnet is therefore being constructed so that, with a generation of electricity on board ship, the enormous lifting power of the magnet will be exerted, which, it is anticipated, will drag the precious cargo to the surface.

Hope Pearl the Largest.

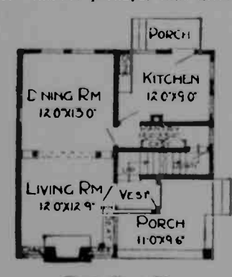
An auction sale of pearls, which had one of the most remarkable sequels on record, was that of the collection of the late Bishop Rubies of Hungary. Among other objects a handsome saber pouch was offered of the style worn by the Hungarian Hussars. It was of green silk and richly embroidered with hundreds of pearls of varying sizes. After keen competition this pouch was sold to Prince Esterhazy for 13,500 crowns. Some time after the sale, however, a letter from the late bishop was found containing the statement that he had borrowed the ornament from the jewel room of Princess Esterhazy. Naturally the prince was not called upon to pay the amount of his bid.

THE AMERICAN HOME

WILLIAM A. RADFORD EDITOR

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 178 West Jackson boulevard, Chicago, Ill., and only enclose two-cent stamp for reply.

Real estate dealers and speculative builders in the larger cities and suburban towns have long realized that every dollar spent in making more attractive the interior of the houses that they offer will come back ten-fold in the increased selling price that can be obtained or the larger rental that can be asked.

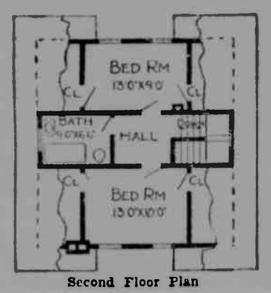


One may say that he is building a house for himself, that he has no intention of selling, but expects to live in the house for the rest of his life, and do without the frills if only the house is big enough to accommodate the actual needs. What, therefore, is the necessity of considering selling or rental value?

There is an old and very true proverb, that "Man proposes, but God disposes;" and though a man may be building a home, circumstances may in time arise that make the sale or renting of the house imperative, and every feature that adds to its selling or rental value will be doubly appreciated. Death may make it necessary to sell the house in order to settle the estate. Business reasons that cannot be foreseen often compel a man, much against his inclinations, to move to some distant part of the country; and I have found out by personal experience that there is nothing more unsatisfactory as an investment than real estate which is so far away that the owner cannot see for himself whether repairs asked for by the tenant are really needed or not, but must be compelled to depend upon the word of the real estate agent, whose interests seem often to be rather with the tenant than with the landlord. At such a time, the owner realizes that anything which by catching the eye and the fancy of the prospective purchaser makes a house sell more readily is something decidedly to his advantage.

The man who is compelled to borrow money in order to build his house, usually endeavors to keep the sum that he borrows down to the lowest possible notch, and will cut down wherever he can in order to accomplish this object. But it is possible to carry this pruning too far. To the man unfamiliar with the cost of building, the things which appear to be most expensive are those items of interior finish and decoration which add the touch of elegance and refinement to the house. For the sake of saving from $100 to $500—and often nearer the former figure than the latter—he will omit such items as fireplaces, mantels, built-in china closets or attractive stair finish.

He thinks, perhaps, that after the mortgage has been paid off he will add these features that he has omitted, but he forgets that it will cost very much more to add them later than to put them in at the time of building; to say nothing of the fact that those things which we put off until another time are very apt to be left undone.



Firat Floor Plan.

It would be far wiser to cut down in some of the hidden features that he may regard as essential, than to omit those which show upon the surface and which make the difference between a box-like barracks and a home. When you stop to figure the matter out, the two or three hundred dollars additional which a man will have to borrow in order to include the items that will make his home attractive will at most add only $18 or $20 a year to the interest charges he will have to pay, while they will add fully a thousand dollars to the price he can realize for the home, or $5 a month—perhaps more—to the amount of rent he could get for it.

Attractive wall papers, while adding much to the selling value of the house that is erected as a real estate speculation, especially when chosen with good taste and artistic feeling that is now possible to command—even with the low-cost papers—can be better left for the future than any other item which the home builder needs to consider. Wall paper must be renewed every few years at least, and the paperhangers are no more objectionable to have about the house than the scrub women who seem to be an inevitable part of the spring and fall house cleaning.

Gas or electric fixtures are another item that can, if necessary, be postponed till some time in the future, provided the house is piped or wired for them, because there is then no need for expensive or disturbing mechanical work in placing them in position; but it is the poorest kind of economy to omit the necessary piping or wiring—according to the custom in the locality—or both in those towns where both gas and electricity are installed.

Second Floor Plan

But those features which are built into the house and which form an essential part of the construction or the finish should never be put off until a more convenient season, because the mechanical difficulty and the expense of adding them later will prevent them from ever being put in. The seat at the bottom of the stairs, which forms a part of the paneling should be built at the same time the stairs are, and made an essential feature of the design; and the same thing is true of the built-in china closet in the dining room.

The design illustrated herewith is an excellent example of the small house equipped with all the attractive little features which are so much appreciated by the housewife and in such demand by those who are looking to purchase a home, but which, at the same time, do not cost very much when provided for in the original plans and put in at the same time the rest of the work is done. Notice, for instance, the finely located fireplace with built-in book cases on each side and built-in seat. The columns opening between living room and dining room are also an attractive feature, adding greatly to the charm of the place. A suitable space is reserved in the dining room along the inside wall for a built-in sideboard, if desired.

A desirable feature of this design is the arrangement of the stair hall separated from the rooms of the first floor. This is the way it should be, in case it is ever desired to rent a room, since the rooms on the second floor are directly accessible from the front entrance without disturbing anyone on the first floor.

The economy of this design may be seen from the fact that the house has been built as illustrated, using all first class materials, for $2,500. The width of the house is 28 feet, the length 25 feet 6 inches. There are three rooms on the first floor, and two rooms on the second floor, besides bathroom, large clothes closets, etc. The exterior appearance of this house is attractive and up-to-date.

One Leg in Good Working Order.

The Wilson County Citizen tells of a Fredonia doctor who played a joke on himself the other day. One of his youthful patients is slowly recovering from an attack of infantile paralysis and has the complete use of one leg, although the other propeller is almost helpless. The doctor was testing the injured member and told the lad to see if he could kick him, the medico, with the weak leg when the M. D. tapped the knee, the object being to find if the patient had gained control of the limb. But when the physician tapped the boy on the knee the youngster forgot instructions and lammed the doctor squarely on the chin with his good foot, the physician almost taking the count.—Kansas City Star.

How Shaving Originated.

The comparative advantages and propriety of shaving the face and of permitting the beard to grow are not easy to determine. On the side of non-shaving it has been argued that nature must have bestowed beards on men for the purpose of being worn, and that, as Tertullian affirmed, it was "blasphemy against the face to reject it altogether."

PROFITABLE METHOD OF TURKEY RAISING

Bronze Turkeys—The most admired of all varieties on the Market.

(By ANNA GALGHER)

Turkey raising is one of the easiest things ever tried, as well as the most paying industry for a woman.

If you wish to try out the business, never allow old turkeys to lay out, but watch them and see that the eggs are gathered every night.

To keep them laying in the same place, put two or three glass nest eggs in the nest on the sly, and never let the turkeys see you near the nests nor do not disturb them while on the nest.

A hen turkey will lay from 14 to 20 eggs before getting broody, and if when she does sit upon the nest all day, you can catch her late at night, and confine in an outbuilding for a week or so with plenty of good food, water and grit, she will go back to laying again soon after being liberated and lay as many more eggs.

The first eggs laid can be set under a common mother hen. Ten eggs to a hen, and she will do quite as well as if the turkey mother was doing the job herself.

By the time the turkey hen gets broody a second time after being confined and fed, she will have become quite tame, and can be set in some safe place, where wild animals, rats, etc., can not trouble her.

Every morning when she is setting go and feed her with corn meal wet with hot water, and put a pan of clean water handy.

When she hatches have a rain-proof coop, somewhere near a tree or clump of shrubbery to provide shelter from the hot sun. The hens which hatched turkeys should be fed and cared for five times daily for about three weeks.

Never feed them under the coops, but spread the food on a clean board near enough to the coop, so that the mother can reach through and eat with her little ones.

The first meal should be given after 24 hours, and should consist of corn meal, boiled for half an hour, finely broken egg-shells and eggs that have been boiled at least 20 minutes—an egg boiled five minutes will be soggy and indigestible, but if boiled half an hour will be mealy and tender.

Never allow either sour milk or uncooked corn meal to be fed, sour milk will cause diarrhea, and sickness, raw corn meal will swell in their stomachs, and cause indigestion.

If plenty of sour milk is at hand, make into Dutch cheese. This is very good if fed once or twice a week.

Ground bone and coarse, clean sand should be added to the cooked meal, as when they are confined they are unable to obtain enough grit.

Meat scraps are good, but sweet milk is something of a substitute, as it contains animal food.

I supply my young chickens and turkeys with angle worms dug up in the chick yard and garden.

When turkeys are six weeks old they can take a little wheat, rye or cracked corn, and the mother can be let out of the coop after the dew is off.

Drive her back to the coop at night before she wanders off and settles down for the night and give her a good supper if she does not come of her own accord. After a few days she will usually be found near the coop waiting for her evening meal.

Never set the coops containing hens with chickens anywhere in reach of those with little turkeys, as a hen with chickens will always kill turkeys, as also will a hen with turkeys kill chickens.

The coops should be cleaned out each morning. Take a long stick and get down where you can see plainly, scrape out all droppings, and sprinkle sulphur freely around also among the feathers of both the mother and the brood.

The eggs from three hen turkeys ought to produce 60 turkeys. What is more profitable?

A Fine Flock of Turkeys.

STARTING PLACE OF POULTRY SUCCESS

Harder Job Making Money With Hens Than Running Grocery —Cleanliness Essential.

(By E. S. MILLER)

The man who tries to make anything out of a poor flock of hens has a worse job than making bricks without straw.

The starting place of success with poultry is with the man. If you think "anybody can make money with hens" you have something yet to learn. It is a harder job than running a grocery successfully, and thousands of men have found out that that is worse than running for president.

After you have found your man, or developed him out of your own material get the right kind of hens. What are they? The hens you like best, the hens that are from a laying strain, the hens that lay white eggs.

Then give them a good place to live. The men who have made a go of poultry have learned that cleanliness is an absolute essential. You will have to learn that too. It sounds cheap; but if you think it is, try it a single season. Cleanliness is the costliest thing about the poultry business.

After that, good pure food stands high. There is an old notion that anything is good enough for a hen to eat. It isn't. Nothing but the best and purest material ever should be put into an egg. There are men who can tell, or think they can, what kind of feed a hen has had just by the flavor of the egg she lays.

This may be carrying it pretty far; but there can be no doubt that it takes good food to produce good eggs. And that is the kind you would like if you were buying, isn't it? Of course. Then put yourself in the other man's place and think how he looks at it. Then never feed old, decayed back smelling feed of any kind.

After you get your eggs, sell them in the best possible market. You may have to hunt a spell for a good market. It will pay. Two or three cents a dozen more may be the mark between success and failure.

Never say fail. Stick to it. You can be a winner. Be one!

No more sitting hens this season. Before the chicks were of any size, along would come cold weather and cut them down. The prison pen is the place for every hen now that wants to sit.

The oftener you can sell your eggs these days the more apt you will be to hear folks you sell to say, "Those eggs I got of you were fine. Bring me some more."

The chances are that your birds will not get bugs and insects enough for meat, even when they are out on range, unless you give them now and then some. Same way with grit.

Soft-shelled eggs are a warning to you that the grit-box is running low. Streak it for the bag and give them some.

Old hens ought to be sorted out now and made ready for market as soon as they lay their litter out.

It doesn't make so much difference whether your hens are all marked up, according to the latest standard of poultry judging. What you want to know is, "How many eggs is that old hen laying now?" Judge her by that and live up to the result.

Inheritance of Milk Yield.

Records of Danish cows are submitted as proof that improvement in milk yield by breeding is not a gradual process, as has been supposed, but is inherited in Menndellan fashion; that is, if a daughter is not on an approximate equality with her dam as a milk producer she is either much higher or much lower.

Value of Sweet Clover.

Do you call sweet clover a weed? If you do you are mistaken. Sweet clover is one of the most valuable forage plants known. It makes a hay as good as that made from alfalfa. It restores depleted soil, it will grow in many places where alfalfa will not—and it is ideal bee pasture.

Pays to Thin Sheep.

It pays to thin fruit where the trees are loaded. The best way is by hand picking. Where trees are putting out too rank a growth of young fruit prune it back.

BRYAN'S DEMANDS BEFORE CARRANZA

Final Peace May Hang on His Ability to Control Villa.

THE JUNTA TAKES ACTION

Victorious Rebel General Told Treatment Of Foreigners Has Injured His Cause—Await Report From Consul.

Washington.—The acid test is being applied to General Venustiano Carranza. On the outcome probably hangs the question of final peace for Mexico.

Carranza has in his possession Bryan's demands that he intervene to restore order in Chihuahua City.

Carranza's failure to show that Villa is only a lieutenant who will obey orders will, in all probability, end the suggestion that Carranza is the one man who can be depended on to restore peace and order in Mexico when Huerta is eliminated.

Bryan's demands have received unexpected support from another source. The local Constitutionalist junta has wired to Villa independent of what ever action Carranza is taking.

The victorious revolutionary general has been plainly told that his action in evicting foreigners from their homes and exiling them from the country has injured his cause here.

Members of the junta here say that many of the charges brought against Villa are without foundation that most of the Spaniards exiled from Chihuahua City have been open sympathizers with the Huerta regime.

Await Report From Consul.

The Administration was admittedly worried about the latest development in the Mexican situation, and is waiting anxiously for the report of the American Consul at Chihuahua.

When the various Powers agreed to await the pleasure of this Government and not interfere in Mexico to protect their own subjects and their property the State Department agreed to protect all foreigners.

This they have been able to do up to the present, but should Villa prove obdurate in this instance a new problem will be presented which would bring intervention far too close for comfort.

TO ORGANIZE INVESTORS.

New York Chamber Of Commerce To Act On Plan.

New York.—Action on the plan of Herbert A. Schofiel, member of J. S. Bache & Co., to organize investors all over the country is expected to be taken on December 30, when the executive committee of the Chamber of Commerce meets. Mr. Schofiel, speaking of the favor with which his plan is meeting, said: "I am being swamped with letters from all parts of the country commending the plan, and I believe public clamor for it is so great that it will have to be indorsed."

HEAVY SENTENCE FOR LEE

Navy Quartermaster Convicted Of Stealing Government Property.

Norfolk, Va.—Former Chief Quartermaster James P. Lee, arrested several months ago in connection with the thefts of Government property from the navy yard, was convicted by general courtmartial. He was sentenced to a year's confinement at hard labor, to be reduced to the rating of ordinary seaman, to lose all pay which may be due him, except prison expenses, and at the expiration of his sentence to be dishonorably discharged from the service.

EGG BOYCOTT SUCCESSFUL

Price In Kansas City Drops To Women's League Figure.

Kansas City, Mo.—An egg boycott declared 10 days ago at a mass meeting of women's organizations of Kansas City was lifted. Storage eggs were selling at 40 cents at the time the boycott was started. They are now retailing at 30 to 31 cents. "Of course, if the prices go up again we will cease using eggs," said Mrs. W. O. Church, president of the Housewives' League, "but as long as the market is down we need not deny ourselves."

President Of New York Aldermen To Keep Promise.

New York.—Declaring that when he accepted the nomination for president of the Board of Aldermen he was aware of the salary and willing to give his full time to it without any increase, George McAneny has issued a statement saying that he would ask the Board of Aldermen not to pass a resolution to increase the pay of the office from $5,000 to $10,000.

MOTHER AND TWO GIRLS BURNED

Three Other Persons Injured In Gotham Tenement Fire.

New York.—A mother and her two small children were burned to death and three other persons slightly injured in a fire which swept through an East Side tenement house. Twenty men, women and children who had been cut off from escape were carried out by firemen. The dead are: Mrs. Josephine Antigini, 39 years old; Rosa Antigini, 5 years old; Adeline Antigini, 2 years old.

TOO STRONG FOR UTTERANCE

Iracible Old Salt Had Many Things He Would Like to Declare, But Not at That Time.

Mrs. Van Alen Thompson, whose entry into the country gave her much difficulty with the customs officials, was recounting her experiences to a few friend in Boston. She said:

"It was very unpleasant, but not the least unpleasant part was the attitude of the customs officials. I hope they don't intend to be as rude as they appear to the returned traveler.

"But, continued Mrs. Thompson, philosophically, 'I suppose it would be difficult to be popular as a customs inspector. Everybody dislikes these poor men. Everybody feels towards them like the old skipper.

"This skipper, after undergoing several hours of suspicious cross-questioning from two inspectors regarding his cargo, was at last leaving the wharf, when a young official, unaware of his previous grilling, accosted him.

"'Have you anything to declare, sir?' he demanded sharply.

"Furious, the old skipper glared at the young man and shouted:

"'Yes, young man, I've a good deal to declare, but I'd be ashamed to say it before a boy like you. You're too young to hear what I would like to declare!'"

THE RIGHT SOAP FOR BABY'S SKIN

In the care of baby's skin and hair, Cuticura Soap is the mother's favorite. Not only is it unrivaled in purity and refreshing fragrance, but its gentle emollient properties are usually sufficient to allay minor irritations, remove redness, roughness and chafing, soothe sensitive conditions, and promote skin and hair health generally. Assisted by Cuticura Ointment, it is most valuable in the treatment of eczemas, rashes and itching, burning infantile eruptions. Cuticura Soap wears to a wafer, often outlasting several cakes of ordinary soap and making its use most economical.

How One Pastor Built Church.

Last winter one of the strong churches of Los Angeles extended Rev. W. H. Sheffer of Memphis, Tenn., a call to become their pastor, and after considering all sides of the question he decided to accept the call, relates the Christian Herald. So he convened his official board, placed before them his resignation and asked to be released. His board being made up of tactful business men, and knowing that their pastor had tried for years to build a new church, requested him to hold the resignation in abeyance for a week, which he did. Then the board got busy, bought a new site for a church and paid $27,000 for it and reported to the church the following Sunday that they would build a new church on it at once if their pastor would consent to remain with them. He wanted another week and then said to his church: "I will stay with you if you will subscribe $15,000 for the new church at once." They took him at his word, and at that service subscribed $54,000 for the new building. It goes without saying that his church is very happy over his decision to stay with them.

THURSDAY. DECEMBER 25. 1913.

THE story of Christmas is the story of human sacrifice.

The charm of Christmas is the charm of generosity.

Sacrifice and generosity go hand in hand in the world-wide willingness of all mankind to give at Christmas time.

WE wish to every reader of The Republican a Merry Christmas. May this be a day of great joy and happiness to each and all of you. May its blessed, happy memories continue with you all through the coming year. May today be full of sunshine and comfort to you, and at its close may you realize the great truth proclaimed 1913 years ago, "For unto you is born this day a Saviour which is Christ the Lord.

IN the enjoyment and pleasures of this the greatest holiday of the Nations do not forget the less fortunate ones. Scatter blessings throughout the day. A kind word or deed may brighten some life and start some one on a happier and more successful life. Do not forget the poor, the friendless, the unfortunate. As opportunity affords do all the good you can, to as many as you can and thus add to your own happiness.

"OF the making of laws there is no end" From all indications there will be something doing at the approaching session of the legislature. Senator Lee and friends, ex-State Senator Gorman and his followers and other Democratic politicians all over the State are formulating bills to be presented to the legislature. If the Democratic legislature of this State "makes as bad a mess of it," as the Democratic Congress has done, may the good Lord pity the State.

TO the ministers who have charge of the churches and congregations; to the superintendents, officers and teachers of the Sunday schools; to the officials and teachers of the public schools; to the church members and congregations; to the Sabbath and public school scholars throughout the county The Republican wishes a Merry Christmas. To the business men, to the farmers, to the lumbermen, to the miners, to the day laborer, and to the noble women of Garrett county, we wish you one and all a delightful, restful, enjoyable Christmas day, with all its blessings and happiness. To those who have passed through affliction, those who have drunken from the cup of sorrow, those who have suffered loss of property, may this prove to each of you a day of bright, warm sunshine, of great hope and sweet peace and may He whose birth we celebrate speak that word which shall bring comfort and inspiration to your soul.

ARE you a great, big, healthy, jolly fellow, anxious to have something of an old time Christmas like they had down home when you were a boy? Wouldn't you like to be a boy again just for Christmas Day? You can't be a boy again, but you can get some of the same old thrills if you decide to be a Big Brother to some one else. That's your chance.

There is joy in the thought of giving Christmas cheer to the hundreds of children who will have nothing or scarcely anything at Christmas unless you do remember them.

Think what a delight you get by surprising someone with your gifts. You can give most surprise by giving to some children you never knew before. You can make their hearts leap with joy, and with a very small expenditure. Then your heart will leap too.

The typical "good fellow," in the real sense of the word, is the man who seeks to make the Christmas of some poor child a happy one.

Suppose you try this plan today and see if it is not "more blessed to give than to receive."

NOTWITHSTANDING the fact that we issued a ten page paper last week we had to carry over to this week's paper nearly two columns of reading matter, including the newsy letter from Bittinger. We appreciate the liberal demand that the wide-awake business men of Oakland make upon our columns. We also appreciate the pleasant words received from our subscribers who are "greatly enjoying the splendid paper" we are printing each week. Every page is full of interest and up-to-date. It is a pleasure to know that we are printing a paper that is enjoyed by the people, as attested by our growing subscription list. We want to greatly enlarge our subscription list within the next few months. Won't you help us do so? We would very much appreciate your assistance in this work. After you have read this week's paper please hand it to a neighbor and let him see how much he is missing by not being a subscriber of The Republican.

The Republican is the leading newspaper of Garrett county.

A WORD OF COMFORT.

In some homes today there may be a feeling of lonesomeness because of the vacant chair around the family circle. Death comes and none can hinder. Yet He who was born in Bethlehem's stable and died on Calvary's cross, "a man of sorrow" and "acquainted with grief," has said, "Thy brother shall live again." This is His day. The anniversary of His birth. As He arose from the grave in victory so will all who enter the silent tomb come forth and "be forever with the Lord." Look not at the vacant chair, but cast your eyes heavenward, to that city of many mansions, where all the followers of Christ, whose birth we celebrate today, will meet ere long—meet to part no more. What blessed reunions there will be.

HAVE you paid your taxes for 1910 1911 and 1912? If not, look at tax sales advertised in The Republican this week. You may find a surprise. We hope not. With two ex-treasurers trying to close up their accounts it will not be wise to neglect paying taxes in arrear. This is your last week to save costs.

PRESIDENT WILSON is going to take a three weeks' vacation down in Mississippi. He certainly made his Congress do his bidding during the nine months it was in session. They too, will take a much needed rest, consequently the country at large will have a rest. It will be a great three week's for us all.

THIS is our Christmas offering to the patrons of The Republican—a twelve page paper. A paper which we feel assured will please our subscribers, as they read the very interesting matter found on the several pages. It is a paper for the family, prepared for each member of the family circle. Do you wonder that the subscription list of the Republican is growing larger each week? How can it be otherwise, when we furnish you such an excellent paper. Tell your neighbors about it..

The saloon keepers of Mount Savage, Allegany county, held a meeting and unanimously decided in recognition of the religious significance of the day they will close the saloons on Christmas day. —Cumberland News.

Wouldn't it be a great blessing to this community if the saloon keepers of Oakland would do as generous and noble act as this? The number of happy homes would be largely increased and many a sad wife and poor child would have a joyful day. We wish it might be so.

THE Federal bureau of education, in a report just made public, urges that strong courses of study of great musical literature be offered in the high schools of the country. Such courses, it is declared, could be made of inestimable value to students. Musical appreciation says the report, is particularly appropriate for the third and fourth year students. The courses should include the study of musical history, lives of famous musicians, forms of musical composition, aesthetics of music, etc.

Daniel Warn, of Avilton, and Gilead Broadwater, of Grantsville, and both of Garrett county, held a conference in front of the Times Frostburg office and agreed that the State should complete next year the 14 miles of National pike that needs rebuilding.—Frostburg correspondent of the Cumberland Times.

Not only are the two gentleman named above agreed on this subject, but also hundreds of other citizens of Garrett county, of Allegany county, Md., and of Somerset county, Pa. It is a disgrace to the State of Maryland that the road has not been completed before this, and a great loss to Garrett county.

WITHOUT doubt the merchants of Oakland appreciate the generous patronage given them during the past days by the loyal citizens of this county, who stood by their home store in the purchase of their holiday goods. That the merchants deserved this patronage no one will question. They purchase the produce raised on the farm; they extend credit to the farmer and his family when necessary. The mail order houses demand the cash with every order; they do not buy any produce either for cash or trade. When you have a church to build they do not contribute one cent to the building fund. When the house of your neighbor is consumed by fire and he loses everything, the mail order houses offer no relief or sympathy, but your home merchant is ever ready to come to your assistance. Is not this true? Do not the facts confirm these statements? Stand by your home merchants and they will stand by you.

THERE is a little dark spot on the legislative horizon that is causing the politicans some worry. It is the fact that Blair Lee, although invited by Gorman to be a member, or to name a member, of the "steering" committee, has refused to comply with the request. And thereby hangs a tale, according to organization politicians. These political leaders assert that Lee entertains the opinion that to him and not to Gorman should have assigned the work of naming the committee to draft the party bills.

It is stated that when Lee realized that he had been left out of the main show he proceeded to organized a side show of his own, which is now on in full blast with legislative reforms as the main idea. It is asserted that Lee has gone ahead on his own hook in order that he may have a rallying point for his friends, a stepping stone to other plans, including possibly an organization of the house and senate, and possibly, again, to congressional nominations next year and state nominations two years hence.

It is because of Lee's refusal to cooperate with the regular committee and because of activites along his new lines the leaders see trouble coming to them during the legislative session.

CORPORATION

A Temperance Talk to Voters

BY JASON KEP

A corporation is a stock company. A stock company is composed ot a number of individuals who have joined forces to do business on a scale too large for the individual pocket book. Now each share of stock in the corporation entitles the holder to one vote in the election of officers.

If the holder of the shares of stock are careful they will elect efficient officers and the business will flourish and all will be happy, for the dividends will be all that could be desired. If a majority of the stockholders are negligent and careless, do not attend the meetings and vote their stock, the officers will be inefficient or perhaps criminal, and it would require a magnifying glass to discover dividends if any and great is the woe thereof.

Now the county and State are only corporations of larger size, and you, Mr. Voter, are a stock holder and are responsible for welfare just the same as in your indivual factory.

If you vote your individal share of stock for right and justice you will have a good clean honest government.

If you are careless and do not vote for clean honest men, then the government will be corrupt and pitfalls and temptations will be constantly before your children.

The prosperity and happiness of the community depends upon you voters, and you can not shrink the responsibility. You cannot be neutral. You are either for or against good government. If you neglect to vote or if you vote for the Devil because he is on your party ticket, you are not a good citizen, and the quicker you discover this fact the better it will be for the community.

It is not the honest men of any party who are dangerous but the dishonest.

Why is there so many boodlers and grafters? Because you vote for party, regardless.

You know, the Liquor people take an active part in politics and by money promises and threats, debauch and intimidate our public servants, you know the saloons are killing off 152,000 of our citizens each year.

War is terrible but the average number killed in our great civil war was 49,000 a year.

You know that 50 per cent. of our paupers, 55 per cent. of our insane, 85 per cent. of our criminal courts work and 90 per cent of our murders and suicides are caused by drink. You know it increases our taxes. You know it has a corrupting and dimoralizing influence upon the community.

And knowing all this, could you pick out your ballott from a pile of saloon keepers votes?

"They were both rum votes,
And sanctioned the license plan;
The one was cast by a Brewer,
And one by a Sunday School man.
You can easily pick him out. Just take a look around and don't forget the man under your own hat.

"He's true to his church, to his party he's truer."

He talks for the Lord, but he votes for the Brewer,

He votes for the Brewer every time."

As a business proposition it is absolutly necessary to close the saloons and remove as far as possible, the temptations and pitfalls from before our children, who shortly will have full charge of the government.

Alcohol is dangerous to take liberties with. You would not permit dynamite or nitro-glycerine around where you were raising your children. Yet they could only destroy the body, while alcohol not only destroys the body but what about the soul?

Mr. Careless Voter, yes criminal voter, don't you think you will have plenty to answer for on general principles, without that added burden? As a business proposition, you would not put a saloon in your factory to entice your help to get drunk and neglect your business. Now, if the smaller corporation could not afford to have a saloon then how can you figure that it would pay to have a saloon in your larger corporation?

Think it over. If we can get you to thinking we have added one more worker and voter to the temperance ranks.

Give your conscience a little physical culture.

JASON KEP.

THE New York World says: Government ownership of telegraph and telephone lines is no policy of the Democratic party. It never was a policy of the Democratic party.

The Postmaster General's fantastic scheme for doubling the national debt, doubling the army of Federal officeholders and plunging the country into an ill considered Socialistic experiment must be regarded as the expression of Mr. Burleson's private opinion.

The World has extensive business relations with the Postoffic Department. It is one of the principal patrons of the telegraph companies and the telephone company. We can assure Mr. Burleson that if the telegraph and telephone service that we pay for was as incompetent and unsatisfactory as the postal service that we pay for, it would be very difficult indeed to print a great newspaper. We can further assure him that it will be a sorry day for this country if intelligent American sentiment ever countenances the placing of all avenues and channels of written and spoken communication under the autocratical control of a partisan, political Postoffice Department

Coming from a Democratic newspaper that is a pretty severe showing up of one of Mr. Wilson's cabinet. Wonder what the World thinks of Congressman Lewis scheme for government ownership of all telephone lines?

WHEN SANTA CLAUS CRIES "FORWARD MARCH!"

By EARLE HOOKER EATON

Copyright, 1913, by American Press Association.

WHEN Santa Claus cries "Forward march!"
And smiles his Christmas smile
The dollies promptly form a line
And then in single file

THEY march to Santa's reindeer shed,
Too serious far for play,
Where they break ranks and get aboard
The good old saint's big sleigh.

HIS line of march is o'er the land,
And when the dollies part
Each marches in and camps right out
In some wee girl's big heart!

ON THE THIRD CHRISTMAS

By MARION F. RITTENHOUSE

[Copyright, 1913, by American Press Association.]

"YOU are earlier than necessary," remarked Aunt Elise as I appeared at 10:30 on the night of the third Christmas, "for we do not sit in the workroom for at least fifteen minutes, and I feel sure that you will not find the hiding place, and if it is not found you cannot marry Elsie, and if you are not to marry Elsie it is not wise for you to see so much of each other." And Elsie's welcoming kiss was strongly tinctured with reproach. Not liking the reproachful flavor, I immediately kissed Elsie to dissipate the taste.

Then I displayed the gift I had brought, and Aunt Elise shook her head reprovingly, even as she gloated over the solitaire that I slipped on Elsie's white hand.

"You would better have saved your money. Remember, this is the third Christmas, and I don't believe you will find the hiding place."

"Then we will be married right away," I said. "Please bear in mind I now have a salary with which to propitiate the wolf when he howls at our door."

"And so have I, thanks to dear old uncle!" cried Elsie.

Aunt Elise, by the way, is neither Elsie's aunt nor mine. Elsie and I are, or, rather, were, the wards of Aunt Elise's brother, Judge Breen, who died more than three years ago, leaving the old Breen home to Aunt Elise, who had a modest income of her own, and the remainder to Elsie and me conditionally, the conditions being set forth in the letter which Lawyer Patterson, Judge Breen's lifelong friend, whom he had appointed executor of his will, handed to us during the week following his death. The letter ran:

My Dear Irresponsible Children—I have, as Mr. Patterson will tell you, converted my entire estate, with the exception of the old home, into money, which I wish you, Gilbert and Elsie, to share equally. I have this money put away for you. It becomes yours at the moment that you find it.

Now, I will remind you that I have always earnestly deplored the idle, frivolous pursuits which have occupied you and desired you both to master some useful occupation, but you have temporized and fribbled away the time, and thus I have allowed you to grow up without the ability to earn a penny.

Elsie, your artistic daubs and, Gilbert, your long winded poems are all very well for a harmless pastime, but you can neither eat, drink nor wear them. Moreover, it is a disgrace for any ablebodied person to be without the knowledge of some useful vocation.

I suppose that I am to blame for not training the artistic temperament out of you, but I loved you both far too well to exact obedience from you. I now am determined to atone for my weakness as far as lies within my power. I have decided that you must both acquire a vocation and have chosen my own, telegraphy, for you. My best and happiest days were spent in a lonely little station in Arizona.

You are to master this thoroughly. No mere smattering will answer. You are to prove your ability by securing and acceptably filling positions. You are to begin your studies at once.

Then in memory of me I ask you both to join your Aunt Elise in a quarter of an hour's vigil in my workroom on Christmas night. I wish my inventions to remain there untouched. I also wish you to wind and start the big clock which I have just finished. It will run for the brief time that I ask you to keep tryst with my memory in the workroom where I have spent so many, many happy hours.

If after following my instructions you do not find your inheritance, which I intend to come to you as a Christmas gift, come again for the vigil on the second Christmas, and if you have not found it then return again on the third. If you have not found it on the third Christmas you will have forfeited your legacy and will had your knowledge of telegraphy most useful to provide bread and a reasonable amount of butter.

Do not under any circumstances tinker with the contents of my workroom once I wish to remain just as it is during the lifetime of your Aunt Elise.

You failed to obey me in life, but your disobedience after my death will be fraught with graver consequence, for unless you meet the requirements set forth here you will never know the whereabouts of your legacy. This letter is written with a heart full of love for my spoiled children. From UNCLE AMBROSE.

And now the time of the vigil of the third Christmas had arrived, and we knew no more about the hiding place of our inheritance than on the day that we received the letter. True, we had not followed his instructions in regard to telegraphy until very recently. It seemed so preposterous that merely mastering a vocation would aid in the unearthing of our legacies. So Elsie and I optimistically painted and poetized through the first year, serenely confident that the money would turn up without strenuous effort on our part.

On the first Christmas we wound the clock and sat expectantly through the fifteen minutes. Nothing happened. We were slightly disappointed, but not at all uneasy. Then during the next year between the intervals of pictures and poems we ransacked the old place from garret to cellar. Only a whole some fear of Aunt Elise's anger prevented our laying vandal hands upon that wretched clock and disemboweling it in our search for a clew to the hidden treasure. We met for our seance in the workroom without having so much as begun the study of telegraphy. Again we sat through the allotted time, listening to the eccentric, irregular ticking of the clock with no visible results, save that Aunt Elise caught a fearful cold.

"Gilbert," said Elsie soberly that night when we had adjourned to the cheery parlor, "do you know, I don't believe Uncle Gilbert had any money to leave. I think he had lost it and that was why he was so worried to think that we were not fitted to support ourselves. We disobeyed and disappointed him in life. Now let us atone as far as we may by obeying his last wishes. Gilbert, dear, let us learn telegraphy—not for the sake of the money, but because he wished it, because of what we owe him."

And so we mastered telegraphy. Elsie much more readily than I. We had been full fledged "brass pounders," with fairly lucrative positions for almost three months preceding the third Christmas. We were burstingly proud of our jobs—that's what we called 'em—and we felt that our dear old guardian had, in forcing upon us the gift of independence, bestowed upon us a treasure of greater value than the legacy for which we had hoped.

So with no further expectations or hopes concerning the hidden inheritance and with cheerful resignation to its loss we met in loving compliance with his request for our third and last vigil in his workroom, with his many inventions, which Aunt Elise kept carefully covered, looking like shrouded ghosts.

Aunt Elise alone of the trio seemed gloomy and despondent.

"If you don't find where the money is hidden tonight I suppose we would better plan for you to marry Percy Gaines, Elsie," she said as I stepped upon the table to wind the clock, or, rather, "crank" it, for its mechanism was set going by giving some dozen turns to a handle protruding from its left side—a handle not unlike that of an old fashioned coffee mill.

"But he sort of sniffles, and his socks and neckties are so shrill," protested Elsie, referring to Mr. Gaines.

"Well, then, there's old Mr. Binney," suggested Aunt Elise. "I've noticed that he is quite neutral in his dress."

"But he talks to himself and gesticulates frightfully with his walking stick," replied Elsie. "I should be afraid to get near enough to caress him, and, besides, I think he proposed to me during a brainstorm, and it would be taking an unfair advantage to accept. Don't you think him a wee bit daffy?" she asked me.

"He's so nutty, Aunt Elise," I solemnly asseverated, "that when he strolls about in his ancestral groves the squirrels pursue him."

"Dear me! How extraordinary!" exclaimed literal Aunt Elise.

"So, you see," observed Elsie, "after all, I had better marry Gilbert."

"I think so, too," I agreed. "You see, Aunt Elise, thanks to Uncle Ambrose, I can earn a living for my—" Here I broke off abruptly and stared, astounded, at that extraordinary clock. Elsie, with her dear little jaw sagging in sheer amazement, was staring too.

"What are you two gaping at?" demanded Aunt Elise in alarm. "Now, why do you stare like stuck pigs?" she queried a moment later, for Elsie and I sat as if spellbound listening.

We found ourselves listening to the now familiar staccato—tapping of a telegraph instrument. Clear and sharp through the invisible sounder came a message tapped by an unseen key, and mechanically—no, automatically—our dazed minds caught the message.

"Elsie and Gilbert, my idle girl and boy," ran the message, "Patterson has the money for you. Ask him for it tonight. It is my Christmas gift to you. Merry Christmas! God bless you both! Goodby!"

"The clock!" I gurgled. "It's in the clock! Listen!" For after an interval of hoarse, clucklike ticks the message was repeated.

"Now, why are you making such a fuss about that clock?" demanded Aunt Elise. "That clock never has had a sane, natural tick. It has always made a noise just like that."

And this was true. Twice before we had held our vigil in the workroom unheeding, while the faithful clock had patiently delivered the message which we failed to comprehend.

"There cannot possibly be a telegraph instrument in that clock," declared Elsie, "but there are little automatic transmitters with Morse alphabet records for students, you know."

"Elsie," I said after I had carefully examined the vitals of that blessed clock, "you certainly are the original Miss Nancy Know It All. There is an automatic telegraph transmitter in that clock. Here's the tape!"

Elsie eyed the coiled strip of paper tape with its perforations corresponding to the dots and dashes of the Morse alphabet with much interest.

"Now for Patterson," I interrupted. "I'll wager that he has been chuckling in his sleeve these past three years. I'm going to call him up this instant. I hope that I'll get to rouse him from his beauty sleep," I continued maliciously.

But in this I was disappointed, for he answered the phone promptly.

"This is Gilbert Ashcraft speaking," I began with much dignity. "Miss Elsie Martin and I would like definite information concerning the money bequeathed us by Ambrose Breen, which he left in your care."

There was a moment's silence, then a chuckle trilled melodiously over the telephone. "Say, young man," said Lawyer Patterson, "you're all right, and Miss Elsie too. Great scheme of Breen's, wasn't it? You'll find your bank books, deposit slips and other papers in the package that I left with your Aunt Elise yesterday. Merry Christmas! Good night, son."

And that's all. I believe, except that Elsie and I are married, and it is our present intention to "live happy ever afterward." We hold dear, wise old Uncle Ambrose in grateful memory, and we do not permit even that fat, spoiled rascal, Ambrose Breen Ashcraft, to tamper with that clock.

Santa Claus' Problem

By GRACE M'KINSTRY

ST. NICHOLAS! St. Nick, alas,
You have a hard time, don't you?
The gifts you used to make won't pass.
You'll have some new ones, won't you?
Cloth dolls are awful! They hold germs!
Bright colored books are tawdry
And spoil the taste, our age affirms,
Of Reginald and Audrey.
Toy animals are poorly made,
So may teach nature faking.
Of colored candy we're afraid—
St. Nick, what are you making?

Turkey Displaces the Peacock.

The Christmas turkey has displaced the famous roasted peacock as the most desirable dish for the Yuletide dinner. Two or three hundred years ago, in Merry England, each family sought to obtain the largest peacock for the Christmas dinner. A boar's head was another popular dish in those days. The table was usually decorated with the brightest plumage of the peacock.

TRY THIS EXPERIMENT.

SUPPOSE all grownup people were to say to one another: "This year instead of exchanging presents let us club together and give out presents to poor children who will not otherwise have any Christmas. There are hundreds of them somewhere. If we do not know of such a child let us give our present to a hospital for children or a home for the aged, for the blind, for the feeble minded or incurables. Why could not we try this as an experiment and see what the result would be?"

Radium as a Christmas Gift.

Particles of radium have probably formed the smallest Christmas gifts. In order that the recipients could not complain of having received a cheap present this fad developed and was popular in English society circles soon after the discovery of the metal. To give radium in this way costs from $10 to $50, the outfit necessary there for consisting of a spinthariscope and a tiny speck of the new metal hardly big enough to be seen with the naked eye.

Fate's Christmas Trick

by WILLIS HAWKINS

[Copyright, 1913, by American Press Association.]

IT ain't for mortal man to know
The ways of Providence, an so
I merely say it seems as though
It wan't exac'ly fair
When Cupid, with his burnin darts,
Has lighted up two lovin hearts
For Fate, with her bamboozlin arts,
To separate the pair.

Now, there was Cyrus Allen's case.
When he had come within an ace
Of bein' winner in the race
For Kitty Warren's hand
He stubbed his mind, as you might say,
Upon a shadow, so that they
Were parted in the very way
Deceivin' Fate had planned.

It all begun when Kitty said
She wished she had a plaster head
Of Byron, for she'd read an' read
The pieces that he writ.
So, Christmas mornin, here it came,
For Cyrus, with his heart aflame,
Had bought the bust an' sent the same
Anonymous to Kit.

That night he meant to tell his mind,
But Fate had fixed it so's he'd find
Two shadows on her window blind
That he misunderstood.
"That's her an' Nathan Black," he said,
"An she's a-strokin' of his head."
So, broken hearted, Cyrus fled
An' quit the town for good.

It hed a' had the sense to wait
He'd soon a' knowed it wasn't Nate,
But only flyron's plaster pate
That Kitty was caressin,
For she was sure it came from Cy,
An' that's the very reason why
She fondled of it on the sly,
With all her heart confessin'.

PECULIARITIES OF ANIMALS

Tortoises and turtles have no teeth.

Both mandibles of the parrot's beak are movables, but most birds are able to move only one.

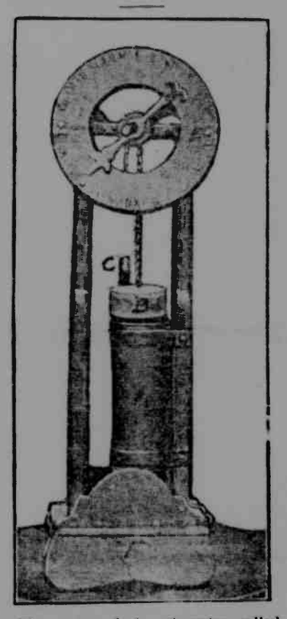
The horse has no eyebrows. The appearance of much white in the eye of a horse indicates a vicious nature.

The stork is partial to kittens as an article of food, and the cats reciprocate by a love for young storks.

The frog, owing to its peculiar structure, cannot breathe with the mouth open, and if it were forcibly kept open the animal would die of suffocation.

Whalebone is found in the mouth of the whalebone whale, where it forms the substitute for the teeth, of which otherwise the animal is destitute.

Pigs are poor swimmers, their forelegs being set closely under them, and when they fall into the water they sometimes cut their throats with the sharp points of their cloven feet.



The eyes of hares are never closed, as they are unprovided with eyelids. Instead thereof they have a thin membrane which covers the eye when asleep, and probably also when at rest.

The deer is furnished with supplementary breathing places in addition to the nostrils, and this would appear to be an extraordinary provision of nature giving the beast of the chase a freer respiration.

Fishes swallow their food hastily and without mastication, because they are obliged unceasingly to open and close the jaws for the purpose of respiration and cannot long retain food in the mouth when quite shut.

The hump on the back of the dromedary is an accumulation of a peculiar species of fat, which is a store of nourishment beneficently provided against the day of fasting.

CLEPSYDRA OR WATER CLOCK

The water clock, otherwise called a clepsydra, here illustrated, was made in 1639 and stands 33 inches high. The brass dial is nine inches in diameter, and is divided into twenty-four hours, the period the water flows. The signs of the Zodiac are also quaintly engraved on it. A is a brass cylinder filled with water, which is allowed to escape, drop by drop, through a small tap fixed near the bottom of A, and which can be regulated. B is a copper float, which rests on the surface of the water and sinks with it. It is kept steady by C, a counterpoise, to which it is attached by a chain, which passes over the pulley (D), upon which the hand (E) is fixed as the water sinks in A. B falls, and thus raises C, which causes E to move round the dial and indicate the time, which it does with accuracy. A has to be filled every twenty-four hours. On the brass vessel marked F, into which the water drains, is engraved: "Tyme is Short. G. Knight of ye Towne Ipswich, 1639," and below his coat of arms and crest.

WALKS TEN MILES IN SLEEP

KILL THEIR MULE FOR DEER

Two young business men, John Nickols and Gabriel Murphy, stalked the brown mule they drove on a hunting trip in the Greenhorn country, Colorado, for three hours, then shot it for a deer and were compelled to tramp thirty-five miles into Walsenburg.

BOY ANGLER HOOKS WATCH

While fishing in the Truckee river, near Reno, Nev., Neil West, aged twelve, saw something shining in the river bed and by deft use of his hook brought up a 17-jeweled heavy silver watch.

GOD OUR PATTERN IN GIVING GIFTS

Every Good and Perfect Gift Comes From Above.

The Pleasure of Giving—God the Great Exemplar—He Giveth All Things Richly to Be Enjoyed—Every Good and Every Perfect Gift—Gifts to Angels—Gifts to Men—Gifts to the Saints—Gifts to Sinners Also.

Louisville, Ky., December 21.—Of Pastor Russell's two discourses here today, we report that on the text, "Every good and every perfect gift is from Above, and cometh down from the Father of Lights, in whom there is no variableness nor shadow of turning."—James 1:17.

In many respects, said the Pastor, Christmas is a delightful season. Admitting that it is the date of the Annunciation, and that our Lord's birth was in the following October, nevertheless it is a delightful custom that calls attention to the birth at Bethlehem, and memorializes God's great Gift on our behalf. The custom of giving little tokens of esteem is still a blessing to the world. To the extent that we enter into it heartily, we are exercising a godlike quality.

Some of God's Gifts.

The Pastor then enumerated some of the common gifts which God has given all men to enjoy richly. The air we breathe, the refreshing water, the golden sunshine, the beauties of nature—animate and inanimate—he described in glowing terms. These gifts are all from the Father of Mercies.

All these are blessings, notwithstanding our fallen condition, our weaknesses of mind and body, which hinder proper appreciation. When we recall that the sick lose appetite and fail to appreciate, and when we remember that humanity is sin-sick, we may well wonder how much more a perfect man might have enjoyed these blessings, which are still precious to us.

Richly to Enjoy.

The Pastor then showed that although God's gifts are on every hand, yet the majority of people receive them in a stupid, unappreciative manner, unconscious of their blessings. He also demonstrated that this is the result of sin, which has vitiated every good quality of mind and body. From the Scriptures he proved that the world, through losing relationship to God, has lost the sense of appreciation of many of God's gifts. Consequently mankind are unhappy, unholy, unthankful, seeking pleasure and happiness, but finding instead discontent and disappointment.

The speaker went on to demonstrate that only one class are really able to enjoy Heaven's gifts highly. These have passed through a certain mental experience, which is transforming their life. They have caught a glimpse of the Almighty, and have learned that all these gifts are of His bestowing. They gave their hearts to the Lord, and received new hearts in return. With these, old things have become new. They are indeed New Creatures, begotten of the Holy Spirit, through the Word of Truth.

God's Unspeakable Gift.

St. Paul's exclamation, "Thanks be unto God for His unspeakable Gift!" the Pastor said, refers to the gift of God's dear Son to be man's Redeemer. The death sentence passed upon Adam by the Supreme Court of the Universe could not be revoked; and that sentence included all of Adam's posterity. If an unblemished human life could be substituted for his, the majesty of the Divine Law could stand, and Adam and his race might be granted a fresh trial for life or death everlasting. But no such perfect man existed; and had there been one, who knows whether he would have been willing to sacrifice his life and all its prospects?

The Pastor quoted many Scriptures showing that God has a gracious Plan for man's salvation; and that when He presented it to His Son, the Son willingly and gladly co-operated. As we read, "For the joy set before Him, [He] endured the cross, despising the shame, and is now [as a reward] set down at the right hand of the Throne of God"—awaiting the glories of His Millennial Kingdom and of eternity.

Gifts to the Church.

God's time has not yet come for giving the blessings of the Redeemer's sacrifice to the world, said the Pastor. The distribution of those gifts will be during earth's Thousand Year-Day of Jubilee. Meantime God has been preparing gifts for a special class of humanity. This class He is now selecting from amongst all nations and denominations. To these He gives spiritual gifts—new hearts of appreciation, new eyes of understanding, new powers of spiritual enjoyment.

Then the speaker showed that the value of a gift lies in the love and fellowship of which it is a reminder. Daily each should shed on life's path way gifts bringing cheer—kind words and looks, the nod of recognition, acts of sympathy. These gifts mean much to the groaning creation.

Daily Thought.

The work an unknown good man has done is like a vein of water flowing hidden underground, secretly making the ground green.—Carlyle.

What He Did.

"What have you ever done for me?" complained the young man whose father had chided him for his inability to get ahead. "Well, I kept your mother from naming you Percy or Clarance."

AN AMATEUR SANTA CLAUS

By HAMILTON POPE GALT

Copyright, 1915, by American Press Association

WE had all agreed that Mr. O'Shaugnessy was the very one to be Santa Claus at our Christmas tree.

"No!" he said. "No!"

We had never seen Mr. O'Shaugnessy so vehement before.

"That is one thing I will never do—no, not if the czar of Russia were to command it!"

"Why?" asked some one from a safe distance.

"Because I played the part once, and I will never do it again. I may as well tell you about it, and then you'll know that it is of no use to bother me about it any more.

"One Christmas I was broke. I was hungry, and my feet were on the ground. I had asked a thousand people for something to do, anything to do, and finally a manager in a department store said, 'All right; we'll make a Santa Claus out of you.'

"I WANT THAT."

"I told him I didn't feel much like a Santa Claus inside.

"'Oh, we'll fix that all right,' he said and handed me a pillow.

"So, with pillows and boots and gloves and a fur coat outside and nothing at all inside, I started in to be Santa Claus in the toy department. While I was thinking about my wife and the two kids at home needing money, and me with no steady job, and other things like that, I heard one of the fellows in the store say to the boss:

"'Say, that St. Nicholas of yours is about as jolly as a hymn book. He reminds me of a funny song entitled "Silver Threads Among the Gold." Why don't you throw him out?'

"'I will when I get time.'

"I tried to liven up a little after hearing this praise of my histrionic talent, but it wasn't much use.

"Pretty soon I saw a boy coming down the aisle like a wolf on the fold. He was also seeking whom he might devour. He was followed by an anxious looking maid and a gentleman in a silk hat, who was an indulgent millionaire father.

"The kid sauntered along in an independent, bored way, swinging his arms kind of reckless, as if he was in hopes of breaking something and relieving the monotony.

"When he came up to where I was sitting he stopped. He had seen plenty of toys, but I guess I was something new in the way of a St. Nicholas.

"He called his daddy and pointed to me.

"'I want that,' he said.

"'Oh, no, dearie,' said the maid. 'Here, look at this nice giraffe! See! It does this!'

"The kid shook the nurse off irritably.

"'He doesn't seem to take much interest in the giraffe,' I remarked to the father.

"'No, nor anything else,' he answered in a patient, weary tone. 'He has had all these toys before, and he knows all about them, inside and out. He had one of these giraffes last year and broke it open to find out what was in it, and he was mad when he found there was nothing.'

"'I want that,' said the boy again, pointing to me.

"'He has taken a fancy to you,' continued the pa.

"'I can't see that I have any advantage over the giraffe,' I said.

"Just then the boss of the store came along. He was just busting himself for the millionaire.

"'My boy wants your Santa Claus,' said the gentleman to the boss.

"And the kid jumped up and grabbed me by the hand and began pulling at me and fighting the maid off with the other hand.

"'Well,' said the boss, 'take him along, Mr. Van Veegle. It will be no loss whatever to us, I assure you.'

"This recommend seemed to sort of encourage the millionaire.

"'I will pay you for your time,' he said to me.

"As the little fellow was pulling my arm off I got up and went along. He towed me through the aisle against a tide of open mouthed people. We got into a big red automobile, and the millionaire said to the chauffeur, 'Home as quick as possible, for goodness sake!'

"Away we went, my white whiskers flying in the wind.

"Pretty soon the millionaire said to the chauffeur: 'Look here, you needn't display us any more than necessary. Kindly pick out some quiet streets.'

"The kid was sitting next to me, holding my hand.

"The chauffeur started to slow down in front of a mansion when the millionaire gave a shout:

"'Hold on!' he said. 'Drive on quick! I forgot Mrs. Van Veegle has company. We'll go around the back way.'

"We were turning the corner to go around the other way when the millionaire shouted again suddenly, 'Turn around quick!'

"We were dodging somebody or other that he knew.

"Finally we passed through a big gate, and the boy towed me around through a conservatory or two into a swell room.

"The man swore. There were a lot of ladies there still. They seemed to take a great interest in the pageant.

"'Well, what on earth!' screeched the millionaire's wife.

"While the man was explaining to his wife the boy led me around all over the house by the hand. He would not let go.

"He had to have me sit beside him while he ate his dinner, and I had a big, fat butler shoving my chair around for me and waiting on me. I got some birds and one thing and another under my pillow and my furs, but I was awful warm.

"It was too warm for comfort when it got around that there was a real, live Santa Claus at the Van Veegle house. All the children came from all over the neighborhood to maul me.

"But young Van kept a tight grip on my hand and fought them off whenever they got too near.

"When bedtime came they tried to tell little Van that Santy wanted to go home now and work on the toys for Christmas, but he held on tighter than ever and insisted that I would have to sleep with him.

"This made it pretty bad. If I was to pull off my boots and my beard and my stomach and one thing and another the boy would be paralyzed with fear, they said, and for me to turn in boots, beard, stomach and all with little Van in his little bed seemed utterly impossible.

"We compromised by my sitting by his bed and holding his hand until he went to sleep. Would you believe it? That boy was the lightest sleeper you ever saw! Every time I tried to take my hand away his eyes would open and he would take a tighter grip.

"I sat up all night holding that kid's hand. I had a man in attendance, who brought me everything I wanted, and I had collected a ten from Papa Van, but I didn't get much sleep.

"The boy had me with him all the next day. I had to be with him when he got his bath and his breakfast, and I attended kindergarten with him.

"I was 'it' at kindergarten, too, but along about 4 o'clock he lay down on a couch and went sound asleep.

"I stole from the room softly and unobserved. I had had enough of the job and was resolved to escape.

"Just as I was getting out of the front door a good sized boy came along and started to blah something about 'Hello, Santa Claus!' and tried to grab hold of me.

"I paralyzed him by pulling out my stomach and hitting him over the head with it.

"I gained the street and flew for home, dodging this way and that to baffle pursuit and shedding beard, boots, cotton and fur all along the way.

"I hid for three days and then emerged and got a nice little job loading coal on a ship. I have always gone in for a sane Christmas ever since that little experience."

We did not press Mr. O'Shaugnessy.

Concerning Christmas Presents.

A man may not be so badly off for presents if he only has presence of mind.

The question of the hour is, "What on earth shall we buy for a Christmas present?"

Never look a gift horse in the teeth. It is also wrong to look a Christmas present in the price mark.

"What shall I give the hired girl?" is a Christmas conundrum that puzzles some. Give her last week's pay and get another girl.

The proprietor of a big hotel may love his patrons' children, but he never gives the youngsters drums or horns at Christmas. N. B.—Or any other day.

"KNECHT RUPERT" WAS GERMAN SANTA CLAUS

The Santa Claus idea has grown out of a variety of legends and customs. The festival of St. Nicholas, who was the especial friend of the children, was celebrated in Germany about the 6th of December. It was easy enough to make this coincide with the later and more general festival. The tangible Santa Claus was called "Knecht Rupert," and usually he was some member of the family dressed up to represent a beneficent gift giver. It was the custom to have a yew bough placed in the parlor of the German home, and on this all the packages containing gifts were placed. On Christmas morning the whole family assembled to claim the gifts, each having to guess the donor. "Knecht Rupert" distributed the gifts to the younger children, but he lectured them also on obedience and good behavior, and, if any one had been bad, instead of a gift he or she was given a switch that they might be punished. So the little Germans try hard to be very good before Christmas.

Bad Day For Birds.

The day after Christmas, St. Stephen's day (boxing day in England), is celebrated in a queer way by some of the Manx boys, and Pitchfield says they feel privileged to stone wrens at this time because of a story to the effect that in days gone by a most dangerous sheep was finally compelled to assume [illegible] for a year and a day, and killed [illegible] tion for [illegible] that it [illegible] guard [illegible] was [illegible]

Ex[illegible]

CHRISTMAS LULLABIES.

Songs Popular at Yuletide Season Traced Back For Centuries.

Christmas lullabies to the Divine Child may be traced back to medieval times. In one of the Coventry plays occurs what is plainly a cradle song to the infant Jesus, which has been preserved in music as well as in text.

Five hundred years ago the mere picture did not suffice the faithful. The scene had to be enacted. The little play was called "The Cradling of the Child." Standing on a platform above the manger, boys representing angels proclaimed the birth of the Saviour. Priests took the part of shepherds and gathered around the manger. Here stood Joseph, Mary and the servant of Joseph.

After the choir had sung hymns, among them "Christus Natus Hodie," Mary sang the first verse of the German song, "Joseph, dear Joseph mine, help me to rock my babe, that God may reward me in heaven the Babe of the Virgin Mary." Joseph answered with the second verse of the song, "Gladly, my dear nurse, will I help thee rock thy babe, that God may reward me in heaven," etc. The servant sang, "Rejoice, Christian multitude. The King of heaven, who was born of the Virgin Mary, has taken on mortality."

And so the scene in the churches went on every Christmas.

A Sure Sign.

Dr. Probe—I guess that Peterby doesn't intend to pay his bill this year.

Mrs. Probe—What makes you think so?

"I just got a Christmas present from him this morning."

SIGNIFICANCE OF HOLLY.

Why holly at Christmas? The pagan Romans dedicated the holly to Saturn, whose festival was in December, around Christmas. The early Christians, to escape persecution, decked their homes with holly and other Saturnian emblems. The Romans sent their friends holly sprigs during the Saturnalia with wishes for their health and prosperity.

CHRISTMAS IN HOLLAND.

In Holland Santa Claus pays his annual visit to all good children twenty days before he comes to this country. Dec. 5 is the feast day of St. Nicholas, alias Santa Claus. He has nothing whatever to do with Christmas, and his visit there is an Anglo Saxon anachronism. As their patron saint, children were taught to look to Nicholas for care and protection. In England the custom was abolished with the worship of saints at the reformation and was re-established in the American guise of Father Christmas in the middle of the last century.

But in Holland Santa Claus continues to make his visits on the right day, Dec. 5. The Dutch children do not hang up their stockings, but place their shoes, filled with hay or straw for the donkey on which St. Nicholas rides, in front of the fireplace.

The Christ Child.

An Irish legend tells that on Christmas eve the Christ Child wanders out in the darkness and cold and the peasants still put lighted candles in their windows to guide the sacred little feet, that they may not stumble on the way to their homes. In Hungary the people go yet further in their tenderness for the Child. They spread feasts and leave their doors open that he may enter at his will. Throughout Christendom there is a belief that no evil can touch the child who is born on Christmas eve.

A Custom Well Forgotten.

Children used to be reminded in an uncomfortable manner that Dec. 28 was Innocents' day, for it was considered wholesome on that morning to give them a good cuffing or other form of punishment, presumably to remind them of the sins which were not committed by the Innocents whom Herod ordered slain on that day. Fortunately every vestige of this fashion is now blotted out.

Helping Things Along.

Mrs. Crabshaw—What's that you're blowing on your bugle, dear?

Bobbie—The call to arms, ma. Sister's young man has her under the mistletoe.

Bear Baiting Popular Sport.

Few sports have had such a great and extended popularity as bear baiting. The Romans imported their bears from Britain, and the sport can be traced in England to the Conquest or beyond. Queen Elizabeth was so fond of the sport that, by an order in council, she prohibited "plays to be performed on Thursdays because bear baiting and such pastimes had usually been then practiced."

Give Bright Thoughts a Chance.

Just try, by taking a few minutes a day—if you cannot take more—to live upon the heights, to give heed to that noble and beautiful thing within you which is the real you, which wants to grow and develop. Give it a chance. Dwell with infinite things for a little while every 24 hours. And "soon the cares that infest the day will fold their tents like Arabs and silently steal away," and life will become very happy, very beautiful. Try it.—Barbara Boyd in Chicago Post.

Musical Family.

Stiggins—"Are there any musicians in your family?" Wiggins—"Ra-ther! Why, my father is an adept at blowing his own horn, and mother is equally expert at harping on one string; maid-in-law has to play second fiddle, and Aunt Tabitha leads a humdrum existence; grandpa gives a solo on his nasal organ every night, without the stops; uncle spends his time wetting his whistle; Harry is fond of his pipe, and Gerty is forever ringing the changes on her admirers."

Makes All the Difference.

Before marriage the shape, the figure and complexion carry all before them; after marriage, the mind and character unexpectedly claim their share—and that the largest—of importance.—Lord Melbourne.

Valuable Stamp Collection.

How stamp collecting has become specialized is instanced by the sale in Paris some time ago of a collection of Swiss stamps for about $40,000.

Does Delicate Work.

Photographically to measure and record the vibrations of a machine or building is the purpose of a simple apparatus invented in England.

Not Up to Expectations.

"George has told me all the secrets of his past." "Mercy! What did you think of them?" "I was awfully disappointed."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

End of Golden Nugget Day.

Men have found a mass of native copper weighing 420 tons and they have discovered a chunk of pure silver weighing one and one-half tons, but the largest nugget of gold that has yet been seen weighed only 190 pounds. And gold seekers are informed that larger finds in the future are unlikely.

MARYLAND'S PUBLIC SCHOOL SYSTEM

What Will the Legislature do For it This Year?

Every member of Maryland's Legislature received last Wednesday a copy of "A Comparative Study of the Public School Systems in the Foyty-eight States." This study, made by the Russell Sage Foundation, is a nation-wide investment in which the school system of each state is compared with the school system in every other state.

The study shows, among other things, that in eighteen states out of the 48 the average annual salary of public school teachers is less than one dollar a day and that one state rents its convicts per annual for more than it pays its teachers; that the United States has the shortest school year in the world; that American public schools burn down at the rate of one for every school day in the year; that the amount per child invested in school property ranges from $4 in Mississippi to $115 in Massachuetts; and that the providing of free text books in one state resulted in a 10 per cent increase in high school attendance.

Rhode Island has the longest school year of any state –193 days— but if these 193 days were divided equally among the children of school age in the state, the result would be 119 days of schooling each. This is the "effective school year." The result of this comparison shows that this state provides 79 days as its effective school year. In nearly a quarter of the states the effective school year is less than three months. As a nation, the United States has a shorter school day, a shorter week, and a shorter school year than any other highly civilized country in the world.

American expenditure for public education has more than doubled in the past ten years. Today the people of the United States spend nearly half a billion a year on their schools. The expenditures per child of school age range all the way from $5 in South Carolina to nearly eleven times as much or $32 in Washington.

The amount that the state has invested in school buildings is an index of its past interest in education. In Mississippi, the average investment is $4, while in Massachusetts it is nearly 29 times as much, or $115.

In current expenditure per child of school age, this state ranks 15th among the 48 states, while on the average value of school property the standing is 39th. A significant fact in connection with this expenditure for school property is that as a nation we allow our public schools to burn down at the rate of one for every school day in the year.

Many states through lack of compulsory attendance laws, or through their non-enforcement, waste much of the money that they expend on their schools. Many states have long school years and short attendance in years. The per cent of attendance ranges from 60 in Maryland and Mississippi to more than 80 in Oregon and Massachusetts.

In North Carolina, New Mexico, Arkansas, and Alabama the attendance period is so short that the average pupil would need 22 years to complete an elementary course of eight years of nine full months each. If he were compelled to live up to this standard, he might enter school at five, and not get his eighth grade certificate until he was 27.

In 18 of the 48 states, the average annual wage of public school teachers amounts to less than a dollar a day. In just five states is it more than two dollars a day. The highest average salary paid in the United States is $918 in California, the lowest is $200 in North Carolina. The rank of Maryland is 18th among the 48 States, with an average annual salary of $515 per teacher.

According to the study, the average annual wage of carpenters in the United States is about $802, of coal miners $660, of factory workers $550, of common laborers $513, and of teachers $485.

Throughout the southern states, thousands of rural teachers earn less than $150 a year. In one New England state hundreds of teachers earn less than $6 a week. In one county in a Central Atlantic State the average for all teachers is $129 a year. One Southern state rents its convicts to contractors at a little more than $400 per year, while it pays its teachers slightly over $300.

The right of the state to tax the property of the state to educate the children of the state is now firmly established. A free common school education is the common birthright of every American child. Nevertheless, there appear startling differences in the endeavors of the different states to meet this obligation. In Oklahoma and Washington, expenditures for public schools each year amount to about 75 cents for every $100 of wealth and this proportion is nearly four times as great as that found in such states as Wyoming and New Mexico. Maryland spends 21 cents for every $100 of wealth.

One-third of the states have no laws regulating the construction of public school houses and Maryland is among these states. We have only three types of instructions where attendance is compulsory—jails, asylums, and school houses. Few of us have to stay long or frequently in jails or asylums, but all of us spend many years in school houses. Nevertheless, Ohio alone has complete regulation of school house construction to insure the safety and sanitation of these buildings.

A somewhat better situation is found with respect to medical inspection of schools, which is provided for by the laws of twenty states. That such laws are needed in the remaining states is shown by the mass of experience which demonstrates that efficient medical inspection betters health conditions among school children, safeguards them from disease, and renders them healthier, happier and more vigorous. Maryland has no medical inspection laws.

According to the study, the system of providing free text books for school children is almost a century old in America, having been inaugurated by by Philadelphia 95 years ago. At the present time 12 states have free text books throughout their schools, 15 have them in certain districts, and in the remaining 21 states the system does not exist. Maryland is among the first 12 states in this respect. School books bought by the community cost the community 20 per cent. less than when they are bought by individuals. One unforseen feature of the passage of the Massachusetts free text book law was an immediate increase of 10 per cent in high school attendance.

Thirty-six of the 48 states have statewide compulsory attendance laws. Compulsory education began in Germany and Massachusetts in the 17th century, and in France and more than half of the states of the Union in the 19th century. Ignorance and intelligence perpetuate themselves, this report declares, and that is why compulsory education is necessary and why after a few decades it becomes unnecessary. Maryland is one of the six states which have compulsory laws in part of their territories.

In general all-round efficiency, this study places Washington first among the states of the Union, with Massachusetts a close second, and New York third. All of the states have weak points which need to be remedied. The object of this study at the present time is to bring these weak points to the attention of educators and to place in the hands of the state legislators an authoritative statement of present public school conditions.

Of Interest To Farmers.

A Middleburg, Md., man, as far as we have seen, is the champion hog raiser of Maryland. He killed last week four hogs which weighed respectively, 683, 692, 716 and 728 pounds, a total of 2,819 pounds. These hogs were only fifteen months old. We do not believe this weight can be matched by any farmer in this State.

The largest electrical egg-hatching plant in the world is in England, having an average output of 8,000 chickens a week.

There are used daily in the United States about 50,000,000 eggs.

There are 27,119,000 sheep in Great Britian to its 88,000 square miles; New York State has 1,131,000 to its 49,000 square miles, which shows how short American farmers are in their understanding of the true value of sheep raising.

Utah's sugar beet production this year will reach 470,000 tons, the largest in the history of beet raising in the State.

Ethan Davis, of Recluse, Miss., raised over 177 bushels of corn on one acre of ground this year. What boy has done better than this? Clyde McRae of the same locality, raised over 136 bushels.

Editor M. W. Aiken, of the Queen Anne's county News, claims the title of potato king of the county with 1,000 bushels of potatoes from a tract of five acres.

FARM FOR SALE.

I have for sale, on very liberal terms, the best farm in Garrett county. This farm consists of 165 acres, situated on the main line of the B. & O. R. R., with one mile of frontage and two switches adjoining the land. The largest crops in the county have been raised on this farm the past six years. Over 113 tons of hay hailed this year besides reserving sufficient to winter from 40 to 50 head of cattle and horses. Title unexcelled and abstract may be seen by applying to,

WHERE CHRIST WAS BORN, BETHLEHEM.

HAS SURVEY NOTES OF OLD NATIONAL ROAD

Engineer Shirley Receives Them From Descendant Of Original Owner.

An interesting relic of the building of the national road from Cumberland to Wheeling by the United States Government has just been presented to Henry G. Shirley, chief engineer of the State Roads Commission, by Andrew Ramsey, a member of the board, to whom it was presented by Henry Shriver, president of the First National bank of Cumberland.

It consists of the original notes of the survey of the road made in 1819-21 by Joseph Shriver, civil engineer, who was president of the bank and who was the ancestor of Henry Shriver. The book was found in the bank in 1912 when it was undergoing rebuilding and is now in a perfect state of preservation. The entries are all in ink and show every course and grade in the 130 miles of the road, with every stream crossed, every building passed and other useful notes.

It shows what few people know about the national road—that it was not originally built through the Cumberland Narrows, where it is now located, but followed the old Braddock route over the top of Wills mountain. The present road through the Narrows, it is shown through other sources, was built in 1835, before the road was turned over to the state.

Although so early in the history of the nation and at a time when the Ohio country was just being developed, there must have been considerable traffic over the original road, as the notes show that from Cumberland to Wheeling the inns numbered 45, or about one to every three miles. There were no towns on the route, and where now is Frostburg there is an entry of two inns, McCullough's and Frost's. Where now is the town of Grantsville there was a shingle inn, and at one place there is a note of a mill and at an other a note of a road to a coal mine.

The Best Christmas Gift

Oakland Collegians Defeat Fairmont.

The Oakland Collegian basket ball team easily defeated the Fairmont High School team at Oakland on Friday evening by a score of 38 to 8. The result of the contest was never in doubt, as the Oakland team, by fast playing and good team work led by a large margin throughout the entire game. The playing of M. Boyle, who made ten field goals, featured the game. The Collegians have played seven games and have only been defeated once. They were defeated by the Lonaconing team which is leading the Western Maryland League and which has not been defeated this year. The lineup:

Oakland		Fairmont

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Paul Clayton, well known in the Park, is chief trumpeter of the cadet corps of the West Virginia University, Morgantown, W. Va.

Rev. Marquess, pastor of the Methodist church, is planning to begin revival services in his church the first week in January.

There will be preaching services in the United Brethern church at Pleasant Valley, on the evening of December 31st, commencing at 7:30 o'clock. The last services of the year you are invited to be present.

Miss Kate O'Donald, one of the public school teachers at Kitzmiller, is spending the holiday vacation at the home of her parents Mr. and Mrs. Edward O'Donald at this place.

Miss Agatha Martini, of Saint Mary's Academy is home for the holidays.

Our merchants will close their places of business all day Christmas. The post office will be open until 9 a. m. and from 3 to 4:30 p. m.

The People's store did a land office business last week. Inside of two days they shipped nearly a ton of dressed turkeys. They were fine looking birds and in excellent condition. The stores also had a splendid holiday trade. Mr. Harvey and his chief clerk, Mr. Gough, says, "It pays to advertise and we find the Republican an excellent medium to reach the people." The store the past several days was a very busy place.

Mrs. Willett, who has been the guest of Mrs. Winchell for some time, went to Clarksburg, W. Va., Saturday.

Christmas day will be observed as a general holiday. Everybody seems to be in good spirits and planning for a pleasant time.

Our Christmas market includes turkeys, chickens, rabbits, oysters, celery, and the other things that belong to a good Christmas dinner.

The weather has been delightful. The weather that makes one want to be out doors and take it all in. Early mornings and evenings cool; through the day comfortable. There has been some enjoyable skating.

Mr. Charles Weimer, of Keyser, W. Va., spent the Sabbath with his sisters at this place.

Benjamin Long has been appointed policeman.

The Christmas program at the Baptist and United Brethren churches attracted a large number of people, espacially children. The exercises were a credit to those in charge as well as to those who took part on the program. The usual gift to the members of the Sabbath school delighted the scholars and added another happy day to their life's history. The Methodist Sunday school have their program and gifts this Christmas night. It will an interetting and pleasing occasin.

J. A. Enlow spent Saturday in Piedmont.

Several houses, in different parts of the Park have been broken into by forcing the locks on the doars, or by taking a sharp stone or instrument and breaking the window glass in front of the sash lock. Among the houses entered are the Deaconnes Home, the Nihiser and Carpenter homes.

Dr. Widisin, of Baltimore has purchased the goods and fixtures of H. E. Felty and rented the building occupied by Mr. Felty and will continue the business. A new stock of goods have been ordered. Mr. Lee Hayden will continue in the store as clerk. Repairs will be made at once to the main store room. The room occupied by Rev. Browning will be used until the main room improvements are completed.

Praise Sailors Of U. S. Navy.

Our American sailors in their tour of the Old World won the respect and admiration of the citizins of the countries visited.

The newspaper L'Eclaireur de Nice published at Villa Franche, voices the general sentiment in an editorial, in which it says:

"Now that the fine American naval division is leaving us, we should like to place on record our admiration for the remarkably good behavior of the crews not only aboard their ships, where discipline is strict, but ashore. Altogether they behaved like real gentlemen. Their bearing was irreproachable: their manners showed good education and frequently arose above mere bana politeness. They taught us French people, who pay no heed to the Marseillaise, a lesson when they stood rigidly at attention during the rendition of the Star-spangled Banner.

"Secretary Daniels, when he ordered the cruise, did more than be foresaw. He intended to educate the crews, but he also educated us by showing us such splendid ships and men.

THE DEATH RECORD

SUSAN DIXON

Mrs. Susan Dixon, wife of the late Stephen L. Dixon, died at Elk Garden, Sunday, December the 7th, of the infirmities of old age. She leaves to mourn her loss five children, Mr. Payton Dixon, Mrs. James Parr, Mrs. Gusaie Collier, Miss Lucretia and Stephen at home. She was formerly Miss Susan Kitzmiller, of Kitzmiller, Md., aged 89. Interment was made in the Nethkenville Cemetery near Elk Garden, W. Va.

HOW sweetly rests this winter night
Upon a waiting earth!
Until the lift of Christmas light
Shall spread the Christmas birth,
The curtain of the dusk be drawn,
And sleeping hosts afar
Shall wake to read in radiant dawn
The message of the star!

The dawn goes marching from the east
Across a joyous world
To usher in the Christmas feast
'Neath Christmas fronds unfurled.
Now swiftly on the glory spreads,
The miracle fulfilled,
To bless a myriad bended heads
And souls by Christmas thrilled.

Behold it sweep a mighty land,
Long leagues of list'ning snow;
From whitened firs to where midst sand
The poinsettias glow
On English thatch and tile it lies,
Chateau and hut forlorn,
And frozen steppes and tropic skies
Acclaim the Christmas morn

No region too remote for this,
Too difficult no tongue,
The Christmas wreath, the Christmas kiss,
The Christmas music sung
No heart with grace so incomplete,
No head with age so gray,
No hearth so poor it does not greet
The dawn of Christmas day

THE CHRIST CHILD'S MANGER.

Pretty but Obsolescent Feature of the Latin Christmas.

All through the Italian and Hungarian quarters in New York city may be found traces of the manger at Christmas time. The Italians call it the "presepio," which means manger; the Hungarians the "Bethlehem."

The manger is an exceedingly old and interesting devotion in the Catholic countries of south Europe. St. Francis of Assisi, who was born in 1182, introduced it into Italy, and it is still the sign of Christmas in south Italy, as much as holly in the windows is the sign of it in New York. It is not many years since a carpenter could not be had for weeks before Christmas in Naples or Rome. They were all busy putting up mangers in the houses of the quality, while the poorer folk were busy fabricating their own.

This quaint old devotion is fading out of the cities of the mainland, but in conservative Sicily it remains in full force. Every family there still erects its manger by the 1st of December. It is not a manger alone, but a whole mountain side, made of the rough, flexible bark of the cork tree. Peaks and crags and precipices abound, with winding trails, houses and castles of colored cardboards, forests of evergreen twigs and sometimes tiny pipes to furnish brooks and lakes.

In the center is the grotto, with the holy family within, surrounded by the cattle. A sky of blue paper is stretched above, with the star of Bethlehem upon it. Over the hills come shepherds bearing gifts to the infant, and, though they are in Sicilian costume and carry good Sicilian cheese and wine upon their donkeys, they are all the more interesting for that.

Sometimes the presepio fills only a corner, sometimes the whole side of a room, according to the means of the family. It is kept year after year until worn out, but it needs to be freshened up each year, always a welcome task to the mother and daughters of the house.

FIRST CHRISTMAS FEAST.

The first feast to be celebrated on Dec. 25 was established by Commodus, emperor of Rome, who reigned about 185 years after the birth of Christ. After that there are many references in history to meetings of the new sect called Christians, who gathered on this day to celebrate the birth of the God man. It is not until a century after the time of Commodus that we find a particular reference to the persecutions that the Christians underwent at the hands of the pagan emperors, culminating in a Christmas day massacre.

When Rome was no longer a pagan state the feast began to be celebrated in Christian style, and those who observed the birth of Christ in those days did so in widely separated countries and frequently at widely different periods of time and according to no set program. The ancients agreed on one thing, however—that the festival commemorating the birth of Christ should be the most magnificent of the year. In some cases it was kept up for days.

Origin of the Yule Log.

The Yule log in England is a relic of druidism. Its name is believed to be a corruption of the wheel, and it is in all likelihood symbolism typifying the marriage of the sun. The burning of the Yule fire is reminiscent of the sacred fires kindled by the druids at midwinter in the round towers which yet remain in many parts of Great Britain, Ireland, France and Spain.

The Sistine Madonna.

REPRESENTING the Virgin, not as a mother, but as the all powerful queen of the heavens, descending from clouds which are themselves composed of thousands of cherubs, Raphael's Madonna di San Sisto, more commonly known as the Sistine Madonna, ranks, by universal consent, as the greatest painting in the world.

In the Virgin's arms there is the Christ Child, whose thoughtful eyes make it appear that he is fully conscious of his destiny as Saviour of the world. On either side St. Sixtus II. and St. Catherine kneel in adoration of the queen of the heavens and the Christ Child. St. Catherine is looking down at the two cherubs, which form the base of the picture and which are familiar in popular reproductions. Sixtus II. was bishop of Rome from 257 to 258 A. D. and was martyred under Valerian.

Raphael Sanzio or Santi was born in 1483 and this picture, his masterpiece, was completed two years before his death in 1520. Thus the artist was thirty five years old when the greatest picture of all times was completed. It was his last Madonna, although he painted others prior to this time. The Madonna was the favorite theme of painters in the renaissance era in Italy, starting with Fra Angelico, Fra Bartolommeo and others of the first painters in this period and reaching its height with the completion of the Sistine Madonna by Raphael.

This Madonna was painted as an altar piece for the church of San Sisto at Piacenza. In 1754 it was purchased by the elector Augustus III. from the Benedictine monastery and is now the property of the Royal gallery at Dresden.

Raphael, the artist, died of a fever at Rome when but thirty-seven years old. He was the son of an artist and studied at one time under Perugino. In 1504 Raphael went to live in Florence, where most of his Madonnas were painted. His fame rapidly spread until he was called to Rome to decorate the Vatican. Toward the end of his life, about the time the Sistine Madonna was completed, the artist developed his own style and did his greatest work. Aside from his ability to paint, Raphael was a talented architect.

CHRISTMAS IN OTHER LANDS.

Many American children of foreign parentage know something of Christmas customs in at least one European country, having been told by their elders, but for the most part our boys and girls know little of the day except in their own land.

In Spain it is the custom to let out of prison many of the short time prisoners on Christmas eve, also to permit a few of the soldiers to go home on furlough. Only blood relations eat in the house on Christmas eve or Christmas day. It is a general belief that on midnight on Christmas eve the Virgin comes, bearing a blessing. There is a midnight mass in the churches, and other masses follow.

A few years ago in England it was the custom after the Christmas dinner to pull bonbon crackers and to wear the grotesque caps and masks that came with them. In other ways the celebration is very much as with us.

Good cheer is the rule in Ireland, and holly and ivy are seen on every hand. A midnight mass is celebrated, and masses follow through the night and morning, all of which are largely attended. The religious element predominates. Rich and poor alike have goose for their Christmas dinner. The day following Christmas is devoted to athletics, fun and frolic.

The celebration of Christmas is not general in Japan, yet the Nipponese have a Santa Claus of their own. He is the god Hotei, and he is supposed to give good things to the children not on one day alone, but the year around.

Christmas Fortune Telling.

Bachelors and spinsters in Bohemia desirous of seeing the features of their future matrimonial mate cut a hole in the ice of a river or pond at midnight of Christmas eve and peer into the black water beneath. It is the belief that the face of the one the experimenter is to marry will then become visible as in a mirror. A combination of faith and imagination is necessary to make the spell work successfully.

CHRISTMAS IN BETHLEHEM.

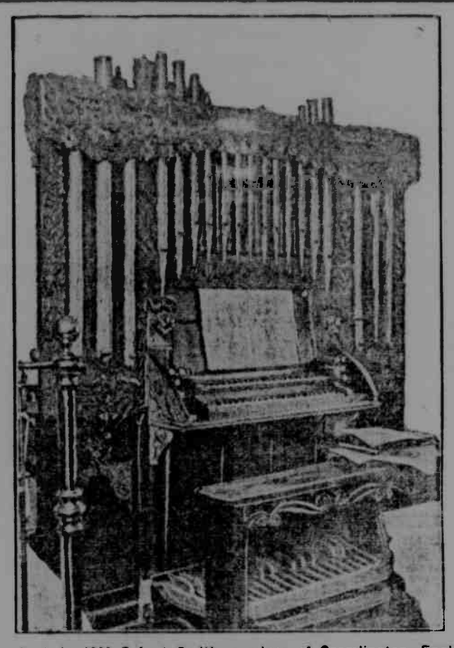
No place in all the world has a greater interest in the Christmas season than Bethlehem. The normal population of the town where Christ was born in less than 5,000, but during Christmas week it becomes a great cosmopolitan center of 50,000 or 60,000 souls, all eager to pay homage to the place hallowed by the Saviour's birth.

In Bethlehem people are brought face to face with the wonderful scenes which are but feebly known to the rest of the world. Here they may see the place where the three wise men of the east halted after their long journey. Here they worship the shrine inclosing the manger in which Christ was born.

They walk along the same road followed by the Virgin Mary in her journey to the ancient city. They see buildings and ruins which the eyes of the infant Christ rested upon. The tiny city, crescent shaped and beautiful to look upon, teems with the realities which the rest of the world celebrates.

IN FRENCH CHURCHES.

Christmas Mass Always Well Attended—Services Are Unique.



In Paris Christmas day is kept as a religious festival, and many who never dream of going to church on any other day in the year make it a point of attending mass on le Jour de Noel, and the blaze of the tapers falls on crowded congregations—men, women and children, kneeling, sitting and standing in the wide area of the Madeleine and Notre Dame.

Midnight mass is held on Christmas eve. A waxen image of the infant Saviour lies upon a little hutch of real straw in a cave built of miniature stones. The Virgin mother kneels over the child, and to quote a verse from one of the quaintest old carols:

St. Joseph, too, is near to guard the child,
To watch Him and protect his mother mild

Often the three wise men are added, bearing offerings in their hands.

Organ Made With Knife Only

Way back in 1889 Robert Smith, a miner of Cramlington, England, decided that he wanted an organ, so he set to work to make one in his leisure time and it has just been completed. The instrument was made with a pocket knife as the only tool and is a wonderful example of what a skillful and patient man can accomplish. The woodwork is mostly well seasoned oak.

DIVORCE IN VARIOUS LANDS

In Hindostan either party for a slight cause may leave the other and marry.

In the olden times the Jews had a discretionary power of divorcing their wives.

Divorces are scarcely allowed in Thibet, unless with the consent of both parties. Remarriage is forbidden.

In Cochin China the parties desiring divorce break a pair of chopsticks in the presence of witnesses and the thing is done.

If the wife of a Turkoman asks his permission to go out and he says "go," without adding, "come back again," they are divorced.

In Siberia, if a man is dissatisfied with the most trifling acts of his wife, he tears a cap or veil from her face and that constitutes a divorce.

In Siam the first wife may be divorced but not sold, as the others may be. She may claim the first child. The others belong to the husband.

Among the Moors, if the wife does not become the mother of a boy, she may be divorced with the consent of the tribe and can marry again.

In the Arctic region, a man who wants a divorce leaves home in anger and does not return for several days. The wife takes the hint and departs.

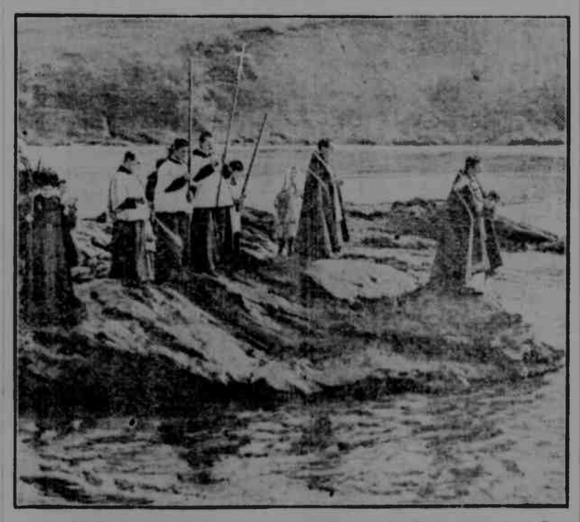
CUPID MAKES QUEER TANGLE

Through the marriage of Harold A. Leek, a son of Joseph Leek of Islip, L. I., with Miss Ida Smith, daughter of Egbert Z. Smith of Islip, a queer mixup in relationships has come. The bride's mother died years ago and her father married the daughter of Joseph Leek, father of the present bridegroom.

As a result of the recent wedding the bridegroom's father-in-law is his brother-in-law; the bride's father-in-law is her own father's father-in-law; the bridegroom is step-uncle of the bride, who therefore becomes her own husband's step-niece, the bride's stepmother is her sister-in-law, and her own father is her brother-in-law, and finally the bride's father-in-law is her own step-grandfather.

SNAKE WHICH SPITS POISON

The ring-halys, here shown, is a South American snake which should be given a wide berth. It can eject its venom to a distance of three yards, and is an unpleasant reptile even in captivity.



SAVES CHILD BY BOLD LEAP

Leaping from a moving locomotive into a stream at the side of the railroad track, Fireman Frank Ball, employed on an Erie switch engine at Passaic, N. J., rescued four-year-old Molly Romar, who had fallen into the Dundee canal. While playing on the bank the girl lost her balance and fell in. Fireman Ball saw the youngster fall into the water as his engine drew near. He leaped into the stream and with a few powerful strokes reached the side of the child.

LENGTHENED BY LIGHTNING

George D. Pittman, a rancher, who was struck by lightning near Wilcox, Ariz., measured five feet eight inches in height before death and six feet afterward. His vertebrae were uncoupled by the shock. Pittman's hair was singed at the back of the neck, where the bolt entered. His neck was broken and shoulders crushed.

For Those Drowned at Sea

On All Souls' day there is always a special service in the church at Gunwallos, Cornwall, for the souls of those who have been drowned at sea, and then the priest and people march to the shore with lighted candles and with flowers which are thrown into the sea. This picturesque ceremony attracts many visitors.

Energy That Counts.

The friction of men in action is the energy that sends the world spinning. Disagreements are like flint and steel, they strike the new sparks. Contrary opinions flail the chaff out of ideas.—Herbert Kaufman.

Heaven Up-to-Date.

"I don't remember saying all those wicked things," declared the man at the gate. "Gabriel, produce the dictagraph," ordered the recording angel.

Chinese Advertising.

In their native land Chinese have their own peculiar way of advertising. The biscuits bear the imprint of the baker, and ducks bought in the Celestial markets frequently show on their backs a big red stamp bearing the name of the seller.

Husbands.

A cynic says a husband in the house may be a comfort, but a husband in heaven is a luxury.

Almost Limit of Foolishness.

An old woman named Czabo, who was found dead in Budapest, left a will in which she set forth that all her money, over $5,000, should be given to her dog. The animal was handed over to the relatives, who, it is said, will contest the will. The old woman had set a room apart for her dog. It was furnished with large mirrors and antique furniture upholstered in silk. Only the dog was allowed to enter this room.

Vegetarian Menu.

The menu of a meal given lately by the London Vegetarian association included walnut cutlets with brown sauce, cauliflower and new potatoes, asparagus on toast, spaghetti on toast, tomato farcie and young carrots.

Ingratitude.

Ingratitude is always a form of weakness. I have never known a man of real ability to be ungrateful.—Goethe.

Novel Plan to Fatten Geese.

To fatten geese some breeders keep the birds in a dark room, and by letting in daylight every few hours persuade them to take six or seven breakfasts a day.

Resolutions Too Fragile.

"Resolve to live a hundred years, and you will do it," declared a St. Louis physician. But being a physician, he ought to know that good resolutions are easily broken.

Mr. Henry Lauer returned home last Saturday night after an absence of seven weeks, four of which he spent with his father and sister in the Fatherland and the other three in making the voyage to and from Germany. On the return voyage the vessel ran into two storms which delayed making port four days. On it were some three thousand people, most of whom were immigrants from Russia, Hungary and Germany. Mr. Lauer's visit to his old home was fraught with pleasure to all concerned. He found his father in good health.

Mr. Robert L. Fries, late Treasurer of Garrett county, uses much of our space in advertising the property of delinquent tax payers. In all some twenty six pieces of realty, located in different sections of the county, will be offeree at public auction on the 23rd day of January next unless the taxes and costs are paid prior to that date. Mr. Geo. W. Legge, Jr., is Mr. Fries' legal representative in the matter. Mr. Fries regrets that he has been compelled to take this action in order to collect the taxes due but it appears that it is the only coruse left for him to pursue.

AT ANNAPOLIS

STATE PAYS FIVE-SIXTHS.

Revenue Collections Support Maryland's Claim For Office.

The State of Maryland paid $7,546,012 taxes through the internal Revenue office in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1913, according to the report of Internal Revenue Commissioner W. H. Osborn. In the same time the State of Delaware paid only $579,013 and the District of Columbia $913,104. Collections for the entire country were $334,424,453.

Commissioner Osborn's report shows that in the district under charge of Collector John B. Hanna, which includes Maryland, Delaware and the District, the tolal receipts were $9,038,928, so that Maryland's payment of $7,546,012 was approximately five-sixths of the entire revenue collected in the district.

This was taken by business men interested in the appointment of a collector by President Wilson to succeed Mr. Hanna as being the strongest proof possible of the right of Maryland to the office. It was held that there is no good reason why the State which contributes so nearly all the revenue collected in the district should be deprived of the place or why Delaware, which contributes not much more than 5 per cent., should be given it.

The section of the report bearing on Maryland also showed that the capital stock of all corporations reported for the Federal excise tax was $702,047,896; that the bonded and other indebtedness of these corporations is $662,278,915, and that the net income is $46,834,224. The corporation tax paid by these Maryland concerns—included in the total Maryland payments was $1,683,422. In the year Collector Hanna expended $191,521 in the conduct of his office. During the year 185,353,383 gallons of taxable distilled spirits were produced, representing an increase of 7,000,000 gallons over the preceding year. In the Maryland district 4,103,338 gallons of distilled spirits were withdrawn for consumption, while 20,152,723 remained in distilleries and warehouses.

FOR NEW HEALTH LAWS.

State Board Wants Power To Enforce Its Decisions.

To give the State Board of Health real authority instead of nominal over health conditions in all parts of the State will be the object of one or more bills which the board will submit to the Legislature next month.

"The Board of Health," said Secretary Dr. Fulton, "undoubtedly needs a great many more active agents in all parts of the State, over whom the board will have authority and who can be made to carry out its decisions. The agents of the board in the counties at present may do as they like about obeying the orders of the board, or may be stopped from doing what they may try to do by the County Commissioners.

"Although the board is supposed to have the power to remedy dangerous conditions in any part of the State, the county officials may snap their fingers at any order of the board whenever they see fit.

"This might be all right if it were the one county that was to suffer or be in danger, but unfortunately typhoid fever and diphtheria and other diseases pay no attention to county lines or geographical boundaries. Bad health conditions in one part of the State affect other parts, and there should be some central authority to have effective supervision over the whole."

$35,000,000 FROM FARMS.

Yield In Maryland Shows Decrease, But Price Is Higher.

The value of 14 principal agricultural crops grown on Maryland farms during the year 1913 is placed at $35,089,000, according to a statement issued by the Department of Agriculture. Both in value and in yield the Matyland crops fall short of the figures for 1912.

The yield in bushels of 12 principal products this year is 37,068,000, against 40,670,000 for 1912. The total increase in value for 14 principal crops throughout the whole country, as published this morning, is $182,000,000 over last year, but the yield is smaller.

The Department of Agriculture's figures do not include the value of the truck and vegetable crops of Maryland, which run into millions. The fruit crops of the State also are not included.

The production and value figures for Maryland this year are:

Corn—Estimates, 22,110,000 bushels; value, $14,372,000.

Wheat—8,113,000 bushels; value, $7,221,000.

Oats—1,260,000 bushels; value, $605,000.

Barley—145,000 bushels; value, $93,000.

Rye—389,000 bushels; value, $296,000.

Buckwheat—182,000 bushels; value, $136,000.

Potatoes—3,741,000 bushels; value, $2,505,000.

Sweet Potatoes—1,128,000 bushels; value, $677,000.

Hay—491,000 tons; value, $7,463,000.

Tobacco—18,500,000 pounds; value, $1,720,000.

Ethan Davis, of Recluse, Miss., raised over 177 bushels of corn on his acre this year. What boy has done better than this? Clyde McRae, of the same locality, raised over 136 bushels and got second prize.

PHONE COMPANY TO REORGANIZE

American Telephone and Telegraph Co. Agrees to Dissolve.

APPROVED BY THE PRESIDENT

Actions Prevents Prosecution Under Anti-Trust Act—Combine To Dispose Of Its Holdings In Western Union Telegraph Company.

Washington.—Attorney-General McReynolds announced details of an agreement for reorganization of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company—the Telephone Trust—which will prevent litigation to dissolve that corporation under the Anti-Trust act and under which competitive conditions will be restored in the telephone service of the entire country and the combine will dispose of its holdings in the Western Union Telegraph Company.

The reorganization plan originated with the company, although it followed many reports that a suit against it might be filed. It was regarded by Department of Justice officials as the most striking indication offered in a decade that "big business" has come to the conclusion that it is better to follow the Sherman law than fight it.

In brief the agreement provides that:

The American Telephone and Telegraph Company will dispose promptly of its holdings in the Western Union Telegraph Company so that each concern shall be under distinct management and so that all shall be entirely independent.

The company will not hereafter acquire control of other telephone companies and where control of telephone companies has been acquired, but no actual physical union has been effected, the American Telephone and Telegraph Company will submit the course it is to pursue to the Inter-State Commerce Commission and to the Department of Justice.

The company will promptly make arrangements by which all other telephone companies in the United States shall have access to its toll lines.

SYNOPSIS OF NEW CURRENCY BILL.

A complete reform of the vast and complicated machinery of finance, banking and currency will be accomplished by the currency bill. Its fundamentals provide

The issue of currency, guaranteed by the Government, based upon notes and bills representing commercial transactions and backed by a gold reserve. The new currency is expected to contract and expand to meet the varied demands of trade.

The concentration of the bank reserves of the country in regional institutions capitalized by the banks of the country and controlled by directors elected by the banks.

The creation of a market for the negotiable commercial paper which forms the bulk of the assets of the banks, where, in times of stress, those assets may be easily and without loss transformed into cash.

The establishment of from 8 to 12 great regional banks throughout the country, which will issue currency, rediscount paper and centralize and mobilize the reserves of the local banks.

The creation of a Federal reserve board of seven members appointed by the President, with final powers of control and supervision over the entire system.

DATES FOR STATE LEVEES.

They Will Begin With Diplomatic Reception On January 13.

Washington.—The White House has announced a complete change of dates of the state social functions, making each a week later than formerly announced because of the President's contemplated vacation.

The diplomatic reception, which was set for January 6 will now be held on January 13. The other dates are as follows: January 20, diplomatic dinner; January 27, judicial reception. February 3, Supreme Court dinner. February 10, Congressional reception; February 17, Speaker's dinner; February 24, Army and Navy reception.

WRIGHT'S FIRST MOTOR.

Left To French Museum By Aeroplane Builder.

Le Mans, France.—The first motor used by the late Wilbur Wright, of aviation fame, has been left to the museum at Le Mans by Leon Bolles, a French automobile and aeroplane constructor, which recently died. M. Bolles also left to the museum numerous important documents and models relating to the early history of the automobile and the aeroplane.

OUT OF HIS JURISDICTION.

Daniels Will Not Designate Fluid For Christening Battleships.

Washington.—Secretary Daniels ruled that he had no jurisdiction over the kind of fluid that may be used to christen battleships. Protests have been made against the use of champagne in launching the battleship Oklahoma. The suggestion was made that a bottle of pure water be dashed over the bow, or that a white dove, symbolizing peace, be released from the deck.

GREATER SAFETY TRAVELS NEED

Interstate Commerce Commission Files Report.

WANTS ADDITIONIAL POWERS

Railroad Accidents During the Year Made Basis For An Appeal For Legislation.

Washington.—Emphasizing the necessity for further action by the federal government to provide greater safety for travelers and employes upon American railroads, the Interstate Commerce Commission, in its annual report, submitted to Congress, makes vigorous recommendations for additional powers over the physical construction and operation of the roads. The commission also recommends that it be given authority to supervise the issue of railroad securities and some measure of control over the capitalization.

Conditions disclosed by the commission's investigation of railroad accidents during the year present a situation which, the commission believes, ought to be the subject of immediate legislation. Seventy-six accidents investigated comprised 51 collisions and 25 derailments, and caused the death of 283 and the injury of 1,800 persons. Commenting upon these facts, the report says:

"The commission again is compelled to note the exceedingly large proportion of train accidents due to dereliction of duty on the part of employes. Fifty-six of accidents investigated during the year, or nearly 74 per cent. of the whole number, were directly caused by mistakes of employes. These mistakes were of the same nature as those noted by the commission in its last annual report, namely, disregard of fixed signals; improper flagging; failure to obey train orders; improper checking of train register; misunderstanding of orders; occupying main track on time of superior train; block operator allowed train to enter occupied block; dispatcher gave lap order or used improper form of order; operator made mistake in copying order; switch left open in face of approaching train; excessive speed; failure to identify train that was met."

BANK CASHIER ENDS HIS LIFE.

Frank P. Brewer, 52, Commits Suicide After Visiting Mother Who Is Ill.

Hagerstown, Md.—Cutting his throat with a razor, Frank P. Brewer, 52 years old, cashier of the First National Bank of Mercersburg, committed suicide in his home at Mercersburg. Brewer had been suffering from an incurable disease and his mother, with whom he resided, has been critically ill. These things, it is said, made him despondent. He visited his sick mother about midnight. After leaving her bedside he went to his own room, where he slashed his throat.

WORK ON ANTI-TRUST PLAN.

House Committee On Judiciary Resumes Hearings.

Washington.—Hearings preliminary to anti-trust legislation were resumed by the House Judiciary Committee. Representative Morgan, of Oklahoma, appeared in behalf of his bill to establish a Federal corporation commission similar to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

MUSIC AS ANAESTHETIC.

Lulls Youth's Nerves To Rest While Surgeon Operates Upon Artery.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.—With his heart too weak to stand an anaesthetic, the nerves of Stephen Klanatsky, 14 years old, were lulled to rest by music while Dr. Bassin reopened a wound in his left arm, repaired an artery, and then sewed it up. Dr. Bassine said he had used music as an anaesthetic on a man less than a year ago and that it had proved satisfactory.

AUTOIST SENT TO PRISON.

SHOTS EXCHANGED ON TRE RORDER

American Soldiers Return the Fire of Mexicans.

A FEDERAL REGULAR KILLED

Pascual Orozco Notifies War Office that Unless Money Is Forthcoming His Troops Will Take Field Against Huerta.

Presidio, Tex.—An exchange of shots between Mexican and American soldiers on the American line, two miles west of Presidio, resulted in the death of Luis Orozco, a federal regular from the army of General Mercado.

The Mexicans fired the first shots. Orozco, who lived several hours, admitted after being shot that he and his companion had crossed to the American side with a note, and that when they were halted by the American sentries they fired.

As soon as the shooting across the border became known at United States Army headquarters a warning was sent to the federal commander that the shooting must not be repeated.

According to eye witnesses, the American soldiers on duty near where the shooting took place were informed federal soldiers were hiding in a hut 200 yards from the river on the American side. The Americans went toward the hut to investigate. Two Mexicans rushed from the hut and started running toward the river. The patrol called to them to halt. The only answer was a shot from a rifle of one of the fleeing Mexicans. Then the Americans returned the fire and one of the federals dropped. The other continued firing as he ran.

OROZCO WARNS HUERTA.

Will Turn His Forces Against Him Unless Soldiers Are Paid.

Mexico City.—Pascual Orozco, former leader of the Maderists revolt in the north and lately commander of a division of federal volunteer troops in Chihuahua, notified the War Office that unless he is given an allowance of 3,000 pesos weekly for himself and his troops, he and his division will take the field against Huerta. This lends confirmation to the report from El Paso that another revolution is being fomented under the leadership of Emilio Vasquez Gomez, with the possible support of Felix Diaz.

C. & D. CANAL PROJECT.

Senator Saulsbury Introduces Bill For the Purchase.

Washington.—Senator Willard Saulsbury, of Delaware, introduced a bill appropriating $2,514,290 to acquire the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal. The representatives of three States, Pennsylvania, Maryland and Delaware, are now united in advancing the purchase of this canal by the Federal government.

MRS. ROOSEVELT RETURNS.

She and the Colonel Parted Company At Santiago.

New York.—Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt returned home from South America, where she left Colonel Roosevelt during his tour of Chile. Mr. and Mrs. Roosevelt parted at Santiago on November 26, the Colonel going south to Valparaiso.

KILLED BY LODGE BROTHER.

Dr. Saunders Mistook Friend For a Burglar.

Norfolk, Va.—F. P. Wilson, aged 27 years, was shot and killed by Dr. C. Saunders, who mistook him for a burglar. Members of Wilson's family think the dead man, after having been left on a street corner by persons who were bringing him home, attempted to get into the Saunders house, thinking it was his own. Wilson and Saunders belonged to the same lodge.

NO MONEY FOR HUERTA.

His Emissaries Fail To Secure a Loan In Paris.

Paris.—The efforts of the Mexican government to raise money in Europe in order to meet the interest on its obligations falling due in January have thus far been futile. The Paris and London banks, which took $20,000,000 of the loan authorized by the Mexican Congress in the spring and an option on the unissued remainder, decline to exercise their option even for a few millions.

WOULD BUY OUT ALL WIRE LINES

Postmaster General Burleson's Annual Report.

THE P. O. SELF-SUPPORTING

Declares the Government Should Also Take Over the Telegraph and Telephone Lines.

Washington.—A sweeping declaration in favor of the principle of government ownership of telephone and telegraph lines and an assertion that the Postal Service now is self-supporting for the first time since 1883, are features of the annual report of Postmaster General Burleson, transmitted to Congress.

Concerning the acquisition of telephone and telegraph lines, Postmaster General Burleson says that the government has demonstrated its capacity to conduct public utilities, and, from his present information, he is inclined clearly to the taking over by the Postoffice Department of the telegraph lines and possibly, also, of the telephone lines. Discussing that the Postmaster General says:

"A study of the constitutional purposes of the postal establishment leads to the conviction that the Postoffice Department should have control over all means of the communication of intelligence. The first telegraph line in this country was maintained and operated as a part of the postal service, and it is to be regretted that Congress saw fit to relinquish this facility to private enterprise. The monopolistic nature of the telegraph business makes it of vital importance to the people that it can be conducted by unselfish interests, and this can be accomplished only through government ownership.

"Every argument in favor of the government ownership of telegraph lines may be advanced with equal logic and force in favor of the government ownership of telephone lines. It has been competently decided that a telephone message and a telegram are the same within the meaning of the laws governing the telegraph service and therefore it is believed that the statute enabling the government to acquire, upon the payment of an appraised valuation, the telegraph lines of the country will enable the government to acquire the telephonic network of the country.

It is gratifying to report" says he, "that the total expenses of maintaining the postal service for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1913, is found to be exceeded by the revenues for the same period; that there is an actual surplus of $3,841,906.78; and that the postal service is now for the first time since 1883 self supporting."

As to his general financial policy Postmaster General Burleson says:

"The dominant policy of the present administration will be to conduct the postal service for the convenience of the public and not for profit. The prime consideration in perfecting the personnel of the postal service shall be to recognize efficiency and to eliminate partisanship."

Notable recommendations to Congress for the enactment of additional legislation to facilitate and extend the operations of the postal service are made. Among the more important are the following:

"That the Postoffice Department be given exclusive jurisdiction over the selection of the sites for public buildings to be used wholly for postoffice purposes, and joint authority with the Secretary of the Treasury in the selection of sites for federal buildings to be used jointly by the postal and other branches of the government service.

"To amend existing law in order to allow $2,000 indemnity for accidental death of any officer or employe of the postal service or for death within one year as the result of injuries sustained in the service in the line of duty."

"The elimination of surety bonds now required of postal officers and employes and the substitution of a guaranty fund established and maintained by assessments prescribed by the Postmaster General to contract for experimental aerial eral.

"To authorize the removal of the limitation on the amount of postal savings deposits with the proviso that interest shall not be paid on more than $1,000. This will permit postal savings depositors to deposit any amount."

The report indicates that the growth of the parcel post business has been phenomenal. "The experience gained in the operation of the system under the revised rates and weights has shown that a further reduction of rates and increase of weight limit is justified," says the Postmaster General."

BOMBS RAINED UPON MOORS.

A Flotilla Of Spanish Military Aviators At Work.

Madrid.—A large force of Moorish tribesmen were routed with heavy loss by the Spanish troops at Muley Abselam, Spanish Morocco. Spanish military aviators threw the Moors into disorder with showers of bombs. The Spaniards attacked the Moors with a brigade of sharpshooters, a battalion of infantry, four batteries of artillery and a large body of native auxiliaries.

GLYNN SIGNS REFORM BILLS.

Workmen's Compensation Last To Become Law.

Albany, N. Y.—All of the bills passed at the recent session of the legislature now are laws. The Governor signed the last of them—the workmen's compensation bill—Wednesday night. Previously during the day he had signed the various election bills providing for direct primaries, the direct election of United States senators, the Massachusetts ballot and other general election legislation.

COMMERCIAL

Weekly Review of Trade and Market Reports.

Dun's Review says:

"With the approach of the annual inventory period a general slowing down of business is to be expected, yet more than seasonable quietness now prevails, both in commercial and industrial channels. Christmas sales compare fairly well with those of a year ago, although the activity is not general.

"Failures this week numbered 416 in the United States, against 353 last year, and 35 in Canada, compared with 47 a year ago."

Bradstreet's says:

"Final distribution is irregular in volume, being helped by holiday spirit in buying, but finding drawbacks in the mild weather. The number of idle hands is larger than at any previous date this year, but in some instances pessimism seems to have outrun actuality and something like a reaction from the blue tinged type of reports is in evidence in a few lines. There is a rather better feeling, for instance, in some branches of the iron trade, and pig iron sales are larger."

SYNOPSIS.

Scarlett, an American soldier of fortune in the employ of the French Imperial Police at the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian war, is ordered to arrest John Buckhurst, a leader of the Communists and suspected of having stolen the French crown jewels. While searching for Buckhurst, Scarlett is ordered to arrest Countess de Vassart and her group of socialists and escort them to the Belgian border. Scarlett finds Sylvia Elven of the Odeon disguised as a peasant and carries her to La Trapre where the countess and her friends are assembled. All are arrested. The countess saves Scarlett from a fatal fall from the roof of the house. He denounces Buckhurst as the leader of the Reds and the countess conducts him to where Buckhurst is secreted. German Uhlans descend on the place and Buckhurst escapes during the melee. Scarlett is wounded. He recovers consciousness in the countess' house at Morsbronn, where he is cared for by the countess. A fierce battle is fought in the streets between French and Prussian soldiers. Buckhurst professes repentence and returns the crown jewels to Scarlett. He declares he will give himself up to the authorities. Scarlett doubts his sincerity. Buckhurst urges the countess to go to Paradise. Buckhurst admits that he receives pay from the Prussians for information which he does not give. He secures passports to the French lines for Scarlett, the countess and himself. Scarlett reports to the secret service in Paris and finds Mornac, shadow of the emperor, in charge. He deposits the crown jewels and later, when making a detailed report, finds that pebbles have been substituted for the real stones. Speed, a comrade in the service, warns Scarlett that Mornac is dangerous. He also informs him that all the government treasure is being transported to the coast for shipment out of the country. Scarlett and Speed escape to join a circus. The circus arrives at Paradise. An order is received by the mayor calling the citizens to arms. Jacqueline, daughter of the Lizard, offers to join the circus to give exhibitions in the character of a mermaid. Scarlett makes friends with the Lizard. Scarlett calls on the countess at her home in Paradise. He finds Sylvia Elven also there. He learns the countess has withdrawn from the socialists. They swear eternal friendship. The Lizard learns for Scarlett, through one Tric-Trac, that Mornac is head of a communistic conspiracy. Scarlett learns something of Sylvia Elven through a fellow performer named Kelly. Orders regarding the treasure trains are changed, owing to the discovery of a plot at Lorient. Orders are received for the expulsion of the circus. Buckhurst appears in Paradise and secures recruits for the red flag. Scarlett admits he is in love with the countess. Scarlett is injured by the circus lions and taken to the home of the countess.

CHAPTER XIX.—Continued.

"Preparations for train-wrecking, I should say," he replied, bluntly. "They are tinkering with the trestle. Buckhurst's ragamuffins have just seized the railroad station at Rose-Sainte-Anne, where the main line crosses, you know, near the ravine at Lammerin.

"That's all I have to report, except that your friend, Robert the Lizard, is out yondor flat on his belly under a gorse bush, and he wants to see you."

"The Lizard!" I exclaimed. "Come on, Speed. Where is he?"

"Yonder, clothed in somebody's linz uniform. He's one of them. Scarlett, do you trust him? He has a rifle."

"Yes, yes," I said, impatiently. "Come on, man! It's all right; the fellow is watching Buckhurst for me."

I greeted the poacher frankly, offering my hand; he took it, then his hard fist fell away and he touched his cap.

"I have done what you wanted," he said, sullenly. "I have the company's rolls—here they are." He dragged from his baggy trousers pockets a mass of filthy papers, closely covered with smeared writing. "Here is the money, too," he said, fishing in the other pocket; and, to my astonishment, he produced a flattened, soiled mass of bank notes. "Count it," he added, calmly.

"What money is that?" I asked, taking it reluctantly.

"Didn't you warn me to get that box—the steel box that Tric-Trac sat down on when he saw me?"

"Is that money from the box?" I exclaimed.

"Yes, m'sieu. I could not bring the box, and there had been enough blood shed over it already. Besides, when Buckhurst broke it open there was only a bit of iron for the scrap heap left."

I touched Speed's arm to call his attention; the poacher shrugged his shoulders and continued: "Tric-Trac made no ceremony with me; he told me that he and Buckhurst had settled this Doctor Delmont, and the other—the professor—Tavernier."

"Murdered them?" muttered Speed. "Dame!—the coup du Pere Francois is murder, I suppose."

Speed turned to me. "That's the argot for strangling," he said, grimly.

"Go on," I motioned to the poacher. "How did you get the money?"

"Oh, pour ca—in my turn I turned sonneur," he replied, with a savage smile.

A souneur, in thieves' slang, is a creature of the footpad type who, tripping his victim flat, seizes him by the shoulders and beats his head against the pavement until he renders him unconscious—if he doesn't kill him.

I asked the poacher why Buckhurst had come to Paradise, and why his banditti had seized the railroad at Rose-Sainte-Anne.

"Ah," cried the Lizard, with a ferocious leer, "that is the kernel under the limpet's tent! And I have uncovered it—I, Robert Garenne, bon eang de Jesu! Listen, messieurs! We are to wreck the train for Brest tonight. Do you comprehend?"

"Where?" I asked, quietly.

"Just where the trestle at Lammerin crosses the ravine below the house of Josephine Tanguy."

Speed looked around at me. "It's the treasure-train from Lorient. They're probably sending the crown diamonds back to Brest in view of the Uhlans being seen near Quimper."

"On a false order?"

"That is the truth," said the Lizard; "Tric-Trac told me. They have the code book of Mornac."

I thought quietly for a moment, then asked the poacher whether there was a guard at the semaphore of Saint-Yssel.

"Yes, the soldier Rolland, who says he understands the telegraph—a sot from Morlaix." He hesitated and looked across the open moor toward Paradise. "I must go," he muttered; "I am on guard yonder."

I offered him my hand again; he took it, looking me sincerely in the eyes.

"Let your private wrongs wait a little longer," I said. "I think we can catch Buckhurst and Mornac alive."

"For your sake," said the poacher, clutching my hand in a tightening grip—"for your sake I have let Mornac go—let him pass me at arm's length, and did not strike. But I swear to you that if you miss him this time, I shall not miss—I, Robert the Lizard!"

"You mean to kill Mornac?" I asked.

His eyes blazed. His strong fingers closed tighter on my hand. "Do you understand that he wronged me—me, the soldier Garenne, in garrison at Vincennes; he, the officer, the aristocrat?"

He choked, crushing my hand in a spasmodic grip. "Ami, the little red deer was beautiful—to me. He took her—the doe—a silly maid of Paradise—and I was in irons, m'sieu, for three years."

"Your wife?" I asked, quietly.

"Yes, ami."

He dropped my numbed fingers and rubbed his eyes with the back of his big hand.

"Then Jacqueline is not your little daughter?" I asked, gravely.

"Hers—not mine. That has been the most terrible of all for me—since she died—died so young, too, m'sieu—and all alone—in Paris. If he had not done that—if he had been kind to her. And she was only a child, ami, yet he left her."

All the ferocity in his eyes was gone; he raised a vacant, grief-lined visage to meet mine, and stood stupidly, heavy hands hanging.

Then, shoulders sloping, he shambled off into the thicket, trailing his battered rifle.

When he was very far away I motioned to Speed.

"I think," said I, "that we had better try to do something at the semaphore if we are going to stop that train in time."

CHAPTER XX.

The Semaphore.

The telegraph station at the semaphore was a little, square, stone hut, roofed with slate, perched high on the cliffs. As we drew nearer we could see the sentry very distinctly, rifle slung muzzle down, slouching his beat in the sunshine.

The soldier left his post as we started toward him, and advanced, blinking in the strong sunshine, meeting us half-way.

"Are you the soldier Rolland?" I asked.

He admitted that he was with prompt profanity, adding that if we didn't like his name we had only to tell him so and he would arrange the matter.

I told him that we approved not only of his name but his personal appearance; indeed, so great was our admiration for him that we had come clear across the Saint-Yssel moor expressly to pay our compliments to him in the shape of a hundred franc note. I drew it from the soiled roll the Lizard had intrusted to me, and displayed it for the sentinel's inspection.

"Under certain conditions," I said, "these five louis are for you."

The soldier winked. "I know what you want; you want to go in yonder and use the telegraph. What the devil," he burst out, "do all you bourgeois want with that telegraph in there?"

"Has anybody else asked to use it?" I inquired, disturbed.

"Anybody else?" he mimicked. "Well, I think so; there's somebody in there now—here, give your hundred francs or I tell you nothing, you understand!"

"Who is in that hut?"

"A lady—she comes often—she gives ten francs each time. Zut!—what is ten francs when a gentleman gives a hundred! She pays me for my complaisance—bon! Place aux dames! You pay me better—bon! I'm yours, gentlemen. War is war, but money pulls the trigger!"

"Wait here," I said, disgusted, and walked toward the stone station.

The side door was partly open; I stepped in noiselessly and found myself in a small, dusky closet, partitioned from the telegraph office. Immediately the rapid clickine of the Morse instrument came to my ears, and mechanically I read the message by the sound as it rattled on under the fingers of an expert:

"—Must have already found out that the signals were not authorized by the government. Before the Fer-de-Lance returns to her station the German cruiser ought to intercept her off Groix. Did you arrange for this?"

There was a moment's silence, then back came rattling the reply in the Morse code, but in German:

"Yes, all is arranged. The Augusta took a French merchant vessel off Pont Aven yesterday. The Augusta ought to pass Groix this evening. You are to burn three white lights from Point Paradise if a lauding-party is needed. It rests with you entirely."

Another silence, then the operator in the next room began.

"The insurgents here, under an individual in our pay, one John Buckhurst, are preparing to wreck the train at the Lammerin trestle.

"If the Augusta can reach Point Paradise tonight, a landing-party could easily scatter these insurgents, seize the treasures, and re-embark in safety.

"There is, you declare, nothing to fear from Lorient; the only thing, then, to be dreaded is the appearance of the Fer-de-Lance off Groix. She is not now in sight; I will notify you if she appears. If she does not come I will burn three white lights in triangle on Paradise headland. This is all. Be careful. Good-by."

"Good-by," clicked the instrument in the next room. There was a rustle of skirts, a tap of small shoes on the stone floor. I leaned forward and looked through the little partition window; Sylvia Elven stood by the table, quietly drawing on her gloves. Her face was flushed and thoughtful.

When she had gone, closing the outer door behind her, I sprang to the key, switched on, and at a venture set the switch on the arsenal line, got a quick reply, and succeeded in alarming them sufficiently, I think, for in a few moments I was telegraphing directly to the governor of Lorient, and the wires grew hot with an interchange of observations, which resulted in my running to the locker, tumbling out all the signal bunting, cones, and balls, sorting five flags, two red cones, and a ball, and hastening out to the semaphore.

I had set the signal for the Fer-de-Lance to land in force and wipe Buckhurst and his grotesquo crew from the face of the earth.

"Rolland," I said, "here is another hundred francs. Watch that halyard and guard it. Tonight you will string seven of those little lamps on this other halyard, light them, hoist them, and then go up that tower and light the three red lamps on the left. That lady will never come here again, I think. If she does, she must not touch those halyards. Do you hear? If she offers you money, remember I will double it. But, Rolland, if you lie to me I will have you killed as the Bretons kill pigs; you understand how that is done?"

Walking fast over the springy heath, I told Speed briefly what I had done—that the treasure-train would not now leave Lorient, that as soon as the Fer-de-Lance came in sight of the semaphore Buckhurst's game must come to an end.

Far ahead of us we saw the flutter of a light dress on the moor; Sylvia Elven was going home.

"A spy!" muttered Speed.

"I think," said I, "that she had better leave Paradise at once. Mornac knows her record. Buckhurst would betray her in a moment if he thought it might save his own skin. She ought to leave before the Fer-de-Lance sights the semaphore and reads the signal to land in force."

"Then you'll have to tell her," he said gloomily.

"I suppose so," I replied, not at all pleased.

When we entered the court, Jacqueline, her big, furry cat in her arms, came to the door and greeted Speed with:

"You have been away a very long time, and the thorns are all out of my arms and my legs, and I have been desiring to see you. Come into the house and read—shall we?"

Speed turned to me with an explanatory smile. "I've been reading the 'Idyls' aloud to her in English," he said, rather shyly. "She seems to like them; it's the noble music that attracts her."

She turned away into the house, saying that she would get the book.

I went into the house, leaving them seated on the porch, heads together, while in a low monotone Speed read the deathless "Morte d'Athur."

Daylight was waning. Sylvia sat reading in the Lutheran Bible by the failing light.

"May I speak to you alone a moment, after dinner?" I asked.

"If you wish," she replied.

I bowed and started on, but she called me back.

"Did you know that Monsieur Eyre is here?"

I was astonished, and asked where Eyre had gone.

"He is in your room," she said, "loading your revolver. I hope you will not permit him to go alone to Paradise."

"I'll see about that," I muttered, and hurried up the stairs and down the hallway to my bedchamber.

He sprang to the door as I entered, giving me both hands in boyish greeting. I looked at him keenly but pleasantly.

"You are going to load my revolver, and go over to Paradise and take that balloon from these bandits?" I asked, smiling.

He shrugged his shoulders with a reckless laugh.

"Give me my revolver," I said, coldly.

His face fell. "Let me take it, Mr. Scarlett," he pleaded, but I refused, and made him hand me the weapon.

"Now," I said, sternly, "I want to know what the devil you mean by attempting suicide? Kelly, what's the matter with you? Is life as unattractive as all that?"

His flushed and sullen face darkened.

"You appear here," I said, "after the others have sailed from Lorient. Why? To do yourself the pleasure of ending an embittered life under the eyes of the woman who ruined you. Kelly, I must tell you the—well, something of the truth—as much as you need know . . . now. My friend, she is not worth it."

"Do you think that makes any difference?" he said, harshly. "Let me alone, Scarlett. I know! . . . I know, I tell you!"

"Do you mean to tell me that you know she deliberately betrayed you?" I demanded.

"Yes, I know it—I tell you I know it!"

"And . . . you love her?"

"Yes." He dropped his haggard face on his arms a moment, then sat bolt upright. "Truth is better than life," he said, slowly. "I wanted to end it. . . . I am tired."

"Kelly," I said, "there remains another way to risk your neck, and, I think, a nobler way. There is in this house a woman who is running a terrible risk—a German spy whose operations have been discovered. This woman believes that she has in her pay the communist leader of the revolt, a man called Buckhurst. She is in error. Within the next twenty-four hours I expect to see Buckhurst a prisoner. And when that happens it will go hard with Mademoiselle Elven, for he will turn on her to save himself. . . . And you know what that means; . . . a blank wall, Kelly, and a firing-squad. There is but one sex for spies. She must leave tonight, Kelly. She must try to cross into Spain. Will you help her?"

He nodded, striving to say "yes."

"You know your own risk?"

"Yes."

"Her company is death for you both if you are taken."

He stood up very straight. In what strange forms comes happiness to man!

SECURED A LEGAL OPINION

Farmer Desired to Know Just Exactly Where He "Was At," and Probably He Does.

"You are a lawyer, aren't you?" asked the young farmer.

"Yes," replied the young lawyer genially to his first client, offering a chair and assuming a fine nonchalance.

"Well, I want to know why it is unlawful to kill rabbits."

"Well," said the lawyer, "it is against the law in this state to kill rabbits in the closed season, which includes the summer months, and you can't shoot them at any time without a license."

"Well, s'posin' they get into my cantaloupes. Can't I shoot 'em for trespassin'?"

"No, you can't shoot a rabbit for trespassing. The only thing you can do is to have him arrested."

"If he comes into my house I can shoot him, can't I?"

"Not unless he breaks in. If you leave the door open and he walks in you must not shoot him. But if he accidentally falls into a pot of boiling water you can make soup of him, I suppose."

"It seems to me the rabbit has a great advantage over me. He can eat my cantaloupes and cabbages, but I can't do anything with him."

"You can scare him if you wish. You can shoot at him, but you must not hit him. The rabbit has this advantage over the cantaloupe, too—if you shoot at the rabbit and hit a cantaloupe it is all right. No harm done. But if you shoot at a cantaloupe and hit a rabbit it is a fine and imprisonment.

"However, in the open season all you have to do is get a license and you can go and shoot rabbits or cantaloupes either.

"As you see, you will then have all the advantage. You can get a license and the rabbit cannot, and you can shoot, a privilege denied to cantaloupes. You really have quite an advantage.

Public Health.

John Burns, member of parliament, in a recent address asserted that it was to English speaking peoples that the world is indebted for the great codes that have been originated for the care of the public health. He said that these peoples are the colonizers of the world, they are modern Romans, whose strength lies in their limbs not in their swords, and this is due to their noble motherhood. "Healthy parents," says Mr. Burns, "happy children. For this the parents must be cleanly wed children nobly bred, wisely fed, and firmly led." He advocated plain living, gave statistics to show that high wages did not lessen mortality among children, and that in English farm laborers the death rate was much smaller than in other pursuits though wages were very low.

Luxurious Wrap for Cold Weather

ONE of the full, short coats trimmed with fur which are unlike those of any previous season and immensely successful now, is shown in the picture. A muff of the fur used for a border about the bottom of the coat and appearing in the collar is worn with coats of this kind.

Costly broadtail fur is used in the body of this luxurious wrap, and Fitch fur trims it. Few wraps of broadtail are worn, in deference to a sentiment which has grown up against it. The handsomest plushes make up into wraps quite as beautiful, and are furnished with the same expensive furs in borders and muffs.

The heavier furs will not answer for wraps of this kind. Natural and dyed squirrel and ermine are used, and sealskin is ideal for ample garments which must not be too heavy. Instead of furs, handsome plushes are used for garments which are to be within a reasonable cost. These plushes in the best grades are high priced fabrics, but at that, much less costly than fur. There are cheaper grades that will look well and outlast the season. For wraps and outside garments nothing is more fashionable and more satisfactory than the plush imitations of fur, which are often so close in appearance to the original as to deceive the average eye.

The furs most favored for trimming coats are martin, skunk, civet cat, fitch and fox. These are the moderately long haired furs. Mink and sable and ermine (all growing higher in price constantly) are also employed. All furs are used in wide and narrow bandings, and in trimmings for costumes and millinery.

Sleeves in the new wraps are very roomy—the kimono and bat-wing styles prevailing. There is no trouble about crushing the bodice under fur wraps, because of the light weight of furs used in the body of the wraps, and there are ample sleeves and armseyes.

The hat worn with this pretty coat is of black velvet, one of few having a blocked crown. The trimming is a generous, fan-shaped spray of soft white feathers. There is an attractive and novel bag carried for the accommodation of the various belongings which vanity fair must needs have near at all times. The coin purse, handkerchief, powder puff, etc., placed in small compartments on the inside, do not distort the shape of this plain and elegant accessory. It is of knitted silk finished with silver rings and silver filagree monogram, and is carried by a silk cord.

Good furs, in garments or in trimmings, amount to a good investment, if well cared for. It is not likely that the cost will grow less; all the chances are that it will increase for several years. But furs must be cared for. The industrious moth will succeed in finding them when one thinks he is well shut out. Cold storage is therefore good for furs, but they may be protected by placing them in paper bags with moth balls, and in cedar chests. They should be examined occasionally, hung in the sun and beaten. The sunlight is death to moths.

JULIA BOTTOMLEY.

HIGH COIFFURE PROMISES TO BE LEADING STYLE

HATLESS ladies at the horse show in New York appeared to be indulging in a go-as-you-please style of hair dressing. But coiffures were well taken care of. Waves and small curls reappeared, and there was a plentiful showing of high coiffures. Among these were a few extremely high and really very pretty new ideas.

Changes are coming and, in fact, have arrived, but no definite style has established itself as a universal favorite yet. The liking for covering the top of the ear remains. But hair which has been encroaching upon the face, over the cheeks, is no longer good style.

The chances are that in the many new coiffures which have been designed for this season the ears will be wholly or partly covered. Light fringes over the forehead, middle and side parts, hair coiled high or low, but always waved, and little, short, full curls are in evidence everywhere. For popularity the high coiffure promises to be the winner in the race for favor.

Much depends upon the styles in millinery which are favored for spring. For evening wear, and especially where hats are removed or not worn at all, Miladi may wave and curl and coil and pile up her crowning glory to her heart's content. Also her coiffure ornament or evening head dress may be as elaborate as any of which we have a history. Some of those designed for wear in Paris are said to be twenty-eight inches in height, which is something over two feet, you know. But the Parisiennes have a certain grace in carrying off extremes which is peculiar to them, their stock-in-trade for setting styles before the rest of the world. They are to be followed at a conservative distance.

Flower Boutonnieres.

The dark-hued costumes of winter must be enlivened by a touch of color, and this is often accomplished by the wearing of a colored boutonniere. Some very odd materials are used. Metal bouquets are artistically tinted, and medium-sized orchids made of metal and delicately tinted are pretty and frail, set off by dark green velvet leaves. Porcelain flowers are a decided novelty, dyed or painted in nature's own colors. Small flowers or fruits are seen in rich wintry tones that harmonize with the costume. Even oranges, lemons and grapes are pressed into service. White velvet gardenias are enhanced by gilt buds. When combined with metal flowers they acquire distinction. Flowers are also made of a cloth that resembles patent leather and is called "oil cloth." Its softness makes it possible to twist it into realistic blossoms.

Fads and Fancies.

Jet is increasingly used as the season advances.

Last year's gown may be rejuvenated by a fichu.

The gown of one color may have two or three girdles.

There is a slash in almost every skirt worn by women.

For little girls the Russian blouse dresses are in the lead.

The smartest tailored costumes emphasize the belted coat.

Coming of Beads.

There is a great vogue in beads; they are used for embroideries, fringes, girdles, and all sorts of things in dress. Time was when sequins took their place, but now beads are back again in full possession, and such sequins as are used bear a stronger resemblance to beads than to scales.

TEACHING PUPILS TO SPELL

New York Newspaper Thinks That Possibly There is an Error in the Present Process.

So much has been said and printed about the very independent way pupils in school now spell—of course, there were always bad spellers—that the reason for it should be known. A dozen or more years ago a new method of teaching spelling was devised and from one end of our educator ridden country to the other was practiced and favorably reported on. It was called "visualization," and meant that a mental picture was certainly impressed on "the child's" mind by merely looking at the word. It never occurred to the visualizers that "the child" had always looked at the word and that the drill they proposed to do away with was all there was to the spelling lesson.

Many a learned sounding word has been of service to expert educators in this way. Interalia, laboratory, efficient, to function, to sense, vital, progress, appreciate, and correlate; 'twas a good game and then began the division of words like eggs, into right, partly right, and strictly right, and rating 25 per cent, children 55 per cent, as in Leslie county, Kentucky, and some places nearer home, where all these new devices were practiced and "reported favorably on regardless of facts," as one may see who reads Page 251, Eleventh Report of Schools, which condemns these practices.

To encourage pupils is laudable, but to tell them they are right when they are wrong, even though we may recognize degrees of wrongness in words as in eggs, is certainly not commendable. The action of educator Sweetman in accepting "bad" for "bade" should be no model for others to follow, nor for himself to continue. There have been many like him; he's but a type.—New York Times.

Difference Between Rib and Bar.

Mr. James Stuart, a former lord rector of St. Andrew's university, has in one of his books the following illustrations of word values. On one occasion Mr. Stuart chanced to be assisted in some engineering work at Cambridge by a native of Fifeshire. In the words of the narrative, "he (the worker) lodged with an employe of the Pitt Press, but one day, to my surprise, he changed his lodgings.

"I asked him what was the reason for the change. 'There's a kind o' cauldness sprung up between me and the man,' said he. 'How's that, lames?' 'Weel,' he said, 'they use very curious words here.' 'What kind of words?' said I. 'Weel,' said he, 'they ca' ribs of a grate bars.' 'But what had that to do with it?' said I. 'Oh, said he, 'it just came aboot this way. I was sittin' wi' a bit chisel in my hands afore the fire, and I wanted to soften it, and said to the wife, "Will ye just let me slap this in your ribs?" and with that she gae a skirl, and in comes the man, and there's been a cauldness between him and me sin' syne.'"

He Had Nothing on Burns.

There is a story of a gentleman who advocating the utility of public schools, who said: "Byron was a Harrow boy." "What of that?" said an opponent, "Burns was a plowboy."

FLY DESERVES NO FRIENDS

Kill Him Without Mercy Wherever You Find Him, Is Edict That Has Gone Forth.

The true cussedness of the fly seldom shows forth till about this time in the fall. He is more numerous now than before, and seems many times a greater nuisance.

He haunts doors and windows, watching for a chance to slip inside. He promenades over your face while you are trying to get a beauty sleep in the morning. He comes from garbage can and stable to walk over every uncovered bit of food, and he seems to take a fiendish pleasure in drowning himself in the milk pitcher.

The Chinaman who hates you bad enough will kill himself on your doorstep, so that his ghost may haunt you. The fly loads himself with typhoid germs and plunges to a milky grave that he may start an inflammation in your Fever's patches.

Fly swatting now is necessary, but palliative. The buzzing pest is of too well growth to be destroyed. All that can be done is to hold him in check, starve him by covering all garbage and stable litter, catch and kill him when possible—and resolve to make a more effective campaign against this murderer of babies next spring.

Turtles.

"Tattoo," the word that, starting from unconnected sources in Holland and the South seas, has come to represent two unconnected things by the same sound and spelling, is an example of a curious trick of our language. Another is "turtle." Nowadays what it most commonly suggests is the creature that gives the soup; so that we have Mark Twain's young man in Palestine disgusted because the mud turtle will not sing, though the voice of the "turtle" should be heard in the land (but the original English "turtle" was the dove (Latin "turtur," representing the sound of its voice). English sailors, coming across the creature which the Spaniards called "tortuga" (our "tortoise," from Latin "tortus," twisted, in allusion to its legs), made of it the "turtle" into which they were more familiar.

A Card of Thanks.

Editor of The Republican:

I desire to express my thanks, through your paper, to the good people and friends of Loch Lynn, Crellin and Pleasant Valley for some splendid donations which were presented to my family and self. It was certainly thoughtful and kind of them to thus remember us. I am certain that our Heavenly Father, who provides for us all, will graciously reward the donors.

Will you also announce our second quarterly meeting? It will be held at Pleasant Valley, by Rev. F. G. Radabaugh, superintendent of the East district, West Virginia conference, Wednesday, Dec. 31st. Business session at 2 p. m. Preaching at 7:30 p. m.

OPTOMETRIST

Is Your Child Handicapved in his or her physical and mental development by defective vision? Out of 100,000 school children examined in New York city, nearly 30 per cent. were found to be in need of glasses. In Boston the percentage was found to be slightly over 20 per cent., and most of these children were down on the books as "stupid," "stubborn" or unruly. In Philadelphia 351 children were discovered who could not read ordinary writing on a blackboard at a distance of twenty feet. You should make sure by a thorough examination at the hands of a competent optometrist. That your child is not among this vast army of little citizens who suffer from defective eyesight, delays often result seriously. My examinations are made by the most scientinc accurate methods. If it is found that glasses are not required you will be told so frankly and no charge made for the examination.

W. H. KAHL & SONS have started their brick plant and are making Pressed Brick and Building Blocks of the highest grade at the lowest price. We can guarantee them for all purposes that they can be used, such as Brick Buildings or brick and blocks combined. Ornamental Brick can be seen at their plant. We can color them to suit as desired at a small additional cost. We have a nice pile of them now on hand, selling price $12.00 per M.

¶ Never be afraid to buy a pressed cement brick or block that comes of the home press.

1st. Are superior to tamped brick.
2nd. Are equal to pressed clay brick.
3rd. Compete with pressed clay brick in price.
4th. Better than common clay brick.
5th. Compete with common clay brick in price.
6th. Combine the advantage of concrete and clay
7th. Lay faster than other brick.
8th. Are used by U. S. Government.
9th. Lay easier than other brick.
10th. Perfectly true.
11th. Perfectly uniform.
12th. Specified by architects.
13th. Uniformly dense.
14th. Clean, sharp corners on edges.
15th. Beautiful texture.
16th. Law absorption.
17th. Absolute fire proof.
18th. Do not deteriorate.
19th. Harden with age.

Be Sure You Get These Two Points:

¶ FIRST.—A building must have 253 12 foot stories to secure enough weight to cause these brick to crush under their own weight.

¶ SECOND.—This is the practical way in which any competent architect would figure the load these brick will carry. He would allow a factor of safety of four; consequently he would specify these brick for a building SIXTY-THREE (63) Stories high. Do they build that high in your locality?

H. P. KIRKPATRICK KILLED 31 CARS DITCHED

Heavy Freight Train Ran Wild Down Seventeen Mile Grade

Christmas evening a freight train got beyond control of the crew and ran wild down the seventeen mile grade between Altamont and Bond, on the B. & O. railroad. When east of Altamont the tram began to gain speed despite the perfect working of the air brake and the desperate efforts of the crew to control it. The sleet and snow which had fallen during the day left the rails sleek and dangerous. Bond station, the scene of the wreck, is known as the steepest section of track on the entire B. & O. system. There is a derail safety switch by which runaway trains are diverted from the regular track to a siding which runs up the mountain side. The speed limit being exceeded part of the train of sixty cars, the engine and a few cars, entered this switch, cars further back buckled, wrecking thirty-one cars. Brakeman H. P. Kirkpatrick, who was riding one of the cars in the middle of the train, was caught beneath the wreckage. His body was not recovered for several hours. The remainder of the crew escaped injury.

The wrecking train from Cumberland was sent to clear the track, and although traffic was not much delayed the work of clearing away the debris occupied the attention of the wrecking crew all day Friday. Mr. Kirpatrick came to this country from Indiana and was about 28 years of age. Some months ago he married Miss Nellie Glaze, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David Glaze, of this city. The remains of Mr. Kirkpatrick were brought to Oakland for burial on train No. 55 Friday evening. Mrs. Kirkpatrick accompanied the remains to this city.

The funeral of Mr. Kirkpatrick was held in the Lutheran church, of Oakland Monday 2:00 p. m. The services being conducted by Rev. E. Manges. The interment took place in the Oakland cemetery. We learn that the deceased carried an insurance of his life of $3,000 besides that of the B. & O. Relief Fund, $1,500. The widow has the sympathy of the community in this hour of her bereavement.

MINER FOUND DEAD.

Lifeless Body of Patrick Garvey Found Near Westernport.

The body of Patrick Garvey, of Bloomington, a miner aged 65 years, was found on last Friday lying face downward half submerged in water [illegible] baseball park in Westernport, Allegany county, Md. Garvey had left his home in Bloomington the night before to walk to Westernport to visit friends and it is thought that in the darkness he lost his way and fell over an embankment.

SOME DEMOCRATIC ECONOMY.

New Tariff Is Cutting A Great Big Figure.

Secretary of the Navy Daniels, boasts that he forced down the price of American beef contracted for by the Navy Department. A Washington dispatch says:

The recent action of the Navy Department in buying beef from Argentina has forced down the prices of American packers. This is shown, the Navy Department announced to-day, by bids just opened at various pay offices from competitors for domestic contracts for the month of January, February and March.

At every port, excepting Norfolk and Hampton Roads, prices for American beef were based on Argentina quotations, resulting in a saving of several thousand dollars. Awards will be placed for American beef at all ports except the two mentioned, those awards going to Argentina.

"Under the old high tariff law," said Secretary Daniels, "this saving could not be effected, but the recent Democratic tariff bill allows the importation of foreign meet free of duty.

No! Under the old high tariff law no Argentina beef could be brought into the United States to force down the price paid the American farmers for American cattle; nor under the old high tariff law could the money paid by the American farmers as taxes to the American government be sent abroad to buy Argentina beef for the purpose of creating special competition for the American farmer. The American money sent to Argentina for beef is gone. It will not return. Spent in this country it would have still been here to help buy American products and pay to American working men. The few thousand which Mr. Daniels may have saved by shopping the United States beef contract all over the world have been saved at the expense of the American producer, and at a loss to the whole country.

Here is another sample of the benefit of the new tariff to the foreigner:

Welsh tinplate makers have booked orders for forty thousand tons for delivery to American canning and oil concerns between now and June. The American tariff, which had almost destroyed the Welsh tinplate trade, promises in its revised form, to prove the salvation of the industry as they now find they are able to compete successfully with American competitors.

Communion Services.

On Sunday morning in St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church, the pastor, Rev. E. Manges, will conduct preparatory services and receive into the church new members, after which the communion will be administered. This service will also be observed in the evening. As a result of the two services in Oakland there will be no preaching in the Deer Park Lutheran church on Sunday.

SAGE SCHOOL REPORT MISLEADING, ASSERTS SOPT. M. B. STEPHENS

Educator Shows State System Is Not So Bad As It Has Been Pictured.

State Superintendent of Schools M. Bates Stephens, in reply to sections of the report of the Russell Sage Foundation Fund which placed Maryland's schools on a low plane compared to those in the majority of the States, points out that many of the statements made are misleading.

He said:

The report of the Russel Sage Foundation Fund on a comparative study of State school systems will serve a good purpose in directing public attention to weak points in the several State school systems and as such it should have our hearty commendation. Interests are considered in this comparative study some of which do not affect in a vital way the efficiency ot a school system. It must be remembered, too, that the report does not contain many tests of efficiency which are fundamental but difficult to gather the data for comparison. Taking the 10 items investigated and presented it would be unfair to determine the general efficiency of schools. The States rank is on the tests given and as such it is intesesting, but not conclusive in measuring the real worth of public education in a State.

"The statistics upon which the comparisons of the report were made were taken largely from the annual report of the Commissioner of Education, who for years has been trying to formulate uniform blanks to be used by all the State school departments, but the task has not been finished; until that is done many statistics are estimated.

"Perhaps the most shocking part of the report to Marylanders was the low rank given our State—thirty-sixth. Every State, except Florida, which mantains separate schools for white and colored children, ranks lower than Maryland; so, working under like conditions, Maryland stands at the top of its list. Until the colored schools are made as good as white schools in those States maintaining the two systems it will be very hard for such a State to rank high. If the schools in Maryland maintained for white children were compared with the schools of States supporting but the one system of schools attended by all children of school age Maryland's rank would be as gratifying as its present standing has been disappointing.

"The following statements of the article referred to are misleading and common justice demands the facts as they are, which are taken from the latest report of the United States Commissioner of Education, made in 1912:

"1. 'Only 17 States have a greater number of illiterates than Maryland.'

"The percentage of illiterates, census of 1910, 10 years of age and over, is for the United States, 7.7; for Maryland 7-2 per cent., which is lower than the average for the country. When we analyze this we find (a) white native parents, 3 per cent.; (b) foreign born, 11.9 per cent. and (c) colored, 23.47. The large proportion of colored people and of the foreign born raises the percentage of illiteracy. The school cannot be blamed altogether for this rating. Hence, while there are only 17 States which rank lower than Maryland in this test we should remember that our showing is above the general average for the nation.

2. "Forty States send more children to school in proportion to their population than Maryland.

"This statement is not true. Based on percentage of total population enrolled in elementary, secondary and higher schools, the average for the nation is 21.36 per cent., while that of Maryland is 20.21, which is very nearly the general average. Eighteen (and not eight) States have a lower average than Maryland and this showing in spite of the absence of compulsory school attendance, except for Baltimore city.

"Based on percentage of population 5 to 24 years enrolled in public and private schools, the average for the nation is 53.1, while that for Maryland is 50.91. Fifteen States rank lower than Maryland, including Pennsylvania and New York.

"School population from 5 to 18 enrolled the percentage for the nation is 72.54 and for Maryland 68.94. In 1890 it was 60.37, a gain of over 8 per cent. In this comparison 12 States are lower, including New Hampshire, Rhode Island, New York and Pennsylvania. It estimated on per cent. of total population enrolled in school we find for the nation it is 19.20 and for Maryland 18.12. Eighteen States rank lower than Maryland, including California, New Jersey, New York, Massachuetts and Rhode Island.

"3. 'Only one State has worse school attendance than Marylands.'

"If this were ever true, it is not so now. In 1911 the average number of days attended by pupils for the nation was 111.8, and for Maryland 113.4 There are 25 States lower in rank than Maryland. The average number of days schools were kept open for the nation was 156, while for Maryland it was 185. Only two States have a longer school year—Rhode Island and New York. The average number of days attended by each pupil enrolled for the nation is 111.8 and that for Maryland 113.4. There are 25 States which rank lower than Maryland in the number of days each pupil actually attends school. The unsually long school year in this State necessarily makes a bad showing in rank when based on number attending daily for each 100 enrolled. Only three States rank lower than ours, viz., Oklahoma, Mississippi and Kentucky, yet in actual time spent in school by each pupil annually our rank should be twenty-third and not forty-seventh.

"4. 'Forty-five expends more money on their school in proportion to their wealth than this State.'

"It would be interesting to learn just how such a comparison is made. School officials of Maryland would feel complimented on their economical management of our schools if but two States spend less per $100 of wealth. The item of school salaries is the big one in school maintenance. The average salary for the nation in 1911 was $466.40 and for Maryland $502.37. Fifteen States pay larger salaries. Estimated on expense per capita of school population, 5 to 18, for the nation, $17.97, and for Maryland it is $11.65. Fifteen States pay less, and yet in the report of the Russell Sage Foundation only two States raise less for schools in proportion to wealth.

"5. 'The report shows that Maryland has no laws relative to medical inspection of school and scholars and no laws relative to schoolhouse construction.'

Considerable progress has been made since 1910 in regard to the first topic. While we have no State-wide plan for medical inspection, school boards here and there are encouraging it and much benefit has come to our school population. The Maryland Society of Social Hygiene, Society for the Prevention of Blindness, The Maryland Anti-Tuberculosis Society and similar organizations have been studying with our teaching force in the Instute and Teachers' Association the cause of the spread of disease and the means of prevention. For the reason there is no State-wide mandatory provision for such inspection it is hardly fair to assume that nothing has been done along this line. We have had no compulsory school attendance laws, nevertheless, one-fifth of our whole population go to school.

"This showing is almost as good as in some States where compulsory education obtains. Maryland needs a State-wide attendance law, and mandatory at that. The State Board of Education has been advocating such a measure but the cry of additional expense has had an unwarranted effect. We need more money—much more money—so that our standard can be raised and every child of school age guaranteed an elementary education at least.

"The school people of the State have agreed upon a legislative program which if enacted into law will raise our entire school system to a plane of commendable efficiency.

"With the aid of the press, that our school needs may be presented to every parent in such a way that he will realize his sense of duty to his child and his obligations to the state, there will come an awakening of interest and a demand for better school conditions which will require that no schoolhouse shall be constructed unless the plans are approved by an architect or the State Department of Education."

NORTH GLADE

The North-Glade Mutual Telephone Company recently organized held a meeting last Tuesday night. A large number of the stock-holders were present. The following officers were elected, premanently. President, G. W. Moon; Vice Pres. Judge, C. S. Harvey; Secretary, J. L. Fitzwater, Jr., Treasurer, D. E. Beckman, Trustees, A. H. Reckner, J. E. Beckman, Ervin Custer. R. E. Reckner was elected lineman. In the past few days a number of men have been along the Meadow Mountain road planting poles. If the weather permits the company expects to extend the line to Swanton in the next few weeks.

We nope our friend and neighbor, Dora Beckman, will soon be restored to his natural health again. He has been sick some time and unable to be out of the house.

Rev. Oney, of Gettysburg College, is spending his holidays with his many friends of this place. During his stay here he preached several excellent sermons. He expects to return to Gettysburg Monday, the fifth.

Miss Nina OBrine of Glendale, is visiting relatives and friends at Friendsville.

There will be literary in the North-Glade school house Saturday night, January 3rd. The question for debate is; Resolved That intoxicating drinks have killed more people than war. The debators are: Affirmative, Earl Harvey, Harry Hersman, and William Fitzwater. Negative, Robert Reckner, Albert Baker, and John Fitzwater. There will be several comic recitations, dialogues and good instrumental music furnished. You are invited.

James Holvermale was kicked by a horse last week. Jim is suffering intensely but probably it will not prove fatal.

George Reckner called on his girl Saturday night.

Miss Nellie Beckman, who has a responsible position in the paper mill at Luke, Md., spent Christmas with home folks at this place. Miss Nellie returned to her duties Saturday.

Mrs. Theo. Beckman took a business trip to Piedmont Monday, returning Wednesday.

Frank Brobst was sleighing with his girl recently. Frank is the boy that likes to see the snow come.

Preaching services in the M. E. church next Sunday morning at 11 o'clock by Rev. McCamic.

Miss Edna Rhodes, who has been employed in Piedmont for the past several months, is now visiting relatives and friends here.

John Ed. Bender of Meadow Mountain called on J. L. McRobie Sunday.

Professor George W. Moon, one of our good, faithful school teachers made a trip last week into West Virginia, returning to his home, at this place late Saturday night.

Wishing you all a Happy New Year.

THE PEOPLE NOBLY RESPONDED TO THE CALL

For Aid In The Work Of The Civic Club In Spreading Christmas Cheer.

A few noble women of Oakland succeeded in a very few days in a work that took with it cheer into the homes of many of Oakland's less fortunate residents by sending out a call for help, asking for donatons of anything to wear and eat and for toys for the children who would probably have had nothing in this line on Christmas day had it not been for the foresight of the members of the Club. As it transpired, however, everyone that was needy was remembered and the result was all enjoyed a truly Merry Christmas.

The report of the committee having this branch of the Civic Club's work is printed below:

Oakland as a whole surely showed a true Christmas spirit in its generous gifts to the less fortunate ones of this small town on last Tuesday and Wednesday when over forty families were remembered by donations sent in from lodges, churches, merchants and private families. It would make quite a long list to mention all these latter ones; enough it is to say they responded by giving great quantities of clothing and groceries; also many toys that were loved by their own little ones were sorted with in order that another of God's children could be made happy.

The merchants gave abundantly. Mr. Andrew Gonder generously donated three large boxes full of toys, sleds and wagons; Mr. Dixon donated one-half box of oranges and many useful things; Mr. Creutzburg gave clothing, groceries, shoes, etc.; Mr. Hart, shoes and clothing; Mr. Offutt, groceries, toys and candies; Mr. Weimer, shoes; Mr. White, groceries; Mr. Lauer, pop corn balls and candy; Mr. Bolden, a full box of coffee and a case of canned corn; Mr. F. G. Hyde, toys, ribbons, etc.; Mr. James D. Hamill, books; Mr. James Treacy, groceries and baskets; Messrs Davis & Sons, dishes, toys and calendars. To make possible the delivery of all these things Messrs. Thomas Harrie and J. M. Stanton donated the use of their teams and saw that the articles were placed in the proper hands.

Aside from the above money was received as follows:

Knights of Pythias lodge	$10.00
Order of Owls	5.00
Mr. Gilmor S. Hamill	5.00
Rev. James E. Connell	2.00
Mrs. C. Beughaus	1.00
Mr. D. E. Offutt	1.00
Mr. H. L. Jones	1.00
Miss Anna Lowenstein	1.00
Rev. Wm. Shearer	2.00
Mrs. J. C. Ely	1.00
Total	$29.00

Strange as it may seem not a donation was received from any of the many [illegible] loons of our town, yet m most cases the money earned by the heads of the families of these destitute homes was spent in the saloons.

THE DEATH RECORD

DAVID SMITH.

After a week's illness, David H. Smith, 72 years old, died Saturday night at the home of his grandson, Arthur Duckworth, at Bloomington, from bronchial troubles and infirmities incident to old age. Mr. Smith had, for several years, been making his home with his daughter, Mrs. Sarah Zink, of Cumberland. He left there in good health for a visit to his relatives in Bloomington about three weeks ago, where he later became suddenly ill, having contracted a severe cold and continued to grow worse until his death Saturday night. The funeral was held at 10 o'clock Tuesday morning from the residence of Arthur Duckworth at Bloomington. Burial was made in the Bloomington cemetry. He is survived by one brother, Clark Smith, living along the National pike at Redhill, near the Six Mile House; a half brother, Henry Wolford, who lives in Westernport, and the following children: Mrs. Lester Smith, of Shaw, W. Va.; Mrs. Sarah Zink, of Cumberland; Charles Smith, of Elk Garden, W. Va., and D. K. Smith, of Bloomington.

EDWARD ELIAS WINTERS.

At his home near Horse Shoe Run, W. Va., Edward Elias Winters departed this life, Dec. 23rd. 1913, aged 18 years, 2 months and 17 days. He was parlyzed Dec. 6, 1912, but recovered sufficiently to go about and wait on himself but he was never free from pain. He seemed as well as usual when he retired on Sunday night, but complained of being blind on Monday morning.

He seemed to realize that the end was near, for he called for the family and gave them his parting message. About 10 o'clock he suffered another stroke from which he never rallied. He bore his suffering patiently and thus proved Paul's statement in I Cor. 4:17. Brother Winters united with the Lutheran church early in life and loved to serve the church of his choice and was ever anxious for its welfare. At the time of his death he was a member of the church council, which office he had faithfully filled for a number of years. He leaves to morn his loss, his widow, two daughters, a son, and a host of friends. He will be sorely missed in the home where he was a faithful companion, a kind and loving father, in the community where he was a good neighbor, and in the church where he was a valued and willing worker. While we were loathe to give him up, we answer God's will be done. His funeral took place on Christmas morning in the Lutheran church at Texas. In the absence of a regular pastor, the services were conducted by E. Roy Hauser, a student of the Seminary at Gettysburg.

The sympathy of the entire community goes out to the bereaved family in this their hour of sorrow. A FRIEND.

PARCEL POST LIMIT

Benefits to Users Will be Increesed With New Year.

With the increase in the weight limits of parcels of fourth class mail to become effective today, the parcel post will approach nearer the business of the express companies. With the increase in the weight limits will also come increased benefits of the parcel post to shippers who use it.

Today the weight limit for parcels for delivery in the first and second zones will be increased from 20 to 50 pounds.

In the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth zones the limit will be increased from 11 to 20 pounds.

On parcels exceeding four pounds in weight in the third, fourth, fifth and six zones the rates of postage will be as follows:

Third Zone—Six cents for the first pound and 2 cents for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

Fourth Zone—Seven cents for the first pound and 4 cents for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

Fifth Zone— Eight cents for the first pound and 9 cents for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

Sixth Zone—Nine cents for the first pound and 8 cents for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

In circulars sent out by the Postoffice Department announcing the new rates attention is called to the necessity for properly preparing articles for mailing in order that they may be easily examined and withstand the handling to which they will be subjected to in transit and reach their destination in a good condition. No change has been made with respect to the limit or size of packages. If a packege is greater in size than 72 inches in length and girth it will not be accepted for mailing.

An Automobile Plow.

The following article taken from the Globe-Democrat, St. Louis, Mo., will be read with much interest by our Garrett county farmers. Says the Globe-Democrat. Inventions are now in making that will radically modify the economic status of the farmer. Many agricultural problems will be solved by new machinery that is at the present time in process of development.

Take ploughing for example. Most laborious and most expensive of all agricultural operations, it uses up more of the farmer's time than other work he has to do. The question naturally suggests itself, cannot we find some easier way to turn the soil over and stir it up?

An Omaha man, named Jardine, himself a farmer, claims to have solved this problem by the invention of an entirely new contrivance for the purpose, which according to the inventor, requires less than half the power used by the mold-board plow. So important does it appear that the president of the Union Pacific Railroad, after seeing a rough home made model at work, turned over to the inventor the facilities of his great shops at Omaha, and placed at his disposal the services of his chief engineer, in order that the device might be perfected.

The plough is an automobile. Its principal feature is a big cylinder, eight feet long, five feet in diameter and weighing six or seven tons, which forms the hind wheels of the machine. The cylinder is covered with sharp-pointed steel teeth, six, eight or ten inches in length. As it rolls over the ground the teeth stick into the soil and carry the latter up over the cylinder. A second cylinder, close behind, likewise provided with teeth, rakes the earth off and drops it back in a finely pulverized condition.

Now, a team of horses, engaged in ploughing travels a mile and a half, or possibly as much as two miles, an hour. A traction power plow covers ground at a rate of two and a quarter miles an hour, perhaps. But it is claimed for this new automobile plough that it runs so light that it travels from four to five miles an hour, and does a better job.

MURDERS WIFE, THEN ATTEMPTS SOICIDE.

Italian Finds Former In Company With Alleged Affinity.

Finding her in company with another man, Pietro Conosante attacked his wife at her home in Blaine, W. Va., across the river from Kitzmiller, this county, with a razor, cutting her throat from ear to ear. She died before the arrival of physicians. The man then pulled the blade across his own throat, inflicting a long but not deep gash. He was rushed to the Hoffman hospital at Keyser, where it is said he will recover. Sheriff Nethkin, of Mineral county, is conducting an investigation. The alleged affinity left Blaine when he learned of the tragedy and has not been seen in that section since.

The tragedy occurred on Wednesday and the details were just learned this morning.

Contosante arrived from New York Wednesday and at once began inquiring as to the whereabouts of his wife.

The woman lived at Blaine at the home of an Italian day laborer. She had told people that her name was Aicyn.

Discovering the abode of his wife, Contosante, it is said, besought her to leave the man with whom she was living and return with her babe to his home in New York, where he was caring for their two children. It is said the woman refused and that he in rage and desperation siezed a razor and attacked her.

Her throat was deeply cut from ear to ear and death was almost instantaneous. The man then made an attempt on his own life. With the bloody razor he slashed his throat from one ear to the other, but the blade did not penetrate deeply enough to touch a vital artery.

Contosante was soon placed in custody and was rushed to the Keyser hospital, where it was found that his wound was not serious and that he would soon recover. Two special guards have him under surveillence.

The body of the woman was taken to the Barrick & Kight morgue. An endeaver has been made to get into communication with relatives. It is likely that burial will be made in Blaine.

MAKES REFORMS IN CURRENCY SYSTEM

New Money Measure Is Most Important Law Relating to Finance Enacted in Many Years—Salient Features of the Code Succinctly Explained.

Washington, Dec. 23.—The new bill affecting the currency, banking and finances of the country is one of the most far-reaching measures relating to finance that have been enacted in many years.

The magnitude of the subject, the diversity of interests affected and the length of the debates in both branches of congress has to follow the changes and grasp the essentials of this highly technical measure in its important bearings on money, finance, banking and the entire range of fiscal subjects, public and private, which it affects.

Summary of the Bill.

With a view, therefore, of presenting succinctly and in non-technical language an epitome of the salient features of the measure as finally framed, the following summary is given of the bill as a whole and of its principal details:

Generally speaking, the first steps to be taken to bring into operation the nation's new financial system will be through an organization committee consisting of the secretary of the treasury, secretary of agriculture and controller of the currency.

Banks have 60 days within which to file their applications for membership in the new system, and one year's time is allowed before the government will compel the dissolution of any national bank that refuses to join.

Will "Take Up the Slack."

The new law will make little direct change in the operation of the present national banks, except to allow them to loan a certain amount of their funds upon farm mortgages.

Its chief purpose is to add a new piece of machinery to the banking system that will "take up the slack" during the changing business conditions of each year; that will give the banks a place to quickly convert their assets into cash in time of need, and that will bring out new federal currency when it is needed, and retire it when money becomes "cheap."

Banks are now required to keep a certain percentage of their deposits as "reserves," part in cash in their own vaults and part of which may be redeposited in the banks of New York, Chicago, St. Louis and other designated cities.

In times of sudden financial demands, when banks have loaned up to the full limit of their resources, these reserves furnish little relief, because if they are paid out to meet demands the banks are left in a precarious condition.

Basic Principle of Law.

The basic principle of the new law is to get these reserve funds out into circulation when necessary without lessening the safety of any bank, and to provide a place to which local banks may rush in a crisis and get cash for the "prime commercial paper" they hold in their vaults.

This is to be accomplished through a chain of regional reserve banks, or "reservoirs of reserves," in which all banks shall deposit a stated part of the money they are required to hold as reserves.

Under the new system, when a financial flurry comes the banks can take commercial paper, such as notes, drafts and bills of exchange, to these "reservoirs," and secure the use of their own reserves, or, if necessary, even the reserve of other banks, by depositing this security.

The new regional banks will receive about one-half of the bank reserves of the country. They in turn will be permitted to loan back to the banks all but 35 per cent. of these reserves, so that in case of emergency millions of cash can be brought out into circulation quickly.

The banks will have to pay for these loans, however, as individuals have to pay for a loan from any local bank, and this charge is expected to prevent the too free use of the reserves held by the regional banks.

New Paper Currency.

A new form of paper currency is also provided for, to come out in case of emergency, and which is expected to go back into the hands of the government when times are normal. These "treasury notes" will be printed by the government and issued through each regional reserve bank, and will bear the guarantee both of the regional bank and of the government.

The following analysis presents the details of the new law without adhering closely to the technical division or language of the measure:

At the head of the system will stand a federal reserve board at Washington, appointed by the president, and to consist of the secretary of the treasury, the controller of the currency and five other members. Two of these shall be expert bankers, but none shall have banking affiliations or own bank stock during their service. This board will exercise general control over the entire system.

The temporary "organization committee," or the federal reserve board, will select from eight to twelve cities where regional reserve banks shall be located and will divide the entire country geographically with these cities as the centers of districts. All national banks in a district will be required to subscribe for the stock of the regional reserve bank in that district and to keep a portion of their reserves there.

Known as "Member Banks."

Local banks will be known as "member banks" because they will own the stock of the regional reserve bank of their district. Each member bank will be required to take capital stock of the regional reserve bank, equal to 6 per cent. of the member bank's capital and surplus. The capital of the regional bank will increase or decrease so that it always represents 6 per cent. of the combined capital and surplus of all the banks of the district that have joined the system.

National banks are compelled to join and state banks are permitted to if they bring their reserve requirements up to the standard set for national banks and submit to national examinations.

Public Can Buy Stock.

Public ownership of the stock of the regional reserve banks is permitted only in case enough banks do not join in any district to provide a capital stock of $4,000,000. In such event the public may purchase the stock in quantities limited to $25,000 for each individual, but the voting of this stock will be placed in the hands of government representatives on the board of directors of the regional reserve bank.

The regional reserve banks may do business only with their member banks, not with the public, except that certain "open market operations" such as the purchase and sale of gold, government, or municipal bonds, and certain forms of bills of exchange, are permitted. These banks will make their earnings from the loans made to member banks, and from the purchase and sale of bonds and foreign bills of exchange.

Must Put Up Cash.

Member banks will be compelled to put up in cash only one-half of their subscription to the capital of the new banks, the rest can be called for if needed by the regional bank. Dividends of 6 per cent. will be paid on this stock to the member banks, and the stock will be non-taxable.

After these dividends are paid one-half of the surplus net earnings goes to create a regional surplus fund, and when this has reached 40 per cent. of the regional bank's paid in capital these earnings are to go into the United States treasury. The balances of the net earnings are to be paid to the United States as a franchise tax.

With the machinery thus created for a new banking system that is supplementary to the commercial banks of the country, the law provides for a gradual transfer of part of the bank reserves to these new "reservoir" banks.

In order not to disturb business conditions, or to withdraw too suddenly the heavy deposits of country banks in the large cities, the law provides that three years may be consumed in shifting these balances and that, if necessary, part of the reserves transferred to the regional banks may consist of commercial paper.

The amount of reserve required from every bank under the new law, and the place where it must be kept, are as follows:

Country banks—Total reserve required, 12 per cent. of demand deposits and 5 per cent. of time deposits. Five-twelfths must be held in the bank's own vaults for two years and four-twelfths after that. For the first year two-twelfths must be kept in the regional bank, increasing one-twelfth each six months thereafter until it reaches five-twelfths of the total reserve. For three years the unallotted part of the reserve may be kept in the banks of reserve cities. After that time it must be kept either in the country banks and vaults or in the regional reserve bank.

Reserve city banks—Total reserve required, 15 per cent. of demand and 5 per cent. of time deposits. Six-fifteenths must be kept in the bank's vaults for the first two years and five-fifteenths after that time. Three-fifteenths must be kept in the regional reserve bank for the first year, increasing one-fifteenth every six months thereafter until it reaches six-fifteenths. For three years the unallotted portion of the reserve may be kept in other banks, in its own vaults, or in the regional bank; after that time in one of the latter two places.

Regional Reserve Banks.

These immense funds of reserves from "member banks," together with government moneys, will make up the deposits of the regional reserve banks Each of these banks will be administered by a board of nine directors, six of whom will be elected by the banks, and three appointed by the federal reserve board.

The regional reserve banks may rediscount—that is, buy at a discount from its member banks—"prime commercial paper" when the member banks desire to convert these assets into money.

Character of Paper.

The exact terms of this important provision as to the character of paper upon which the regional reserve banks may furnish cash are as follows:

"Upon the indorsement of any of its member banks, with a waiver of demand notice and protest by such banks, and federal (regional) reserve bank may discount notes, drafts, and bills of exchange arising out of actual commercial transactions; that is, notes, drafts, and bills of exchange issued or drawn for agricultural, industrial or commercial purposes, or the proceeds of which have been used, or are to be used, for such purposes, the federal reserve board to have the right to determine or define the character of the paper thus eligible for discount, within the meaning of this act.

Nothing in this act contained shall be construed to prohibit such notes, drafts and bills of exchange, secured by staple agricultural products, or other goods, wares, or merchandise, from being eligible for such discount; but such definition shall not include notes, drafts, or bills covering merely investments or issued or drawn for the purpose of carrying or trading in stocks, bonds or other investment securities, except bonds and notes of the government of the United States.

The "Elastic" Element.

The new treasury notes, which are to furnish the "elastic" element in the currency system, and to add to the country's circulating money in time of need, will come into use in the following way:

The notes will be printed by the government, with a distinctive style for each regional reserve bank. One of the three directors named by the federal reserve board for each regional bank will be known as the "federal reserve agent" for that bank, and a supply of the notes will be placed in his custody.

Should a regional bank desire to pay out more money than its cash resources will permit, the law provides that it may put some of its rediscounted commercial paper into the hands of the "federal reserve agent," and received in return the new treasury notes.

For each note that it puts out into circulation, the regional reserve bank must set aside in gold 40 per cent. of the value of the note as a guarantee for its redemption. This gold, with the commercial paper held by the "federal reserve agent," is the protection behind the new money; but these notes will also be guaranteed by the government and may be redeemed in gold in the United States treasury.

Each regional bank, under the act, must keep a reserve of 35 per cent. of the deposits it has received, besides the 40 per cent. gold reserve behind the treasury notes it issues. If the gold reserve behind the notes falls below 40 per cent. a heavy tax is imposed on the bank, which in turn adds the tax to the rate it charges member banks for rediscounts. This was designed to stop an over-expansion of currency. In times of sudden stress the federal reserve board can suspend these reserve provisions, in order to furnish quick relief to any community.

Take Up Bonds.

None of the existing forms of currency except the national bank notes will be disturbed by the new law. The United States bonds, now used to secure the issue of national bank notes, are to be taken up at the rate of $25,000,000 a year by the regional reserve banks and new treasury notes or short term three per cent. bonds will take their place. National bank currency is expected gradually to retire.

The federal reserve board will exercise final control over the entire operation of the system. It can compel one regional bank to loan to another in time of need, can suspend all restrictions surrounding the reserves which regional banks must hold, and can remove directors of regional reserve banks whenever it is believed necessary.

Banks in Control.

While the banks retain control of the boards of the regional reserve banks, their connection with the federal reserve board is only through an advisory council, made up of one representative from each federal reserve district. This council will meet in Washington to confer with the federal reserve board "on general business conditions" and to make recommendations and suggestions concerning discount rates, note issues, and reserve conditions.

An important change in national banking methods embraced in the new law will permit all national banks except those in New York, Chicago and St. Louis to make direct loans on five year farm mortgages up to 25 per cent. of their capital and surplus, or up to one-third of their time deposits

Soldiers ought to swagger according to the colonel of the One Hundred and Sixteenth regiment, which is located at Vannes, near Lorient, France. He has issued a special order to be read in every company of his command, which reads as follows: "A soldier's uniform is only comely when it is worn with pride, even with swagger. Under these conditions it is incomparable. Try to be chic, and while you are in the army, at least put some heart into yourself."

A MAN WITH SCARLET HAIR

Odd Character Held by Police Wanted to See King Alfonso of Spain.

Paris.—The police on duty at the Gare des Invalides spent some anxious moments just before the return of the king of Spain from Rambouillet, where he had been shooting.

A man with scarlet hair, hands dyed scarlet, a scarlet muffler around his neck, and a scarlet feather in his gray hat, wandered about the station inquiring when the royal train would return. He was seen speaking to another man of mysterious appearance, who disappeared when he saw the police watching him. The red-haired, red-handed man was arrested, and gave his name as Edouard Rettet. He declared that he had dyed his hair and hands scarlet for a joke.

As he had done nothing, the police let him go, but he was not allowed to remain at the station to see the king of Spain arrive, and he is being shadowed by the police until more is learned about him.

JAPS GO WILD OVER MEXICAN

Bonfires and Fireworks for Special Envoy LaBarra.

PRESENTED WITH A SWORD.

Charge Discrimination Against the Japanese and Express Disapproval Of Japanese Participation in Panama Exposition.

Tokio.—A so-called national welcome was given here to Francisco de la Barra, special envoy from Mexico to thank Japan for her participation in the Mexican Centennial. Several thousands of people carrying lanterns assembled in the city park, where speeches delivered by prominent men were loudly cheered. This was followed by a brilliant display of fireworks and numerous bonfires.

A procession was then formed and proceeded to the hotel, where Senor de la Barra is staying. After the crowd had serenaded the visitor, a committee of members of Parliament and other popular leaders mounted the balcony, where de la Barra greeted them amid prolonged cheering.

The committee presented to the visitor a sword and other gifts, which he acknowledged briefly and then called for cheers for the emperor and the Japanese nation.

The procession later marched to the Mexican legation and the Imperial Palace, in front of which another meeting was held. A resolution was adopted criticising the United States for discriminating against the Japanese and expressing disapproval of Japanese participation in the Panama Pacific Exposition at San Francisco.

At a dinner given at night by the merchants of Tokio in honor of Senor de la Barra, Baron Makino, the foreign minister, in a speech favored the strengthening of trade between Japan and Mexico.

The opposition press is attacking the foreign office for its alleged timidity in the reception of Senor de la Barra, declaring that it fears any enthusiasm shown for the Mexican would cause resentment in the United States.

Washington.—It is understood by the officials here that the elaborate welcome accorded to Senor de la Barra by the populace of Tokio was particularly designed to express the dissent of one of the Japanese political factions from the official reception planned by the government.

In his capacity of special envoy from Mexico to acknowledge the participation of Japan in the Mexican centennial, diplomatic etiquette provides for certain formal functions in honor of Senor de la Barra. The Japanese government, it was explained here, had adhered strictly to the regular court ceremonial in such cases prescribed. A faction opposed to the government, however, arranged a reception of its own, including a torchlight procession, speechmaking and sword presentation.

HOT FIGHT FOR FEDERAL BANKS

Big Cities Have Commenced An Active Campaign.

HALF DOZEN IN THE ARENA.

Treasury Department Receives Telegrams Giving Reasons Why the Contestant Cities Should Be Selected.

Washington.—Active campaigning for federal reserve banks to be established under the new banking and currency system has been begun by a half-dozen big cities in different parts of the United States, and among the scores of telegrams received at the Treasury Department more than half were devoted to laying bare the reasons for executive approval of their claims.

Secretaries McAdoo and Houston, the "organization committee" authorized by the new law to choose the reserve cities, considered tentative plans for making up the list of not less than eight and not more than twelve cities to be given federal banks. Under the law the organization committee is given the utmost freedom in naming the cities, and the two cabinet officers intend to make an exhaustive but rapid inquiry into the geographical advantages and financial relations of many of the large cities.

One plan that has been suggested to the secretaries is that they make a personal investigation of the claims of cities which are regarded as possible locations, and another is that they hold hearings in Washington. Officials who favor the first plan believe that it can be carried out more quickly and to greater advantage by reason of the number of persons who could be reached. A decision probably will be announced within a few days.

The campaign for a reserve bank has been pressed most vigorously by Seattle, Wash. Scores of telegrams were received from bankers and business men of Seattle pointing out its proximity to Alaska, which is to be included in the system, its advantages as a financial center and urging other reasons for giving it a reserve bank. According to one telegram, Seattle is planning a big demonstration to celebrate the enactment of the law and to boom her chances for getting a bank.

Kansas City, Mo., is making a similar fight, with the support of many nearby cities. Minnesota banks and business houses took up the cudgels in behalf of St. Paul and Minneapolis, and bankers in the South are speaking up in favor of Atlanta, New Orleans and Dallas, Philadelphia and Baltimore are at odds over one bank. Altogether, it promises to be lively for the organization committee before its work is done.

Banks in the following cities applied for membership in the reserve system: Beaumont, Tex.; Union, S. C.; St. Albans, Vt.; Portland, Me.; San Diego, Cal.; Adams, Minn.; Milwaukee, Wis.; Rochester, N. Y.; Little Rock, Ark.; Austin, Tex.; Portsmouth, N. H.; Mobile, Ala.; Carbondale, Col.; Tacoma, Wash., and Lewiston, Mont.

KILLED IN XMAS FESTIVAL PANIC

False Alarm of Fire Causes Panic in Hall.

74 BODIES IN GHASTLY ROW

Perhaps a Dozen Other Corpses Thought To Have Been Taken Away By Friends and Relatives.

Calumet, Mich.—Fourscore persons, mostly children, lost their lives at a Christmas celebration by copper mine strikers in an Italian hall because of a needless panic caused by a false alarm of fire.

While several hundred miners and their wives looked on, the children pressed eagerly toward the stage to receive Christmas presents. At that instant a man put his head in at the door of the hall and yelled "Fire!"

The cry was taken up by those in the hall. Everyone rushed for the doors. The weaker were thrown to the floor and those behind tiled to climb over those ahead of them.

A merciless, frightful scramble, a desperate fight for life ensued. The narrow exits soon become completely choked upon the shrieking and frenzied humanity. Cries of agony, mingled with the screams of women and children in mortal terror, filled the air.

The principal exit was a narrow stairway at the back of the hall. When this had been cleared of the bodies that filled it to the top and a quick accounting had been made, it was found that 74 corpses were piled up beside the building. It is thought that a dozen others were carried away by friends.

Victims Mostly Children.

The dead included 37 girls, 19 boys, 13 women and 5 men.

Excited men and women stood about the building, some dazed by the sudden change from holiday festivities to tragedy, others calling hysterically for missing children and a few even threatening violence to the rescuers for keeping them back from the long row of bodies.

There was not much work for the many doctors who hurried to the scene as soon as the alarm was spread, for those not killed in the first rush were held upright and safe by the very force of the onrush toward the exits.

Only three injured persons were taken to hospitals and a few went home with assistance of friends.

BILL IS AIMED AT FREE TOLLS

Troublesome Canal Problem Again in Congress.

A TWO YEARS' SUSPENSION.

The Measure Introduced By Chairman Adamson and Referred To His Own Committee.

Washington.—Chairman Adamson, of the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, struck his first blow at free Panama Canal tolls for American coastwise vessels.

In a joint resolution he proposes a suspension of the existing law for free tolls to American ships for two years, that the cost of operation of the Panama Canal may be ascertained. During these two years American ships, coastwise and ocean freighters, must pay the same tolls as all foreign ships.

The President of the United States is given authority to pass on the relative cost of using the Panama Canal and its maintenance, and at the end of two years may decide whether the tolls thus collected will be more than sufficient for maintenance of cost of operation of the canal. In this event the President is to enforce the law for free canal tolls for American ships.

The Adamson resolution was referred to his own committee. He has been beaten twice on a like proposition and the committee membership has not been changed in the last two years.

Adamson's resolution provides:

"That the operation and enforcement of the following provision: No tolls shall be levied upon vessels engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States, which provision is the second sentence in Section Five of the act entitled, 'An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection and operation of the Panama Canal and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone,' approved August 24, 1912, shall be and hereby is suspended subject to the following conditions:

"At any time after the Panama Canal shall have been opened and successfully operated for two years, if, in the judgment of the President, the revenues derived from tolls of vessels other than those engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States, shall be sufficient to defray the cost of maintaining and operating the canal and the expense of government and sanitation of the canal zone and all diplomatic questions touching the treatment of vessels as to conditions or charges of traffic at the canal shall have been adjusted, then the President is authorized to issue an executive order declaring such suspension exemption of full force and effect. From the date of such executive order such exemption shall be allowed and enforced, but until such executive order shall have been issued the vessels engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States shall pay the same tolls required of other vessels."

SYNOPSIS.

Scarlett, an American soldier of fortune in the employ of the French Imperial Police at the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian war, is ordered to arrest John Buckhurst, a leader of the Communists and suspected of having stolen the French crown jewels. While searching for Buckhurst, Scarlett is ordered to arrest Countess de Vassart and her group of socialists and escort them to the Belgian border. Scarlett finds Sylvia Elven of the Odeon disguised as a peasant and carries her to La Trappe where the countess and her friends are assembled. All are arrested. The countess saves Scarlett from a fatal fall from the roof of the house. He denounces Buckhurst as the leader of the Reds and the countess conducts him to where Buckhurst is secreted. German Uhlans descend on the place and Buckhurst escapes during the melee. Scarlett is wounded. He recovers consciousness in the countess house at Morsbronn, where he is cared for by the countess. A fierce battle is fought in the streets between French and Prussian soldiers. Buckhurst professes repentence and returns the crown jewels to Scarlett. He declares he will give himself up to the authorities. Scarlett doubts his sincerity. Buckhurst urges the countess to go to Paradise. Buckhurst admits that he receives pay from the Prussians for information which he does not give. He secures passports to the French lines for Scarlett, the countess and himself. Scarlett reports to the secret service in Paris and finds Mornac, shadow of the emperor, in charge. He deposits the crown jewels and later, when making a detailed report, finds that pebbles have been substituted for the real stones. Speed, a comrade in the service, warns Scarlett that Mornac is dangerous. He also informs him that all the government treasure is being transported to the coast for shipment out of the country. Scarlett and Speed escape to join a circus. The circus arrives at Paradise. An order is received by the mayor calling the citizens to arms. Jacqueline, daughter of the Lizard, offers to join the circus to give exhibitions in the character of a mermaid. Scarlett makes friends with the Lizard. Scarlett calls on the countess at her home in Paradise. He finds Sylvia Elven also there. He learns the countess has withdrawn from the socialists. They swear eternal friendship. The Lizard learns for Scarlett, through one Tric-Trac, that Mornac is head of a communistic conspiracy. Scarlett learns something of Sylvia Elven through a fellow performer named Kelly. Orders regarding the treasure trains are changed, owing to the discovery of a plot at Lorient. Orders are received for the expulsion of the circus. Buckhurst appears in Paradise and secures recruits for the red flag. Scarlett admits he is in love with the countess. Scarlett is injured by the circus lions and taken to the home of the countess. Preparations for the wrecking of the expected treasure train are discovered by Scarlett. Scarlett discovers Sylvia Elven sending a message to the Prussians. He sends warning of the plot to wreck the train and asks that a warship be dispatched to the port at once.

CHAPTER XXI.

Like Her Ancestors.

I leaned in the embrasure of the southern window, gazing at my lighted lanterns, which dangled from the boards at Saint-Yseel. The soldier Rolland had so far kept his word—three red lamps glimmered through a driving mist; the white lanterns hung above, faintly shining.

Full in the firelight of the room sat the young countess, lost in reverie, hands clasping the gilt arms of her chair. At her feet dozed Ange Pitou.

"I am afraid a story I have to tell is not going to be very cheerful," I said, "and I am also afraid that I must ask you to listen to it."

She met my eyes with composure, leaned a little toward me, and waited.

And so, sitting there in the tinted glare, I told her of the death of Delmont and of Tavernier, and of Buckhurst's share in the miserable work.

"Madame, I am paining you," I said; "but I am going to cause you even greater unhappiness."

"Tell me what is necessary," she said, forming the words with tightened lips.

"Then I must tell you that it is necessary for Mademoiselle Elven to leave Trecaurt tonight."

"Why?"

"It is better that I do not tell you, madame."

"Tell me. It is my right to know."

"Not now; later, if you insist."

"This is dreadful," she muttered. . . . "If I did not know you, . . . if I did not trust you so perfectly, . . . trust you with all my heart! . . . Oh, are you certain she must go? It frightens me; it is so strange! I have grown fond of her. . . . And now you say that she must go. I cannot understand—I cannot."

"No, you cannot understand," I repeated, gently; "but she can. It is a serious matter for Mademoiselle Elven; it could not easily be more serious. It is even perhaps a question of life or death, madame."

"In heaven's name, help her, then!" she said, scarcely controlling the alarm that brought a pitiful break in her voice.

"I am trying to," I said. "And now I must consult Mademoiselle Elven. Will you help me?"

"What can I do?" she asked.

"Stand by that window. Look madame, can you see the lights on the semaphore?"

"Yes."

"Count them aloud."

She counted the white lights for me, then the red ones.

"Now," I said, "if those lights change in number or color or position, come instantly to me. I shall be with Mademoiselle Elven in the little tea-room."

I left her in the shadow of the curtains, and passed through the room to Sylvia's side. She looked up quietly from her embroidery frame, then, dropping the tinted silks and needles on the cloth, rose and walked beside me. When we entered the little tea-room she passed on to the lounge and seated herself on the padded arm.

"What is it?" she asked.

"I am sorry to tell you," I said—"sorry from my heart. You are not very friendly to me, and that makes it harder for me to say what I have to say."

"What do you mean?" she asked, guardedly.

"I mean that you cannot stay here," I said. "And you know why."

"Will you explain this insult?" she asked, hotly.

"Yes. You are a German spy," I said, under my breath. "French troops will land here tonight or tomorrow." I went on calmly. "You will see how dangerous your situation is certain to become when Buckhurst is taken, and when it is understood what use you have made of the semaphore."

She winced, then straightened and bent her steady gaze on me. Her courage was admirable.

"I thank you for telling me," she said, simply. "Have I a chance to reach the Spanish frontier?"

"I think you have," I replied. "Kelly Eyre is going with you when—"

"He? No, no, he must not! Does he know what I am? Did he offer to go?" she asked, incredulously.

"Mademoiselle, he insists."

Without turning her head she said: "Does he know that it may mean his death?"

"He has suffered worse for your sake!" I said, bitterly.

"What?" she flashed out, confronting me in an instant.

"You must know that," I said—"three years of hell—prison—utter ruin! Do you dare deny you have been ignorant of this?"

For a space she stood there, struck speechless; then, "Call him!" she cried. "Call him, I tell you! Bring him here—I want him here—here before us both!"

Eyre, passing the long stone corridor, looked up as I beckoned; and when he entered the tearoom, Sylvia, white as a ghost, met him face to face.

"Monsieur," she said, harshly, "why did you not come to that book store?"

He was silent. His face was answer enough—a terrible answer.

"Monsieur Eyre, speak to me! Is it true? Did they—did you not know that I made an error—that I did go on Monday at the same hour? They told me at the usine that you had gone away—I thought you had forgotten—that you did not care—"

"Care!" he groaned, and bowed his head, crushing her hands over his face.

Then she broke down, breathless with terror and grief.

"I was not a spy then—truly I was not, Kelly. There was no harm in me—I only—only asked for the sketches because—because—I cared for you. I have them now; no soul save myself has ever seen them."

She raised her head and fumbled in her corsage with shaking fingers, and drew from her bosom a packet of papers.

"Here are the sketches," she sobbed; "they have cost you dear! Now leave me—hate me! Let them come and take me—I do not want to live any more. Oh, what punishment on earth!"

Her suffering was unendurable to the man who had suffered through her; he turned on me, quivering in every limb.

"We must start," he said, hoarsely. "Give me your revolver."

I drew it from my hip pocket and passed it to him.

"Scarlett," he began, "if we don't reach—"

A quick rapping at the door silenced him; the young countess stood in the hallway, bright-eyed, but composed, asking for me.

"The red and white lights are gone," she said. "There are four green lights on the tower and four blue lights on the halyards."

I turned to Eyre. "This is interesting," I said, grimly. "I set signals for the Fer-de-Lance to land in force. Somebody has changed them. You had better get ready to go."

Sylvia had shrunk away from Eyre. The countess looked at her blankly, then at me.

"Madame," I said, "there is little enough of happiness in the world—so little that when it comes it should be welcomed, even by those who may not share in it."

And I bent nearer and whispered the truth.

"Sylvia!" murmured the young countess, incredulously. "A spy! And she brings this—this shame on me!"

Sylvia turned, standing unsteadily. For a long time they looked at each other in silence, their eyes wet with tears. Then Eyre lifted Sylvia's hand and kissed it, and led her away, closing the door behind.

The countess still stood in the center of the room, transfixed, rigid, staring through her tears at the closed door. With a deep drawn breath she straightened her shoulders; her head drooped; she covered her face with clasped hands.

"What have I done?" she cried, brokenly—"what have I done that this shame should come upon me?"

"You have done nothing," I said, "neither for good nor evil in this crisis. But Sylvia has; Sylvia the spy. That a man should give up his life for a friend is good, that a woman offers hers for her country is better. She has done her duty; the sacrifice is still burning; I pray it may spare her and spare him."

The countess looked at me scornfully. "I think that we are not fitted to understand each other."

"It remains," I said, "for me to thank you for your kindness to us all, and for your generosity to me in my time of need. . . . It is quite useless for me to dream of repaying it. . . . I shall never forget it. . . . I ask leave to make my adieux, madame."

She flushed to her temples, but did not answer.

As I stood looking at her, a vivid flare of light flashed through the window behind me, crimsoning the walls, playing over the ceiling with an infernal radiance. At the same instant the gate outside crashed open, a hubbub of voices swelled into a roar; then the outer doors were flung back and a score of men sprang into the hallway, soldiers with the red torch-light dancing on rifle barrels and bayonets.

And before them, revolver swinging in his slender hand, strode Buckhurst, a red sash tied across his breast, his colorless eyes like diamonds.

Speed and Jacqueline came hurrying through the hall to where I stood; Buckhurst's smile was awful as his eyes flashed from Speed to me.

Behind him, close to his shoulder, the torch-light fell on Mornac's smooth, false face, stretched now into a ferocious grimace; behind him crowded the soldiers of the commune, rifles slung, craning their unshaven faces to catch a glimpse of us.

He Reloaded His Revolver.

"Buckhurst," I said, "what the devil do you mean by this foolery?" and I started for him, shouldering my way among his grotesque escort.

For an instant I looked into his deadly eyes; then he silently motioned me back; a dozen bayonets were leveled, forcing me to retire, inch by inch.

The Countess de Vassart was already in the hall, facing Buckhurst with perfect composure.

He turned and addressed us, suavely, bowing with a horrid, mock deference to the countess:

"In the name of the commune! The ci-devant Countess de Vassart is accused of sheltering the individual Scarlett, late inspector of imperial police; the individual Speed, ex-inspector of imperial gendarmes; the individual Eyre, under general suspicion; the woman called Sylvia Elven, a German spy. As war delegate of the commune, I am here to accuse!

"I accuse the woman Sylvia Elven of communication with Prussian agents; of attempted corruption of soldiers under my command. I accuse the citoyenne Eline Trecourt, lately known as the Countess de Vassart, of aiding, encouraging and abetting these enemies of France!"

He waited until the short, fierce yell of approval had died away. Then:

"Call the soldier Rolland!" he said.

My heart began to hammer in my throat. "I believe it's going hard with us," I muttered to Speed.

"Listen," he motioned.

I listened to the wretched creature Rolland while he told what had happened at the semaphore.

"You say he bribed you?" asked Buckhurst, gently.

"Yes; I've said it twenty times, haven't I?"

"And you took the bribes?"

The wretch laughed outright.

"And you believe that you deserve well of the commune?" smiled Buckhurst.

The soldier grinned and opened his mouth to answer, and Buckhurst shot him through the face; and, as he fell, shot him again, standing wreathed in the smoke of his own weapons.

"I think," said Buckhurst, in a pleasantly persuasive voice, "that there will be no more bribery in this battalion." He deliberately opened the smoking weapon; the spent shells dropped one by one from the cylinder, clinking on the stone floor.

"No—no more bribery," he mused, touching the dead man with the carefully polished toe of his shoe. "Because," he added, reloading his revolver, "I do not like it."

He turned quietly to Mornac and ordered the corpse to be buried, and Mornac, plainly unnerved at the murderous act of his superior, repeated the order, cursing his men to cover the quaver in his voice.

"As for you," observed Buckhurst, glancing up at us where we stood speechless together, "you will be judged and sentenced when this drumhead court decides. Go into that room!"

The countess did not move.

Speed touched her arm; she looked up quietly, smiled, and stepped across the threshold. Speed followed; Jacqueline slipped in beside him, and then I turned on Buckhurst, who had just ordered his soldiers to surround the house outside.

He motioned toward the door with leveled weapon. I turned and entered the tearoom, and he locked the door from the outside.

The countess, seated on the sofa, looked up as I appeared. She was terribly pale, but she smiled as my heavy eyes met hers.

"Is it to be farce or tragedy, monsieur?" she asked, without a tremor in her clear voice.

I could not have uttered a word to save my life. Speed, pacing the room, turned to read my face; and I think he read it, for he stopped short in his tracks.

"Do they mean to shoot us?" he asked, bluntly.

"Messieurs," said the countess, with a faint smile, "your whispers are no compliment to my race. Pray honor me by plain speaking. Are we to die?"

We stood absolutely speechless before her.

"Ah, Monsieur Scarlett," she said, gravely, "do you also fall me . . . at the end? . . . You, too—even you? . . . Must I tell you that we of Trecourt fear nothing in this world?"

"Are we to die?" she asked.

"Yes, madame."

"Thank you," she said, softly. "Why do you look at me so sadly, Monsieur Scarlett? Truly, you must know that my life has been long enough to prove its uselessness. I had rather die with you than live without the friendship which I believe—which I know—is mine. You see I have nothing to regret in a death that brings me to you again. . . . Do you regret life?"

"Not now," I said.

"You are kind to say so. I believe—yes, I know that you truly care for me. . . . Do you?"

"Yes."

"Then it will not be hard. . . . Perhaps not even very painful."

The key turning in the door startled us. Buckhurst entered, and through the hallway I saw his dishevelled soldiers running, flinging open doors, tearing, trampling, pillaging, wrecking everything in their path.

"Your business will be attended to in the garden at dawn," he observed, blinking about the room, for the bright lamp light dazzled him.

The countess did not even glance up as the sentence was pronounced; she looked at me and laid her left hand on mine, smiling, as though waiting for the moment to resume an interrupted conversation.

He went away, slamming and locking the door; and I heard Mornac complaining that the signals had gone out on the semaphore and that there was more threachery abroad.

HER PREMONITION OF DEATH

Circumstances That Led Prominent Woman to Live Ever In Fear of Impending Disaster.

A most touching account of the premonition of coming trouble which she experienced before the tragic drowning of her children at Paris, was given by Isadora Duncan, the dancer, whose poetic interpretations charmed the people of two continents.

Two months before the unhappy accident, the bereaved woman was continuously haunted with visions of death. Consulting her physician, she was assured that she was "suffering from nerves." When playing in Russia shortly afterward, so strong was her conviction, one night, that her own death was imminent, that she left a letter containing her "last words" on her dressing table, before going onto the stage. Again one night on the train she seemed to hear Chopin's Funeral March all night long. At the same time she seemed to see a vision which produced so vivid an impression that on the stage next evening, entirely without rehearsal, she reproduced it in motion, reducing her audience to tears. "All through my performance," Miss Duncan says: "I felt as though I were marching to my grave through an icy wind, and afterward with a melody of resurrection, a sort of ecstacy that was not earthly."

The very day of the terrible accident, the mother had packed her little ones, who had accompanied her with their nurse to Paris, for a little outing, where their lodgings were, as she was to remain in Paris for the rest of the day; and in saying good-bye she playfully kissed the lips of one of her children through the glass. Contact with the cold pane struck a chill to the mother's heart and a strange foreboding overcame her as the motor whizzed out of sight. A few minutes later the children were hurled from the overturned car into the Seine.

Why No Smoke in Caesar?

Sweet lavender is now on the market and on the side-table, and the smell of it is clean, sweet, and delicious. But did you ever smoke it? This business of the tobacco trust worries the smoker who may have to pay more for his pipeful. And then comes the glad news that we are growing tobacco—and even cigar coverings—in England. In order to beat Sumatra at her own game. And also comes a Madrid professor, inquiring what the ancient Romans smoked.

Fine old pipes have been dug up in Spain from Roman settlements, but they have no trace of tobacco or opium. Yet they are adorned with bas reliefs picturing the lavender plant. And in 1276—before tobacco came to Europe—a Spanish writer said that "whoever smokes lavender feels active, ardent, and vigorous." But why is it that smoking never crept into Roman literature?

"Out at our country estate"

"Why, I thought you lived in a city boarding house?"

"I do, but we have an old hen of a landlady; her husband is a hog, and the star boarderess is a cat; her son is hounding us all the time for a penny; one of the boarders is mulish, another has a horse-laugh; even I seem to be a lion among the women there. And as for the rest of it, one of her daughters is a pippin, another a peach; their aunt is a lemon; there's a regular pumpkin-head there and a—." But the inquirer had fled.

Dinner Gown in Brocade and Chiffon.

THREE views of a handsome dinner or reception gown are made possible by the clever triplicate minor arrangement, in front of which it was posed. The straight skirt, with a demi-train, is made of crepe having raised velvet roses and foliage scattered over the surface. The roses are very large and in a slightly darker shade than the crepe.

The chiffon overdress and bodice repeat the color in the crepe. The under bodice is of thin silk in a light color. There is a beaded girdle, narrow, and edged with the narrowest border of fur. This tiny edge of dark fur appears again on a small piece of drapery made of the brocade, which is posed on the bodice, extending from under the arms at the belt to the beginning of the bust.

The neck of the bodice is slightly pointed at the back, but is cut square in front. It is shirred over the foundation and is very simple. The short, full sleeves are set in and edged with a narrow band of the brocade. A butterfly bow of ribbon is posed at the front finished with silk pendents.

There is a frill of boxplaited maline about the neck of the bodice which does not extend across the front. Under this is a lace edging which lies flat to the neck all round and is very attractive and becoming.
